The administration recommended $500 million, and the subcommittee headed by Mr. LEAHY conducted hearings on the administration's request. Mr. Eagleburger came before that subcommittee as did Mr. Robson. Mr. Robson is the Deputy Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. John E. Robson came before the subcommittee, and Mr. Lawrence S. Eagleburger, Deputy Secretary of State. They both appeared in support of the administration's $500 million request.

Based on the hearings it was the subcommittee chairman's view, I believe, that there were certain of those requests that were made by the administration that were probably justified. They would have some short-term relationship to a jump start of the Panamanian economy.

So in an attempt to be reasonable, realizing that we have some responsibility to Panama—it may be a moving target. It is hard for one to draw a line and say there it is, it should be here, or it should be a little farther beyond—the subcommittee was of the opinion that the following items could be justified. I believe the Senator may have read them, or at least a number of them, or at least a number of them: $45 million for construction, $50 million for manufacturing, $35 million for commerce, $25 million for agriculture credits and inputs, $35 million for health sanitation, $20 million for agriculture infrastructure, $20 million for electric grid, $45 million for basic transportation communications, $20 million for administration of justice, $10 million for environmental protection.

I believe that adds up to $300 million. So it was on the basis of those figures that came out in the testimony that was either orally presented or submitted in writing by these administration witnesses that the $300 million figure was arrived at.

I could vote for zero. I would have no compunction supporting an amendment that wiped it all out. But I am trying to be responsible. I am trying to recognize that we need to do some things to help Panama. What are the "some things"?—those things which in the course of the subcommittee's hearings were indicated as being justified. That is how we arrived at the $300 million figure.

Mr. SPECTER. I would ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia if he thinks it is more important to put $20 million into agriculture, which he recites as part of the figure, as opposed to the $17 million which he has allocated for agriculture in his amendment. I ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia if it is preferable to put $10 million into environmental protection for Panama, as opposed to putting in the money for environmental restoration, which the Senator from West Virginia spoke so eloquently about as being necessary.

Mr. BYRD. I answer the Senator by asking a question: Is he supporting a zero figure for Panama? If he wishes to offer an amendment to cut the $300 million to zero, I would be happy to oblige him. I am not out here carrying the foreign operations appropriations flag, by any means.

I am trying to be reasonable and offer something here that I think would hopefully get a majority of the votes in the Senate and start a national debate on our priorities and cause the Senate to put on its brakes and take a look at what we are doing here and begin to debate and establish our priorities.

My priority is the United States first, over Panama, or anybody else, any other country; name any country the Senator wishes. So I put the United States first, last, and all the time. As Daniel Webster said in his oration at the laying of the cornerstone of the Bunker Hill Monument in 1825, I believe, "Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country."

Mr. SPECTER. I would be glad to respond to the question the distinguished Senator from West Virginia put to me. I would answer it in the language of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, and that figure is zero. When the Senator talks about being sent by West Virginia, I was sent by Pennsylvania.

As our distinguished colleague who joined us from the House of Representatives, Congressman MURPHY and in Johnstown and Beaver Falls and Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, when these issues are brought before the American people, foreign aid is zero compared to an appropriation for the United States.

That is why I say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that when you put these figures up side-by-side, the figure comes out to be zero. When you are looking for 51 votes, you can get 51 votes if you make the whole foreign aid bill zero. You do not have to allocate any money for Panama and there is no logic in allocating 45——

Mr. BYRD. I want to be sure what I thought the Senator said. Is the Senator suggesting that this amendment made aid to Panama zero, that I need 51 votes in this Senate?

Mr. SPECTER. I am suggesting you get 91 votes. I am suggesting that in light of the persuasive speech which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has made about America first, and placing the issue in terms of what cynicism lies outside of the Beltway, to use the words of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, "They would say enough now, if they were fully attuned; The American people would say zero."

If you put an amendment on this floor which puts any item of aid for any foreign country besides the very important items like education; environment; AIDS; women, infants and children, then you would get many more than 51 votes. The only way these measures are passed is when we discuss them in committee and we discuss them on the floor, and it is really agreed to, without the political issue raised of comparing foreign aid to aid for the United States.

So that, in conclusion, I am saying that the logic of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia is not from $420 million to $300 million. It is from $420 million to zero, and that the logic is on our whole foreign aid package, from $16 billion to zero.

I made a trip to Panama recently and said during the discussion by the Appropriations Committee what I found. President Endara was hit on the head with a lead pipe and had many stitches in his head. Vice President Ford was pulled out from his car with a metal bar which ripped into his tendons an then was cracked across the head requiring 22 stitches, and 9 across his face. So that I voted for the $420 million in committee because it seemed appropriate to me. And we have delayed too long in approving $300 million for Nicaragua.

I am concerned that President Chamorro is keeping Humberto Ortega as head of the army because of the vacillation and the failure of this Congress to act.

I visited with her on Friday, April 6, and I raised the question, because it was then in doubt as to whether Humberto Ortega would stay in command of the army. She did not respond to me, and immediately after I departed, the President-elect of Costa Rica walked in, and she had a press briefing and said that Humberto Ortega was out as head of the army.

I do not know if I had any influence on that or not, but I was pleased it happened. And yesterday, she changed her mind and put Humberto Ortega in as head of the army. I think she looked toward the United States for weeks waiting for help to come and when she was inaugurated, former President Daniel Ortega chastized the United States.

I have not seen the text of the speech, but I am reasonably sure he said you cannot rely on the United States. They talk about money, but nothing has been forthcoming. She made arrangements as best she could. I am concerned with Ortega remaining head of the army, that we will have the Sandinista weapons going to El Salvador, and we will have traded one Central American war for another. That is the concern that this Senator has.

But I must say that the arguments made by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia are very powerful. They are politically overwhelming, and I make another statement that he would get 91 votes on zero.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator for his fine contribution here. I think what I started out to do, and I see myself beginning to succeed now, and that is that we are beginning to debate priorities. That is what we need to do. I think we need to hear from the American people. They need to know more about what we are doing here and what we are doing about our priorities.

The Senator put his finger right on the point. They would vote zero. But it is up to us to try to reach some reasonable conclusion and try to advance a reasonable approach to what we see as a priority. I do not particularly see right now that Panama should be zero, but if any Senator should want to offer an amendment to make it zero and put the moneys all in domestic needs—I am talking about prioritizing now.

Let us put down the needs for Panama as against our own domestic needs. I will vote every time for our domestic needs first.

The reason I mentioned Beaver Falls, I have a half-sister living in Beaver Falls.

I hope that from what I have heard from the Senator now that he is 40 percent of the way, if not 100 percent of the way, toward voting for this amendment.

Mr SPECTER. I am not 100 percent of the way. I am 362 percent of the way. I go beyond 300 million. Almost to zero.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his comments. I think they would have been very helpful.

I have been asked to yield by the ranking member, and I yield to him.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the chairman of the committee for yielding a few moments to me to make an observation.

Mr. President, I have been here a number of years and I think that every foreign aid bill that came to the floor was one that was hotly contested and debated. There was a great deal of truth to what both the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Pennsylvania have indicated about the public's attitude toward foreign aid.

I would like to just make one broad comment and one specific one. The broad comment is simply foreign aid has to be further delineated between foreign military aid and foreign humanitarian economic aid. I have never been able to delineate or separate these entirely, but I have never consciously voted for a dollar or a dime for foreign military aid.

I do not consider that America should be anything but ashamed of the fact that it and the Soviet Union alternate year after year as the No. 1 arms peddler in the world, peddling arms into Third World countries like Panama and South America that cannot even feed their own people. If they cannot buy them, we give them. To me that is one of the very black chapters of American history, using taxpayers' money to fuel the arms appetites and infect other nations of the world with the kind of lust we have for military arms.

There is the other kind of foreign aid that is the foreign economic and humanitarian aid. Lest we think that we are somehow very generous people, only moving by our generosity, even in foreign economic aid, let us bear in mind that in many instances it is an indirect subsidy to American business. Much of our foreign aid comes right back into the American enterprise of selling materials, and rightfully so. But I do not think we ought to sort of feel that we are being so overly generous by giving foreign aid as if it had no quid pro quo. We get a lot of that back as a subsidy to our American business.

So I do not think we are moving from total generosity, although I recognize that great characteristic in the American people as a whole, probably far more in the American people than in the Government policies.

Let us recap for just a moment the history of Panama in recent years.

First, overall there was an attempted coup of the Noriega regime and I can recall very well an enthusiastic bipartisan criticism of President Bush for not seizing that opportunity to further the activity that might oust Noriega.

Just bear in mind that was bipartisan, bipartisan, eloquent speeches given on both sides of the aisle, how the President of the United States did not seize this opportunity to get rid of Noriega.

Let us also remember on October 5, 1989, this Senate passed a resolution; it passed 99 to 1; good, solid bipartisan support; every Democrat voted for it, and every Republican but one voted for it. What it was was an invitation which he calls a second Gulf of Tonkin resolution, an invitation for the President to use all diplomatic, economic, political, and military power to replace the Noriega regime in direct contradiction to our treaty with the Association of American States to not intervene, no matter what, into another country political.

I was a "no" because I did not believe it was right then and I do not believe it is right today. Not that I supported Noriega, had any empathy for Noriega, but to me we were violating the treaty we made with our sister Latin American countries. Even our friends in Latin America criticized that invasion.

Let me remind ourselves today the major casualties of that invasion were civilians, not military, and let me tell you a loss of life is a tragedy whether it is an enemy life or our life, a civilian life or military life, but we lost the majority in that operation, that military invasion which I criticized at the time as being wrong; objectives noble, purpose noble, but the method wrong. Let us not forget that linkage between methods and goals. Nevertheless, what this money is for today is to repair the damage of what I considered the wrong policy but still the policy of my Government to repair the damage created by that military operation and invasion of Panama.

Let us remember this: what may be timber to my economy can be very easily tourism to the Panamanian economy. I am not here to judge, other than the fact that we need to rebuild schools; we need to rebuild homes; we need to rebuild the economic structure of that country because that invasion either caused or exacerbated an already existing situation of the economic life of not only Panama, but look at any Latin America country today. I think it is one thing to hand food, clothing, shelter, to repair that damage, and another thing to look at the long term to help them restore a stable economy in order to allow them to provide for their own future needs.

I support the full funding of this. I think it is our obligation under a very unique circumstance and collection of circumstances that we either caused or exacerbated. Therefore, we owe them. This is a bill that is due. I believe we ought to pay that bill.

Again, let me emphasize the point that there are short-term and long-term scaling down that national debt. It is very vital to the long-term stability, political economic stability of Panama, and we have, after all, still a great dependence on the Panama Canal, so we have another economic interest in Panama that is unique to foreign aid in general.

I also recognize that we have a problem of debt here in this country. There is no one that is more conscious of that, and that is why I voted against every military authorization and every military appropriation bill over the last 20 years, because we have been misappropriating moneys to help create greater debt in this country where we should be investing the moneys to reproduce and multiply the economy to offset the debt and reduce the debt. That is my own peculiar economic perspective.

I do not think we can stand up here on this floor and vote for all the military spending we voted for in the last 20 years and then find some reason to criticize the debt, because we have been part of it. That debt has not been created by the President alone in this country. It has been created by wrong policies that the President and the Congress have joined in supporting, passing, and establishing.

We cannot visit all the sins of our fathers, and yet at the same time I think we all bear plenty of responsibility and blame. There is enough blame to go around on all this as far as the debt is concerned.

I still feel we have a special unique obligation to the Panamanian people at this time in history. We ought to have the full funding of the President request.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has been here for a long time. I wonder if I might have 1½ minutes to respond to what I think was a very wrong impression in this legislation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield such time as he may require, not to exceed 5 minutes, to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I will not take that much.

I want to note, Mr. President, there has been a suggestion made on the floor that it is possible that President Chamorro of Nicaragua has appointed Humberto Ortega or reappointed him as head of the military because of a delay in the foreign aid bill. This is a remarkable conclusion for anybody to reach, and I would only assume that somebody stating that does it somewhat with tongue in cheek.

The fact is there has been a great deal of criticism, at least privately, by key members of the Bush adminstration of that appointment. A number of them are very concerned about it, and were taken somewhat by surprise on it and feel that it does not reflect the assurances they have been making here.

Having said all that, I hope we are not now going to try to put their surprise or the blame now on to the Congress. Mrs. Chamorro knew full well $300 million is coming; it will be there fairly rapidly. The $300 million was supported by the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. It was supported by the chairman of the subcommittee and by the full Appropriations Committee.

I know of nobody who is seeking to cut back that $300 million to Nicaragua. The House has put it in, and Mrs. Chamorro told me when she talked with me on the phone in the past few days that she knew it was coming and expected it was coming. She also told that to several others.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. So let us not suggest, as my good friend has, that somehow we are the reason Ortega got appointed head of the military.

Maybe that is a good idea; maybe that is a bad idea. That is not what I am here to debate. But I do not think it had one tiny bit to do with this debate, and it would be fanciful to suggest otherwise.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEAHY. I do not have the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor to the Senator from Pennsylvania for the purpose of his asking a question without my losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. My question would be in two parts, since it is one question. I direct it to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Question No. 1: Does the Senator know why Mrs. Chamorro, who had stated publicly that she would not keep Humberto Ortega as commander of the army, changed her mind?

And the second part of the question, Does the Senator personally know that none of the 100 Senators in this body will offer an amendment to reduce or eliminate the $300 million to Nicaragua?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, If I might, I have been watching some of the zigs and zags down there in Nicaragua, and finding people in both the UNO party and the FSLN who will say something one day and do something the next day, I am not even going to suggest the motivations for that. It happens far too often down there for anybody to try to follow it without a road map.

But I will lay very heavy—I guess probably we should not bet on legislation. I am willing to state unequivocally that $300 million for Nicaragua will pass. If the Senator from Pennsylvania or others want to say it will not, that is their judgment. My judgment is, it will pass.

If his judgment is it will not pass, he is free to make that judgment. But we will certainly know at some point when the legislation ends who was right, he or I. I suspect I will be right.

Mr. SPECTER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor, and I shall not perpetuate the debate. But I look forward later today to discussing this further with the distinguished Senator from Vermont when there is an opportunity to obtain the floor.

I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I yield to my colleague and chief cosponsor of the amendment, Mr. JOHNSTON, for such time as he may require to make a statement, and I ask unanimous consent that I may do so without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague and cosponsor of this amendment.

This amendment deals with $120 million. The question this amendment poses is, Should this $120 million be used for nonpriority needs in Panama or should it be used for emergency needs here in the United States? It is just that simple. It is just that clear-cut.

Mr. President, when I say these needs in Panama are not emergency needs, I think that is very clearly provable.

There is a $420 million total in this bill. What our amendment does is take $120 million of that, which is not for priority needs, which is not for emergency needs, and direct that to the United States for emergency needs, leaving $300 million to go to Panama for what the sponsors of that amendment think are priority needs in Panama.

Why do I say, Mr. President, that this $120 million is not for priority needs in Panama? It is obvious upon the very face of the purposes stated for this $120 million, which would go to Panama, that it is not for priority needs; $130 million is to clear arrearages with multilateral banks owed by Panama.

Mr. President, these arrearages to multilateral banks, this money owed by Panama to multilateral banks, was owed before Operation Just Cause. Operation Just Cause did not have anything to do with that money owed by Panama to multilateral banks. And, according to the administration itself, if they got this money it would take months to clear it out anyway.

So, why in the name of the United States Senate is it important in an emergency piece of legislation to come in and direct this money from the United States to Panama when it could not be paid off for many months, it is not caused by Operation Just Cause, and in no way is a priority need? Why, Mr. President? There is no reason for it.

Mr. President, there is another $30 million here that is directed to Panama for the development of tourism potential; tourism potential.

I hope Panama has a good tourism potential, and I suppose sooner or later we will consider very sympathetically that request for developing tourism potential. But an emergency need, Mr. President, an emergency need to develop tourism potential in Panama? That is absurd upon the very face of it, Mr. President.

And so on down the line: $20 million for constructing schools. There is not a cent even in our amendment for constructing schools in the United States, and I can tell my colleagues that there are schools that need constructing in my State of Louisiana. They are not being funded. I am sure there are schools in West Virginia that need constructing. It is not an emergency to construct schools in Panama.

Mr. President, I think I am familiar with Operation Just Cause. I do not believe there were schools that were attacked by our soldiers. Schools were not destroyed there, and it is not an emergency need.

Four million dollars for scholarships. Mr. President, scholarships are a great thing, but we are cutting back in this country on Pell grants, on all kinds of student aid grants, while we say we have to have $4 million emergency aid for scholarships to Panama. It does not support the country. It does not hold it together. It is just $4 million for scholarships. No emergency is involved, Mr. President.

There are a couple of other items here that are hard to determine. The development of nontraditional exports, whatever that is; in other words, exports that they have not had that they want to develop. We do not know what those are. It is probably a good idea. We hope it is a good idea, but they have never had it so therefore it cannot be an emergency and it certainly was not caused by Operation Just Cause.

There is $6 million for technical assistance. I guess that is consultants. Maybe that is important, but it clearly is not an emergency.

Mr. President, if we compare that to the uses to which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and I, in our amendment, put this $120 million, then it is like night and day.

For example, we have $200 million, the biggest item here in budget authority, for DOE environmental restoration and waste management activities. Mr. President, if there is an emergency in the United States this is it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if I may on that point, the Senator was speaking about the need for scholarships in Panama as being a dire emergency?

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is apparently what the administration says, because there is $4 million, as I understand it, for scholarships out of this $420 million.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Yes. Does the Senator know about the statement by Mr. Lawrence S. Eagleburger, Deputy Secretary of State, before the Foreign Operations Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee on March 20 of this year, in which he said with reference to Panama, "It has a high adult literacy rate." Not illiteracy, a literacy rate. "It has a high adult literacy rate, approximately 87 percent."

With that kind of a literacy rate, how does that compare with our own in this country? We do not have 87 percent in this country?

(Mr. BREAUX assumed the chair.)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I suspect we do not. And we are cutting back in this very budget—I mean the President's budget now pending before the Congress—on Pell grants, on student aid, right at a time when we are trying to get money for education in this country. We are cutting that back so we can send money to Panama for scholarships.

It may or may not be a good thing to do, but an emergency? There is no emergency to it, Mr. President.

That is enough. That can wait. I can say, Mr. President, what, in my judgment cannot wait is this nuclear waste cleanup.

There is a Hanford compliance agreement which was confected last year with respect to the cleanup of our nuclear reservation at Hanford. As most of my colleagues know—I think all of my colleagues know—Hanford was one of the first nuclear facilities commissioned during World War II. Of course, it was wartime in those days, and it was the war effort. They were not so careful about the environment. They were not so careful about rules and regulations and OSHA and EPA, which did not even exist in those days.

Mr. President, they created a grand and glorious mess. That problem needs attention now. There are 150 leaking tanks, I am advised, at Hanford, involving radioactive waste. They need to stabilize the liquid in those tanks because the real danger is not only the leaks, but there is a chemical reaction which is generating a hydrogen-based gas which offers some danger of explosion.

I do not mean to alarm people and say we are getting ready to have an explosion there, as they had in the Soviet Union at the town of Kyshtym in the 1950's. My colleague, Senator BYRD, will recall that in Kyshtym in the Soviet Union, in the 1950's—we did not know it in the 1950's, but we have found it out since—there was, in fact, an explosion involving nuclear waste where a sufficient amount of it was stored in some trenches and it developed a critical mass. There was a big explosion, and a large area in the Soviet Union was rendered uninhabitable.

I do not mean to say there is any imminent danger at Hanford. But I do mean to say there are 150 leaking tanks, that they are developing hydrogen gas, that the danger from hydrogen gas is an explosion.

So, Mr. President, I say this is a considerably higher priority, to clean up Hanford, than it is to give scholarships and to develop tourism in Panama.

We have a problem in Rocky Flats, which is another one of our tremendous nuclear facilities. There you have a problem with some 62 pounds of plutonium which is deposited in the ducts of that plant. It needs immediate attention. But probably an even higher problem in Rocky Flats is the nonradioactive wastes that threaten the water table. Once it gets into the water supply, the water supply is poisoned. These are volatile organic compounds. They are tremendously dangerous.

To quote the testimony of the GAO, the Comptroller General himself, he has stated with respect to this nuclear problem:

> DOE's nuclear weapons complex, considered in its entirety, is one of the most potentially dangerous industrial operations in the world.

Let me repeat that, Mr. President, because I think it underlines the kind of priority we are talking about. This is Mr. Bowsher, the Comptroller General of the United States:

> DOE's nuclear weapons complex, considered in its entirety, is one of the most potentially dangerous industrial operations in the world.

He goes on to say:

> Some of the buildings and equipment have deteriorated to the point where they now have safety and operational problems.

He further says:

> Ground water and soil contamination at DOE installations around the country is at levels hundreds to thousands of times above standards. At some locations, such as the Y-12 plant in Tennessee, environmental contamination has spread off site.

Mr. President, I do not mean to try to alarm people in the environs of these plants, but I do mean to say that when we have one of the most potentially difficult industrial problems in the entire world, when we have volatile organic compounds which are creeping toward the water supply, when we have uranium dust at Frenald, as to which they have already had big court judgments that would compensate people for cancer phobia and for diminution of property values and other big lawsuits pending, and the uranium dust problem not fully solved, when you have all of these problems not fully solved, Mr. President, I say that to put $200 million on environmental restoration and protection is considerably higher in terms of a priority than scholarships in Panama, than tourism in Panama, than arrearages to the banks which have existed for many, many months which were not caused by Operation Just Cause and which, in any event, even if we gave them the money, would take months to clear out.

Mr. President, I look at the agriculture emergency conservation program as to which we have committed $8 million. About the same amount, a little bit more than the existing amendment would permit to scholarships, would provide funding for disaster programs for farmers in 21 States. Disaster programs are, by their very nature, emergency programs.

This is a modest amount in the Byrd-Johnston amendment which we put to emergency conservation programs. It is a very high priority for Americans right here who pay the taxes that support this and is a considerably higher priority than the $120 million usage which was contained in the bill.

Mr. President, we commit $12.3 million to special supplemental food programs, the so-called WIC Program. If there is a high priority in this country, that is it. A study by Harvard shows that for every $1 spent on the WIC Program, we save $3 in later health costs. The WIC Program, of course, goes to pregnant women, and women and children right after birth in those key, critical times in their lives when their health is most fragile, when their health can be most affected by nutrition and help from the Government. That is what the WIC Program has been.

So the hardest conservative in this whole body, if he has read this study, would look at the WIC Program and say we should fund that, not because we are bleeding hearts, not because we are big liberals, as far as Government spending is concerned, but because for every buck we put in the WIC Program, the Government saves $3 in later health care costs.

That is what the study shows. Yet, Mr. President, at present only about 60 percent of those eligible nationally are served. In my State, which is one of the poorest States, one of the States most in need of WIC, only about 51 percent of the pregnant women and those newborn babies are served by the WIC Program.

Now this money is not enough to solve the whole WIC problem and make everyone eligible, but it would increase the eligibility, Mr. President. It would grant another $12.3 million in budget authority to the WIC Program. And I can tell you it is going to serve people who are just as deserving as those Panamanians who would be served by the $120 million. And they are Americans.

Mr. President, we have to take a harder look at foreign aid, I believe.

The American people have looked at foreign aid, and I can tell you how they feel in my State. They have had enough of foreign aid. Now maybe we should not eliminate foreign aid. The Senator from Pennsylvania says why not eliminate it. Maybe that is an argument for another day. But for this day, the Byrd-Johnston amendment says we have $120 million that we need right now to address emergency needs of Americans rather than funding scholarships and tourism programs and all of these grand and glorious things down in Panama.

Mr. President, we have a program now that is funded that helps farmers. It is an authorized bill right now to help farmers in disasters, but it has not been funded. We have in this amendment some $13 million to fund that program. Now, that helps farmers in Louisiana, in my home State.

Do you want to know in what shape the sugar farmers are, Mr. President? We had the toughest freeze of the century this past year. New Orleans has a tropical climate. They let kids out of school if you have snowflakes down there. We had Lake Pontchartrain frozen and frozen hard. We had snow and ice all over southern Louisiana. The marsh was frozen solid. It was the most incredible thing Louisiana natives have ever seen.

As an aside, I can tell you I went duck hunting and the whole marsh was frozen. The ducks would come in to land and not be able to hit the water as they usually do. They would hit the ice and just slide. When we would shoot a duck and the dog would go after it, the dog would be on top of the ice sliding around and breaking through.

That may be kind of funny if you are duck hunting, but if you are a sugar farmer it spells disaster, because our sugar farmers in Louisiana have had between 60 percent and 100 percent of their crop destroyed.

The unusual thing is that, in effect, it killed not only the sugar crop but the seed for next year's crop because when you cut the cane, the stubble comes up the next year. This frost killed the stubble. In effect, it killed the crop. These farmers will have no income for this year and no money to plant the new crop. And if they do not get the money by August, not only will they have lost last year because of the freeze but they will lose next year because they cannot afford to plant the crop.

We have had meeting after meeting on this subject in my office and elsewhere among our delegation and with farmers in Louisiana. This is really the last train from the station. If we do not get this, Mr. President, we feel that our sugar farmers are out of business. I cannot tell you how serious it is in my State.

When I compare that small part of this amendment with arrearages to multilateral banks not caused by the invasion, I can tell you, Mr. President, this is a higher priority. This is an emergency. This needs attention today from the Senate. There are Americans hurting by a disaster, the dimensions of which have not been seen this century in my State. And there are other disaster payments for other States here. But I know about this in my State, and it is simply a higher priority.

It is time for this Senate to get its priorities straight about foreign aid. Foreign aid is a little bit like political money. Sometimes people spend political money as if it is monopoly money. I do not know whether the Senator from West Virginia has had that experience in 30 years in politics, maybe more than 30 years, but people raise political money and some people in the organization want to just go out and spend it as if there was no tomorrow—order up more stickers and more signs.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is talking about consultants now, is he not?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Consultants and all the rest. They have a great idea about money. I think sometimes the Congress tends to be that way about foreign aid. I know the White House tends to be that way about foreign aid. It is wonderful to be a President, or to be the Secretary of State, or to be the Under Secretary, whatever, and promise all this money. You are a wonderful person, you are generous, you are helping starving people, hungry people, needy people, wanting people.

Everybody has wants, Mr. President. I do not mean to make light of the wants of the people in Panama. If our amendment is passed, we will give them $300 million, not all of which is a high emergency. But I tell you this $120 million has nothing to do with an emergency. It has nothing at all to do with an emergency. In fact, it is a little bit hard to say that in the regular bill, which will come along later in the year, you can justify this $120 million. But at that time, Mr. President, we will have a chance to have hearings. We will bring in the witnesses and we will ask the people from the State Department just why is it they want to spend $4 million on scholarships down in Panama, when we are cutting our educational needs of our own people. And they may have a very good answer and it may be persuasive to us. I may well vote for it after they make their case.

They certainly have not made their case now. They have not uttered the word "emergency" with respect to scholarships or construction of schools or $30 million to develop tourism potential. Is that supposed to be an emergency that ranks with farmers who have lost between 60 and 100 percent of their crops in our country, good, hard-working, tax-paying Americans?

Mr. President, charity begins at home. It begins at home, particularly when it is an emergency. This country has always passed muster when it comes to emergencies. When we had Hurricane Hugo, we helped the people. We did not finish the job because part of this money for emergencies is to help after Hurricane Hugo and part of it is to help after the earthquake in San Francisco. Part of it is to help farmers in natural disasters.

Mr. President, that is an American tradition, and we ought to follow it in this bill. We certainly should do it before we take care of wants, wants for countries outside of the United States.

I know the President feels a personal responsibility for Operation Just Cause. I certainly supported Operation Just Cause. But all of this money is not going to repair damage from Operation Just Cause. The $120 million that we seek to divert to American needs did not have a thing in the world to do with Operation Just Cause. Operation Just Cause did not create that debt to multilateral banks. It just had nothing to do with debts to multilateral banks.

Those debts were owed before Operation Just Cause. And, Mr. President, the tourism potential, I hope we can rebuild that, or I hope the Panamanians can rebuild that. They tell me it is a very pretty country. Well, in fact I have seen it. They say there is some very pretty parts of it, some island which is very beautiful. I hope they can develop that, and attract Americans and people from elsewhere.

But emergency? Is that an emergency to rank with the cleanup of our nuclear plants? Is that an emergency to rank with stopping the creeping of volatile organic compounds which threaten to get into the water supply in the Denver area from the Rocky Flats plant? I think not, Mr. President.

I think we need to think first things first. They used to have a group they called "America Firsters." I do not know whether that group was a good group or not. It seems to me it was before World War II. We need to recreate that name and that spirit when it comes to foreign aid.

I think what we ought to say is foreign aid, yes, but America first. Foreign aid, yes, but that which we can afford. Foreign aid, yes, but let us not unbalance this budget. Foreign aid, yes, but only to the extent that it is really needed and that we can afford it as a country, and only after we have taken care of those needs in this country which deserve priority consideration.

Mr. President, we do not go all the way in this amendment. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked a tough question of my colleague from West Virginia when he said why anything for Panama? Why anything for Panama? Why not keep it all at home?

Mr. President, legislation is made of compromises, and it is made of consensus. I think the distinguished Senator from Vermont who chairs the Committee on Foreign Operations, and who I believe is supporting this amendment, has come up with a proper kind of consensus, a blend of those who feel a real responsibility for Operation Just Cause, a blend of those who feel that it is in our interest to help Panama, those who feel that there are priority needs there, that we need to restore the economy, and that we need to restore confidence in Panama. But that is melded into those of us who are America Firsters, who think we need to tend to business here at home first before we go spreading our beneficence all over the world.

So it is a good compromise, $300 million in emergency aid to Panama. If there are further needs, we can consider it, and in the regular course of business.

We can have the witnesses in. You know, Mr. President, that congressional hearing process is really a good one because we have witnesses come up to justify their programs and ask them the tough questions. Why do you want this money for scholarships? Compare that need for scholarships to American need for scholarships. Maybe they can. Maybe they can do a good job of that. And maybe they will just be mumbling to themselves when the question is asked, and the implications of spending money on things that are neglected at home, maybe the implications of that will come home, and maybe they will not even ask for the money in the regular course of having to justify it.

But one of these urgent supplementals, Mr. President, is just that—it is urgent, it is quick. We do not have time to hold all the hearings, and bring in all the witnesses. We sort of have to take the word of the administration, and these figures are really not put together by mathematicians with scientific accuracy, and every dollar being justified. Rather it is kind of a Kentucky windage sort of thing. They pick a figure. Why not $420 million? I do not mean to say these people are not in good faith but when you are in an urgent, emergency situation that is kind of the way you have to do it. You have to pick a figure and say well, why not spend $130 million to clear out these arrearages for these multilateral banks? You have to do that sometime anyway. Why not do it now and make us look good?

I say, Mr. President, let us not give them anything now under an emergency program that they cannot justify. Clearly, $300 million is a lot of money for an emergency program. We will come back and consider whatever the requests are in the regular bill. At that time, we will have a chance to consider the experts. We will have a chance to consider the witnesses and have them make their case.

Mr. President, I see my distinguished colleagues standing who may want the floor at this point. So I would like to revisit this matter at a later time and allow my colleagues to take the floor at this time.

I want to thank my distinguished colleague from West Virginia for yielding time to me. I want to thank him for his leadership on this amendment. He has his priorities straight, Mr. President. This amendment has the priorities straight, and I hope this Senate will overwhelmingly adopt it when it is offered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank Mr. Johnston, my distinguished colleague on the Appropriations Committee and the chief cosponsor of the amendment, for his excellent statement and for his support of the amendment.

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama for a question, as I understand.

Mr. SHELBY. A statement and a question.

I thank the distinguished Senator and President pro tempore for yielding to me. I want to briefly commend him for sponsoring this, for showing the leadership on this, and helping us here in the Senate I hope put our priorities in order.

What are those priorities? Most of us have supported and will support aid to Panama in some form. But I am not sure that we need to send $420 million down there in an emergency situation. When we are dealing with this kind of money, we have needs in this country. We have needs State to State. We have the needs that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has pointed out, such as Indian health facilities. I do not know many people in this country that have been mistreated more, abused more, than our native Indians. That would be $50 million for sanitation requirements and so forth.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SHELBY. The DOE environmental restoration—everybody in this Senate, including the distinguished Senator from Illinois, our Presiding Officer, knows what problems we have with that, having served with him continuously on the Armed Services Committee regarding the environment and the cleanup.

Think about our own problems as far as the agricultural emergency conservation program. We all have experienced disasters. My own State of Alabama had tremendous flooding in southeast Alabama. We have farmers down there that had beautiful lands that only now have rock left there to farm.

As far as the farm bill, we need it. We need help. But lastly, Mr. President, the WIC Program—think of all the times we have argued on the floor for trying to do something about infant mortality in the United States. My State of Alabama is one of the high-risk States dealing with infant mortality there. But we are not the only ones. What would the WIC Program do? This is $12.3 million of this. It is a lot of money for that program. It would be used to provide additional funding for the WIC Program, for low-income women, infants, and children who are at nutritional risk.

So it makes a lot of sense to take this $120 million and again follow the leadership of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. I commend him again. I trust that he will add me on as a cosponsor of his amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his question, for his statement, and for his desiring to become a cosponsor of the amendment. I will add his name before I send the amendment to the desk. I thank him.

Mr. President, there are several other things I wish to say regarding the amendment and the bill.

Mr. President, the Comptroller General of the United States, Charles A. Bowsher, appeared before the Subcommittee on Transportation and Hazardous Materials of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives, on February 23, 1989. He spoke on the subject of "Enormous Modernization and Cleanup Problems of the Nuclear Weapons Complex." This, in part is what he said:

> We are pleased to provide our views on what is needed to clean up and modernize the Department of Energy's nuclear weapons complex. My testimony is based on a large body of work, over 50 reports and testimonies since 1981, that we have completed on the environmental, safety and health aspects of the Department of Energy's nuclear weapons complex. Cleaning up and modernizing the complex would be a formidable task which is estimated to cost up to $155 billion.
> Let me stress that while cost estimates are not budget quality, they do serve to illustrate the magnitude of the problems within the complex. As more information is gathered, the indications are that the final cost could be higher.

In previous congressional testimony, I have used the problems in DOE's nuclear weapons complex as an example of how we have not invested wisely in key Government operations. We have consistently made short-term decisions which now leave us with extremely serious problems that would require long-term solutions with enormous costs.

The Department of Energy's own studies agree that production of nuclear material has been emphasized to the detriment of safety and environmental concerns. They also point out that capital investment to maintain many components in the complex averaged less than 2 percent, in contrast to a 4 to 7 percent level normally associated with industrial facilities.

The problem at the Department of Energy's complex are so serious that they have at least temporarily shut down key facilities that affect the Nation's ability to produce nuclear material for a weapon. Dealing effectively with these problems represents one of the major areas of explosive, unfunneled costs that will have to be dealt with at the same time we address the budget deficit.

A comprehensive and well-planned approach to address the problems is overdue, and further delays will only worsen the situation.

In the last session of the Congress, the debate was over whether major problems had existed in the Department of Energy's nuclear weapons complex. The debate in this——

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I apologize to the distinguished Senator. I thought he had completed his remarks. I will be glad to wait.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator like to make some comments on the proposed amendment? I am glad to yield.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, if I may respond to the distinguished chairman, I did not desire at this point to discuss the proposed amendment. However, I do strongly support the proposed amendment, and I also do ask respectfully that I may be added as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

There is one other section on which I might respond further to the distinguished Senator, Mr. President. This relates to the supplemental appropriation for several of the agencies of Government which have direct jurisdiction today over an issue called "wetlands." We have a tremendous crisis in the State of Arkansas, I say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, about what the rules are today with regard to wetlands, specifically, as to what the wetlands regulations mean to the farmer in our State.

Our farmers today are trying to plant. They do not know the rules of wetlands, the rules of the Corps of Engineers, the Soil Conservation Service, ASCS, EPA; they do not know the rules. They cannot, for example, even build a rice levee or tear down a rice levee without going to the Corps of Engineers for a permit. Well, how long does a permit take? It takes at least 90 days to receive a permit.

I just say further, Mr. President, to the very distinguished and able chairman, that at some point, before the conclusion of final disposition of the supplemental bill, in consultation with the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], and also the distinguished colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], we may want to attach some form of a rider, some form of a moratorium, or something at least addressing the issue of wetlands, so that we can remove ourselves from this bureaucratic quagmire that we find ourselves in at the present time.

So I do not want the distinguished chairman to be surprised if at the appropriate time and place such amendment is offered. I will do that upon consultation with him and his staff, and others of my colleagues, who I know will be interested in being a part of this effort.

Mr. President, I am very appreciative of the Senator for yielding.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator for alerting me to his interest in the matter which he discussed. I am very happy to discuss it further with him and to consider whatever he has in mind. I thank him for his request that he be made a cosponsor of the amendment and his name will be on the amendment as a consponsor when I sent the amendment to the desk.

Mr. President, the debate, as I say, in the last session of the Congress was over whether major problems existed in the Department of Energy nuclear weapons complex. The debate in this session can move from the recognition and acceptance that there are serious problems in the nuclear weapons complex to how to fund and deal with them. The role of this Congress and administration will be to strike a balance between maintaining our national security and protecting the public and the environment as well as establishing the pace at which the Nation moves its weapons complex into the 21st century. The remainder of my testimony provides specifically, one, scope of Department of Energy cleanup plans; two, the reasonableness of the cost estimates to implement these plans; three, structure needed to most effectively and efficiently resolve the problems; four, our views on the Department of Energy fiscal year 1990 budget; and five, comments on H.R. 761.

Before getting into the specifics I would like to begin with an overview of the complex end of the problems.

Again I say this is a statement by the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. Charles A. Bowsher.

He is talking now with reference to the nuclear weapons complex and its problems. He went on to say:

Since World War II nuclear weapons played a dominant role in the Nation's defense strategy, DOE oversees weapons are located at 16 major installations around the country. The complex mission is to produce nuclear materials for weapons, naval materials, and naval fuel.

DOE funding requirements for nuclear defense activity in each of the last years has been about $8 billion. In total the complex represents a public investment of about $100 billion, includes the wide variety of plants with interrelated purposes such as nuclear reactors, specialized laboratories and uniquely designed plants for fabricating nuclear materials and nuclear waste facilities. The Department of Energy nuclear waste complex is considered one of the potential dangerous industrial operations in the world.

The operations routinely use and generate large quantities of a wide range of hazardous and radioactive materials. These materials must be transported and disposed of carefully by workers not only to prevent exposure to themselves but also to prevent these materials from being released into the environment because of lethal levels of radiation and high level heat generation. Many of the materials must be handled with special shielded equipment to prevent worker exposure.

DOE operations also involve controlling nuclear reactors and handling highly fissionable nuclear materials. The unfortunate Chernobyl accident represents the dangerous aspects of controlling nuclear reaction and nuclear material.

Finally, DOE operation must be protected against the more commonplace industrial dangers such as fires or other processing accidents. GAO work over the past several years has described a variety of unresolved safety, environmental and operational problems. Specifically we have called attention to the following: Serious safety questions regarding the operation of government production reactors at Savannah River, South Carolina, including the adequacy of the emergency cooling systems and need for ultrasonic testing to examine the reactor tanks for the possibility of cracks.

The problem that DOE facilities face, results from aging and inattention to capital improvements. For example, some buildings and equipment have deteriorated to the point where they now have safety and operational problems.

Furthermore, some equipment and/or processing used within the complex are obsolete making repair work difficult and spare parts virtually impossible to procure. Over 3,000 inactive waste sites at DOE facilities are the result of past hazardous and radioactive waste disposal practices that will require action. Groundwater and soil contamination at Department of Energy installations is found around the country; some at levels hundreds to thousands of times above standards, in some locations such as the plant in Tennessee. Environmental contamination has spread offsite.

Next Mr. Bowsher says:

I want to briefly discuss the reasonableness of cost estimate set forth in the DOE modernization report.

And this section of this testimony bears a subheading cost estimate very uncertain.

We have previously reported that the total cost of addressing the major problems within the complex is estimated up to $155 billion. The modernization plans calculation of costs differs from ours in methodology and scope. For example, the DOE modernization report highlights $81 billion for modernization and environmental restoration over the next 21 years. This $81 billion represents the additional funds and increment needed during the next 21 years over and beyond funding DOE programs each year at the fiscal year 1989 level of approximately $8 billion.

Further, the $81 billion represents cost only through 2010. In the environmental restoration area DOE recognizes that total cost could range from $40 billion to $70 billion and would extend beyond 2010. As I said earlier it is important to note that all of these estimates are not budget quality and are designed only to approximate the funds needed. In the final analysis, the true costs may be far higher. For example, some of the planned facilities will use new technologies such as the isotope separation facility and a high-temperature gas cooled reactor. The Department of Energy construction of such a facility has been prone to huge cost overruns. Further, many uncertainties exist with regard to how we can clean up existing environmental contamination and decontaminate large nuclear facilities.

The Department of Energy's modernization plan does not shed much light on what cleanup figures will be used. Finally we are not sure that all the problems within the complex have surfaced. For example, in the environmental area uncertainties still exist not only regarding the extent to which DOE sites can be cleaned up, not only regarding the size of the problems, but also regarding the extent to which DOE sites can be cleaned up.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, for 15 minutes, with the understanding that I do not lose my right to the floor and that my speech will not be counted—well, now, wait a minute. I promised the Senator from Arizona, before he went to a committee meeting, that after 2 o'clock, upon his return, I would yield to him.

I see he is on the floor. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me to carry out my commitment to the Senator from Arizona first, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] for——

Mr. MCCAIN. I do not think I will use it, Mr. President, but perhaps 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. For 15 minutes, without losing my rights to the floor and without its counting as a second speech.

Mr. President, I do not intend to hold the floor forever, but I do intend to finish my statement and I am going to protect the Republican leader on his amendment. But I will be glad to yield to any Senator who wishes to come to the floor to speak any time.

I yield to the distinguished Senator, my friend from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] under those conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Arizona is now recognized.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his courtesy in allowing me to speak on this very important amendment.

Mr. President, I do not wish to reopen the line-item veto issue. I am sure we will have ample time to ventilate that issue, as the Senator from West Virginia has made his intentions very clear, in the case that such an issue should come to the floor.

I would like to make one comment in response to the very illuminating and thoughtful comments that the Senator made. Again, I remind the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, 43 out of 50 States in America have the line-item veto. None of the terrible distortions of the democratic process that he forewarns us of have occurred in those 43 States.

All of the legislators and Governors, no matter what political stripe they are, support such a measure as an extremely important tool for legislative efficiency and for the eliminating of wasteful spending.

It seems to me there is only one significant difference between the States and the Federal Government. The States cannot print their own money and they do have balanced budgets, whereas our Federal budget is, of course, a monumental disgrace.

Mr. President, I want to speak about this amendment that is being proposed by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. It reduces the appropriations for aid to Panama from $420 million to $300 million, a $120 million reduction in budget authority that yields a reduction in outlays of $63.6 million.

Mr. President, as always, this is a very clever and intelligent amendment. Why? Because clearly, Mr. President, we are going to take this money that goes to foreigners, none of whom vote, and we are going to use it to satisfy some of the most urgent and important needs in our society.

As my friend from Pennsylvania stated earlier today, if it were put to a vote of the American people, this amendment would pass overwhelmingly. In fact, Mr. President, any foreign aid request before this body, if challenged with the alternatives presented by this amendment, clearly would not prevail because the American people understandably are most concerned about the conditions which need rectifying with our own society.

I am particularly interested, Mr. President, in the first listing in the summary of the Byrd-Johnston amendment that was handed out, which is $50 million in budget authority for Indian health facilities.

These funds would enable the Indian Health Service to begin addressing the backlog of sanitation requirements for Indian housing. At present, this backlog is estimated to be $650 million.

Mr. President, that is a wonderful idea. I come from a State that has 20 Indian tribes, the largest tribe in America, living in conditions of abysmal poverty, the worst conditions in the United States, and have been for this century and most of the last—Mr. President, it is wonderful.

But the question is, where was this money for the last 15 years when native American programs have been diminished in every parameter we want to use, whether real spending, percentage of the budget, percentage of GNP. Where was this request since 1975? According to the evidence that I presented on this floor, native American programs' funding has steadily, inexorably, and unconsciously declined as the need on native American reservations has dramatically, inexorably, and unconscionably increased?

So I applaud this with great warmth, and feeling I, perhaps more than any other Member of this body, support an increase in funding for Indian health facilities. God knows it is needed.

But the question that should be asked here is, why now, Mr. President? Why now, when we are facing a situation in Panama which borders on critical? In fact, in the view of some observers, Panama is already in crisis.

Mr. President, 23 American boys died in the invasion of Panama; 23 who gave their lives in that exercise. I am not prepared, Mr. President, to support a decision that may very well place the lives of Americans in danger again.

I can assure my colleagues that if we cut this funding, we will send a signal to dissident elements in Panama that the United States does not support the freely elected Panamanian Government, nor is it interested in stability in the region. Such a signal will encourage elements within Panama to disrupt their society, cause further unrest, and, indeed, risk American lives.

It may have escaped the notice of some, Mr. President, that not too long ago, a hand grenade was hurled into a night club in a major Panamanain city, injuring American servicemen who happened to be there that evening. I guarantee, Mr. President, the likelihood of the repetition of such incidents will be dramatically increased if we send a signal to the Panamanian Government and people that we are not interested in a one-shot, jump-start of their economy so they can regain the economic health which we all know is vital and critical to the maintenance of democracy in any—I repeat any—fledgling government.

My distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said that the American people will ask "Are you going to put someone else first?"

I suggest, Mr. President, the majority of Americans applaud and appreciate the fact that the American people have put democracy and freedom first throughout the world for two generations.

The American people, and my constituents, Mr. President, will say it is not an accident that the statue raised by Chinese students in Tiananmen Square was a replica of the statute of liberty. They will say it is not an accident that a Czechoslovakian student at the height of the Czechoslovakian demonstrations, stood before an enormous crowd of freedom starved Czechs and said:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.

Mr. President, my voters know that they need increases in these vital domestic programs. Native Americans in my State need to have their health facilities upgraded from unacceptable to rudimentary.

I suggest what this amendment does is present us with a Hobson's choice. It presents us with a choice of abandoning freedom for the people of Panama where there will be a continued United States military presence, where American men and women will be based for at least the next 10 years and where their lives will be risked by destabilizing that country, in return for which we will fund very much-needed and important domestic programs.

Mr. President, I also would like to say something about American citizens. There are a lot of American citizens in my State who are of Hispanic heritage. There are lots of them across the Southwest—the States of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Florida, and California. The largest and fastest growing percentage of America's population are American Hispanics. I say to my colleagues that these Hispanic Americans are concerned that we are going to abandon Hispanic democracies to economic chaos and political disruption. Yes, they care, Mr. President, whether we are going to give the same kind of support to Hispanic democracies that we seem to be more than willing to give to East European nations. I have heard some very interesting comments made about the democracies of Central America on the floor of this body as compared with those of Eastern Europe.

Mr. President, I suggest that freedom and democracy is precious to any individual no matter what his culture and his heritage or the color of his skin. I also point out that there is some $23 billion which has been earmarked by nations all over the world to help the economies of Eastern Europe recover. I am also sad to note that there has been very little, if any, support whatsoever earmarked from any other nation to Panama and Nicaragua. Indeed, it is America's primary responsibility.

So, Mr. President, this very intelligent, very compelling and very thoughtful amendment—because I always have the utmost respect for any amendment that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee presents to this body—is before us. Yes, it will present some very difficult choices for those of us who have to vote on this issue, and the distinguished chairman has assured us that we most certainly will. But, Mr. President, we are playing a dangerous game here. We told the people of Panama when we got rid of one of the most despotic dictators that had ever burdened any country, that we would help them, that we would assist them in maintaining a viable economy and rebuilding democratic institutions.

I will say, Mr. President, if we agree to this amendment, we are telling them, adios. We are telling them, no, we are not going to help you; we are just going to do as little as we can. Meanwhile, we may have some higher priorities for some other countries in different parts of the world.

Mr. President, I think it would be a very serious mistake if we adopt this amendment. I think we have an opportunity for peace and stability in a very volatile and unsettled part of our own hemisphere. I think a compelling case could be made that this should be our first priority. Mr. President, we cannot abandon these people because, if we do, not only do we abandon the principles and philosophies upon which this Nation was founded, but we may see the need for a return of U.S. military troops. That is the absolute last solution that any of us want to see repeated.

We cherish the memory of those 23 brave young Americans who sacrificed their lives in defense of the freedom of the Panamanian people. We do not want to see it happen again.

Mr. President, I thank again the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, for his courtesy and I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Arizona. I hope he will consider further the amendment before he casts his vote. He can be sure the adoption of this amendment is not an abandonment of freedom and democracy in Panama. The Senate, with the House, in February, moved very expeditiously to comply with phase I of the request for Panama, which I believe was about $45 million in disaster emergency assistance and $500 million in loan guarantees, and there is $300 million in this bill. That is an abandonment of freedom and democracy anywhere—$300 million. That is $800 million. What is the GNP of Panama? I am told the gross national product of Panama is something like $4.5 billion. So here we are appropriating $300 million today which is 6⅔ percent of the total GNP of Panama just in this $300 million, 6 percent. Suppose some country in the world were to appropriate 6 percent of our country's GNP. What is our country's GNP? $5 trillion? Six percent of $5 trillion, how much money would that be we would be getting, this United States of ours? Six percent of $5 trillion. And here we are appropriating 6 percent, almost 7 percent, of the total GNP of Panama just right here in this little bit, $300 million. And then to imply that this is abandonment of freedom and democracy. We are saying we are not shutting you out. Come back and make your case. Let the administration come back and make its case. We will have the regular bill coming along shortly.

Anent what I have just said, I want to read an excerpt of the Honorable John E. Robson before the Foreign Operations Committee of the Appropriations Committee when he appeared with Secretary Eagleburger in support of this appropriation:

> The President has proposed economic assistance packages for Panama and Nicaragua that reflect two differences in the economic circumstances of the countries. As you may know, Deputy Secretary Eagleburger and I went to Panama in early January to assess the economic situation. We met with President Endara and his economic advisers as well as with representatives of the private sector. Based on those meetings and the followup work of an interagency team of U.S. experts, we formulated the strategy which we believe provides the basis for sustainable long-term economic recovery.

That is where we got the figure. That is where they came up with the $500 million request, based on those meetings. They met with President Endara and his economic advisers, as well as with representatives of the private sector. So then, based on those meetings and the followup work of the interagency team of U.S. experts, they have formulated this strategy. That does not sound like a very sound footing to demand that we have to appropriate $500 million in this bill. How do we know what the figure really should be?

So we are appropriating $300 million, which had been justified by the administration's witnesses before the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, according to that subcommittee, of which the distinguished Senator from Vermont is chairman. That is what we are doing. We are going along with that. The subcommittee thinks that much is justified. OK, let us appropriate that and come back on the regular bill and see what else they can justify.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from West Virginia would be willing to yield to me for, say, 10 or 15 minutes, and I would be happy to lay out some of the thinking that went into the basic foreign aid bill and also why I joined with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia in seeking a different allocation in the committee than that with which the committee ultimately came out.

I wonder if the distinguished Senator would be willing to yield to me.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Mr. President, I am going to yield the floor shortly in any event. I yield to the distinguished Senator for 15 minutes. I am not allocating time. We are not operating under a time agreement, but I ask unanimous consent that I may yield for not to exceed 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] with the understanding that I retain my rights to the floor and not be counted as a second speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, before the distinguished Senator from West Virginia does that, I wonder if he will yield just a moment for a question, before the Senator from Vermont speaks.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. The Senator raised the question about a regular bill coming along and why could we not address some of the issues at that time regarding the funding for Panama and Nicaragua. I think the statement by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee raises a point. I believe that has some merit, but along with that I would like to ask if some of the domestic items that we have now included in the dire emergency supplemental would not also be something that should be considered at the time when we look at the regular appropriations bills.

Mr. BYRD. They will be. They will be considered.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. But are there not a significant number that are now included in the supplemental that we should take off as well?

Mr. BYRD. I am not sure I understand the question of the distinguished Senator.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. If we would reduce the funds requested for Panama or Nicaragua because of our belief that some of those could be debated and handled during the regular appropriations process, I am merely asking, are there not a number of domestic items included under the dire supplemental emergency consideration that we could also put aside until the regular bills come through?

Mr. BYRD. The answer is no, may I say most respectfully to the Senator from Kansas. What we are putting in this bill for the environmental cleanup of the nuclear weapons facilities is a mere drop in the bucket. But it is a start. We can be sure that by appropriating this little, measly $200 million, if the Senate accepts this amendment for that purpose, we will not be putting the problem behind us. We will be paying on that bill for years and decades to come in all likelihood.

What we are saying is that as far as the appropriations justifications are concerned, when they appeared before that subcommittee—and may I say I think the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee indicated at those hearings, if anyone wishes to read the hearings, that he knew much more about the situation and the problems in what the administration was requesting than those who testified on behalf of it.

I do not say that to cast any reflection on those witnesses who appeared there, but what I am saying is the Senate is going a long way in appropriating the $300 million, but why should we just blindly appropriate $500 million because the administration says we want $500 million. We ask our own agencies, when they come in with respect to appropriations requests for domestic items, to justify those requests.

I am the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on the Department of the Interior, and there we are talking about parks and forests and public lands and laboratories. We ask the agency heads, the departmental heads to come before the committee and justify the administration's request for these domestic items. We do not always give them as much as they request. Many times we do not. They have to come and justify those requests. Why then should we just willy-nilly and without any question, just blindfold ourselves and say, OK, if the Administration wants $500 million, we will ask no further questions; let us give it to them.

I say most respectfully to the Senator from Kansas, it was the judgment of the subcommittee that conducted the hearings that $300 million was all that the Administration fully justified. And combining that with the $500-plus million in loan guarantees and emergency assistance that was approved in February, plus the fact the regular bills are coming on soon, we think that some of these domestic needs which are waiting and crying out for attention ought to be given some consideration. The only way we know how to do it is to reduce the money that had been voted in by the committee for Panama.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the Senator would be willing to yield some time to me—I agree with what the Senator from West Virginia said—I can lay out in about 10, 13 minutes or so, at least a summary of what we considered in the Foreign Operations Subcommittee and why I took the position I did in the full Appropriations Committee, why I joined with the distinguished chairman of that committee when we had the markup of the foreign operations part of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am going to yield the floor shortly. I would like perhaps to make a few more comments, very limited. I do not want to yield the floor until I offer the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Vermont for not to exceed 15 minutes and that I not lose my rights to the floor. I assure all Senators that I will not retain the floor very long after that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. I compliment him both on his stamina and his grasp of the issues in framing this debate so far today.

Mr. President, when we started putting together this supplemental appropriations bill, we did it within the framework and the view of what was happening in the rest of the world. From the triumph of Solidarity in Poland last year, the victory by democratic parties in elections in East Germany just a few weeks ago, we watched in awe as the people of Eastern Europe threw off generations of tyranny. We have also seen the liberation of Panama from the Noriega dictatorship, the free election of a new Government in Nicaragua to replace the Sandinistas, the peaceful transition of power in Namibia and a civilian President, a civilian President freely elected in Chile. After decades of carrying out foreign aid programs based on cold war rationale, we now have a historic opportunity to reshape the whole purpose of our foreign aid.

But I am concerned that the Administration has not yet grasped the urgent need to design a coherent new foreign aid strategy. In place of new ideas, we got piecemeal foreign aid requests driven by the headlines of that day, supplementals tailored to fit press conferences, foreign aid programs shaped by political calculations rather than by a careful balancing of American foreign policy priorities and interests.

I commend the distinguished majority leader of the Senate when a few weeks ago he called on the Administration to send forward an overall foreign aid plan, to show us how it fits into our broader foreign policy and also, and very importantly, how it relates to the budget. The first opportunity to engage in real debate on new directions for foreign aid is the fiscal 1990 supplemental appropriations bill, that which is before us today, and we can have that debate on direction for foreign aid.

The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and I took a different position on the funding level for Panama, different than that reported by the committee Tuesday on the supplemental. He and I, as well as the majority leader and many other Senators, worked very closely on the foreign aid portion of the supplemental. I want to compliment the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee on his hard work in our effort to develop a position to meet truly urgent needs in foreign assistance, but at the same time to fund critically important domestic, U.S. needs such as Head Start.

But the Appropriations Committee by a 15-to-14 vote, 1-vote margin, reported essentially the same aid levels passed by the House in its version of the supplemental appropriations. But the committee did adopt important provisions which I recommended, and I will review those later. But let us briefly review the reasons for the proposal that was offered by the chairman of the committee and myself when we went to markup Tuesday.

The distinguished chairman and I react much the same way. When the President first announced his intention to give $800 million to Panama and Nicaragua, in the 5 remaining months of this fiscal year, we agreed that is too much money, too fast, to give to two governments that do not have the capacity to absorb it all at once without great risk, waste, and misuse.

I support eventually the full $500 million to Panama and the $300 million for Nicaragua requested by President Bush. But I have always said it should be spaced out over a reasonable time and with tight management and auditing controls to avoid waste.

Let us put this aid request for Panama into perspective. First off, I have not heard from one single Senator, Democratic or Republican, that they are opposed to helping Panama, especially since our removal of General Noriega. Everybody agrees we are going to help them. But I have heard speeches from every single Senator in this body about how opposed they are to waste, how opposed they are to spending money when we do not need to, and so we should at least ask how we are going to spend it. Let me put it in perspective if I might.

Over the last 42 years, from the time I was 6 years old, between 1946 to 1988, the United States gave a total of $553 million in economic aid to Panama. Now in the $40 million in grants we gave Panama in February, plus the President's request of $500 million for Panama, we would end up providing Panama with $540 million in 1 year. That is in 1 year. In an emergency supplemental, we are asked to give Panama as much aid as we gave them over 42 years.

Mr. President, I do not want to be cynical but one gets the impression that number might just have been picked a little bit out of the air.

That is why we asked for the hearings. That is why we specifically raised questions. If their experience in aid from the United States was to get about half a billion over 42 years, and handled that however handled, what experience would they have in getting 42 years' worth of aid in 5 months? I thought we ought to ask that question at least.

I am also concerned, I must say, Mr. President, that when we can suddenly find $800 million for Panama and Nicaragua the Administration continues to ignore the urgency of promoting American trade and investment in Eastern Europe. The door to those huge markets is opening wide, and our competititors, the Western Europeans and Japanese, are already out in front. This is after all the country which in trying to make Europe free fought in World War II, developed the Marshall plan, spent trillions of dollars in NATO, and now suddenly when democracy breaks out we say we ran out of money jsut about 1 year too soon. But thank goodness the Western Europeans and Japanese can now come in and take advantage of all the United States has sacrificed for 50 years.

Let me speak briefly of Panama. I visited Panama shortly after our invasion. I was deeply impressed with President Endara's vision. I yield to no one in my admiration about what he has said, what Vice President Ford and Vice President Arias said to us. I feel a close personal kinship with Vice President Ford and Panama. I feel that I am a personal friend as a result of our many discussions. These are three men whom I am convinced want what is in the best interests of this country and democracy. They speak of that really in one sentence. They consider the best interests of Panama to be as a democratic nation.

On my return, I fully supported the $550 million in emergency grants, credits, and guarantees that President Bush requested for Panama in February, and I helped on this floor and in the meetings off the floor to expedite that money. I know firsthand Panama needs aid from the United States to get its economy moving again. But I do not feel based on the hearings that I held—as the distinguished chairman says those transcripts are available—they can effectively use an additional $500 million requested by the President, or even the $420 million approved by our committee, in only 5 months, which is all that is left of the fiscal year.

I am not speaking against aid for Panama. I support aid for Panama. I am not speaking against President Endara, Vice President Ford, and Vice President Arias. I have a great deal of admiration for all three, and I want to help them. All I am saying is let us not send aid for the sake of aid. Let us make sure it really helps Panama, and let us make sure as the money goes it is effective.

The stated purpose of this request is to "jump start" the Panamanian economy. Then you have to ask how do these points jump start it? One hundred thirty million dollars on the part of the United States to clear Panama's arrears to the multilateral development banks where nearly $600 million is needed. We can pay off some of our debts. In fact, the administration concedes that process will take months before enough money can be raised. Thirty million dollars for tourism potential, $20 million for construction of schools, $6 million for techical assistance, $4 million in scholarships, $6 million to develop nontraditional exports.

These are probably good goals. Are they dire emergency supplementals? Let us take care of some of the basic needs of Panama. This Senate moved with alacrity to help the President's request for $540 million in grants and aid. I think we moved that through, I would say to my colleagues, faster than I have ever seen any nondomestic issue with a price tag like that ever moved through this. I have been here 16 years. Others have been here longer. But it was pretty darned fast. We can do it.

But the entire Panamanian national budget is less than $1.5 billion. The administration is asking Congress to approve over $1 billion in aid of all types to Panama, including over $500 million in grants in a single year.

Somebody has to say aid is one thing, but just throwing money to make us all look good is quite another thing. Let us help Panama, but let us not just buy a public relations stunt when we are doing it, not with the taxpayers' money.

I am not the only one to ask whether an economy as small and as disrupted as that of Panama can really absorb so much money all at once. In a speech in February at the State Department, the White House's own associate director of the Office of Management and Budget questioned whether Panama can realy use the equivalent of 20 percent of its entire gross domestic product.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Foreign Service Journal April issue recounting these remarks be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, to dump this money on Panama all at once is a prescription for waste and misuse of the American taxpayers' money. At the very least, we should stretch out aid to Panama so there is less incentive to throw money at problems without adequate planning and preparation.

Because of this concern, I recommended, and the committee agreed, to include language in the bill requiring semiannual audits by the inspector general of AID of the individual aid programs, and a comprehensive audit of the entire program in both Panama and Nicaragua at the end of fiscal 1991.

NICARAGUA

After decades of trying to destroy Nicaragua and its economy through the Contra war and economic sanctions, we have a moral obligation to help the Nicaraguan people rebuild their country. We will be sending aid to Nicaragua for years to come.

The request was $300 million this year for them, the President has asked for another $200 million next year, that is $500 million for 3.5 million people. Put that in perspective, that $500 million for 3.5 million people is a little bit less than all the development aid we need for 500 million people in black Africa in a year.

Let us at least be honest about it. Those numbers are not based on hard economic analysis. President-elect Chamorro and her advisers frankly told us they do not have access to essential economic and financial information. The Sandinistas have treated such information as state secrets. No realistic economic recovery program can be developed until the Chamorro administration gets access to the data it needs to plan rationally.

The AID Administrator has also confirmed that the Chamorro team does not have essential economic and financial information.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that AID Administrator Ronald Rasken's letter to me of April 11 on this subject be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, Nicaragua's economy is a total shambles. The Chamorro government will be in the throes of a top to bottom reorganization of Nicaraguan society, with scant ability for months to manage and control hundreds of millions of dollars dumped on them all at once.

Mr. President, we have carefully reviewed the President's $300 million request—$200 million of it can reasonably be justified to respond to immedaite needs of the new Chamorro administration.

I ask unanimous consent that a paper prepared by the staff of the Foreign Operations subcommittee analyzing the President's request for Nicaragua be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, however, because of the strong concerns expressing by many Senators about the importance of sending a clear signal of support to Mrs. Chamorro, in our proposal Senator BYRD and I agree to increase the amount for Nicaragua to $300 million. There was no disagreement in the committee over this program.

But this huge infusion of cash makes all the more important the provision I recommended requiring special audits of the Nicaragua program over the coming months. And, as with Panama, we need to space out our aid to Nicaragua so there is time for the new government to pick up the reins of power, get needed economic data, and plan sensibly.

As guardians of the taxpayers money we should be especially concerned that the administration has already told us $178 million in cash will go directly and immediately into Nicaragua's Central Bank, which is about to undergo major reorganization. At the same time, Deputy Secretary Eagleburger stated to me that we will not have an AID mission up and fully operating in Managua until December.

I do not want to be the one to explain that to the American taxpayers if and when the scandals begin appearing in the press.

Mr. President, the supplemental which passed the House on April 3, 1990, contained $30 million to support the demobilization and resettlement of the Nicaraguan resistance. The Senate Appropriations Committee preserved those funds, but added language which takes into account developments in Nicaragua since April 3.

On April 19, agreements were signed by representatives of the Contras, Mrs. Chamorro, and the Sandinistas which set forth a series of steps for the demobilization of the Contras. A cease-fire was to take place immediately, and all armed Contras were to begin moving into five enclaves inside Nicaragua by April 22. By June 10, 1990, they all are to have turned in their weapons.

This is a reasonable arrangement with a procedure accepted by all parties. So far I am not aware of any reports that either side is falling to abide by the procedure.

Mr. President, Violetta Chamorro was inaugurated on Wednesday. There is no reason why another American tax dollar should go to any Contra who refuses to abide by these agreements signed by their leaders, Mrs. Chamorro and the Sandinistas. Accordingly, I included language in the bill that assistance for demobilization and resettlement shall be limited to Contras who agree to and are abiding by the terms of the cease-fire agreement and the addendum to the Toncontin agreement signed on April 19. I am pleased the Sente supports that language and fully expect the House to accept it in conference.

That $300 million is going to go through. My statement which will be longer in the RECORD will point out some of the concerns I had of that economy absorbing it. But there seems to be great symbolism attached to it. The $300 million I am willing to bet within my judgment, I am willing to stake my legislative judgment on it, will pass this body just as it did the other body, and $300 million will go to Nicaragua. As far as they are concerned, that is money in the bank, and I might say it is more money than they have in all their banks put together today.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I told the distinguished Senator from West Virginia I fully expected to take.

OMB OFFICIAL DISCUSSES FOREIGN AFFAIRS BUDGET

(By Richard S. Thompson, Professional Issues Coordinator)

Frank Hodsoll, executive associate director of OMB who previously spent 14 years in the Foreign Service, commented on the recently unveiled 1991 budget at a February 27 AFSA speaker Luncheon.

Hodsoll noted that the "150 function" foreign affairs account has been increased to $20 billion, reflecting the president's desire to pay up on arrears to the United Nations and other international organizations. Of the $20 billion, $15 billion is for foreign aid and about $5 billion for the conduct of foreign affairs, including State and USIA. Defense spending, at $303 billion, shows a nominal increase of 2 percent, a decline in real terms of 2 percent.

For years Congress has been cutting foreign aid requests, and this is iikely to continue in spite of needs in Eastern Europe and the developing world. During the transition years of 1991-92, the "peace dividend" will be small. We might even need more money for defense to move troops and prepare bases in the United States.

Three challenges in the foreign affairs budget were outlined. First, rethinking the form of our aid, which has changed little since the philosophy and mechanisms of our assistance were established following World War II. Reduced support for aid and congressional earmarking have meant our programs suffer from both capping and rigidity. We need to look at new approaches, such as contingency and regional allocations, and combine accounts where it would make sense. The bilateral versus multilateral aid balance should be reviewed.

Second, we need to look at our representation abroad, which Under Secretary of State for Management Ivan Selin is doing. We must reconsider our personnel, intelligence, and economic requirements. In USIA and public diplomacy, VOA, Radio Free Europe, and Radio Liberty require scrutiny.

Third, we need more economic analysis of our aid flows. Can Panama really use the half billion dollars requested, equal to nearly 20 percent of that country's GDP? Why do we provide PL 480 wheat to Poland, where farms are private and there is a reserve of wheat?

Hodsoll concluded by explaining his role as the manager of the U.S. government's $1.3 trillion budget, arguing that government management is better than often alleged. The effect of government actions on the economy must be followed closely. Most mismanagement can be corrected, as Secretary Jack Kemp is doing at HUD, for example. OMB is trying to focus on a few issues and effect change there, since sweeping change is not always practical in our political system.

Several questioners contended that U.S. foreign and domestic needs require new taxes. Hodsoll responded that the proposed 1991 budget achieves the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets without new taxes, and it is clear the general population does not want a tax increase. The problem is that there is not a consensus on what should be cut. Also the world has changed since 1945. The West Europeans can do a lot in aid, especially Germany. The U.S. role is declining. The United States will have a share of 8 percent in the new European bank, compared with 20 percent in the older international financial institutions. We could probably better use the $15 billion we have for aid if we could change priorities.

Similarly, Hodsoll rejected a suggestion that we should increase the gasoline tax to avoid growing dependence on OPEC, commenting that any new tax would stimulate proposals for others.

Interest was also shown in moving base rights foreign aid to the Defense Department budget. Hodsoll said this was under discussion, but Defense was afraid the sums would simply be subtracted from other defense needs, and State was concerned about losing control over this important negotiating leverage. Whether certain bases are still critical is also at issue.

Hodsoll agreed that other agencies have increasing budgets but said he suspects many cuts can be made overseas. He added that the United States should have as few targets for terrorism abroad as possible.

The final questioner noted that the operations budget of the State department at the proposed 1991 level was not sufficient to make the infrastructure investment necessary to cope with developments such as Panama or Nicaragua. Hodsoll agreed more resources would be needed in discrete areas, but he warned that every agency has fat. OMB will work with agencies to make sure critical infrastructure needs are included in the 1992 budget, but agencies will be encouraged to look for cuts elsewhere in their budgets.

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT,
Washington, DC, April 11, 1990.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to Public Law 101-119, I am reporting to the appropriate committees of Congress that the Agency for International Development (A.I.D.) has reprogrammed previously obligated funds to allow additional activities with the National Democratic Institute and the National Republican Institute for International Affairs (NDI/NRI) to provide transition team support for the successful presidential candidate, Mrs. Chamorro, prior to taking office.

The November 1989 grant to the National Endowment for Democracy (NED) under Public Law 101-119 included assistance to a number of Nicaraguan organizations to promote and foster democratic activities and institutions through a subgrant to the NDI/NRI.

Up to $170,000 in funds still available in the NDI/NRI subgrant has been programmed for the urgent needs of President-elect Chamorro's transition team. The government elect is faced with a number of constraints that already threaten a smooth transition and further democratization in Nicaragua, such as post-election distribution of government assets; inaccessibility of key information on every sector of the economy; and lack of financial, material and human resources required to conduct an orderly transition of power. Other pressing issues that face the new government, such as the reduction in size of the security forces in Nicaragua and the demobilization of the Resistance, repatriation of displaced persons and refugees, high unemployment, hyperinflation, low productivity, and empty government coffers, need immediate attention if the transition to democracy and national reconciliation are to be realized successfully.

Much of the vital planning on the shape and course of the new government, including work on the resolution of these problems, is carried out during the transition period. With the inauguration less than one month away, it is urgent that this key planning be undertaken immediately.

Unfortunately, the new government is without funds or other resources to provide support to potential transition team members living abroad to go to Nicaragua to participate in the transition process.

This new activity allows for the provision of funds to the Chamorro transition team to cover necessary and urgent costs, including those for the services of outside consultants, which could also include a consultant in transition planning. Other costs would include office rental, telephone service, staff support, internal transportation, and miscellaneous expenses.

In addition, because of the special sensitivities involved in providing election support, A.I.D. imposed in NED's November grant special concurrent audit requirements and other election-specific requirements (e.g., certain specific campaign restrictions). Those are no longer applicable in this post-election period and would not be applied to the new activities.

Sincerely,

RONALD W. ROSKENS.

AID TO NICARAGUA

1. This request is the first installment in what will be a long and costly aid program for Nicaragua.

2. The President intends to request an additional $200 million in Fiscal Year 1991. We have now received that request.

3. In defense of the attached justification of this $300 million supplemental request, Secretary Eagleburger repeatedly emphasized that the dollar figures associated with each program element were "best estimates", but that he needed flexibility to move funds among the programs as circumstances dictate.

4. It is the Subcommittee Chairman's view that the following programs identified in the Administration's justifications are truly of an "emergency" nature:

	Millions
Agricultural inputs	$30
Petroleum imports	25
Private sector production imports	73
Repatriation and National Reconciliation	47
Emergency employment	10
Medical assistance package	4
Health Sector	10

The remaining programs are of a long-term developmental nature, which the United States will be assisting for years to come. The Nicaraguans themselves concede that they do not have access to economic and financial data from the Sandinistas to prepare a rational economic recovery program. They do not expect to have such a plan prepared before July or August.

The $50 million to be used to assist Nicaragua clear its arrears with the Multilateral Development Banks will probably not be disbursed in this fiscal year. The Nicaraguans inform us they will need $300 million this year to clear their arrears, and their plan for obtaining that amount of money is simply to appeal to the nations of the world to contribute. They primarily want the $50 million as a way to persuade other nations to contribute, along with the United States. The Nicaraguans concede clearing the arrears will be a lengthy process, and they do not expect any new inflows of assistance from the Multilateral Development Bank until sometime in 1991.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Provide an appropriation of $200 million in the Fiscal Year 1990 Supplemental and give the Administration the flexibility to reprogram funds among the programs. This amount, two-thirds of the request, should be an adequate infusion of emergency assistance for the Chamorro government to carry them through September 30th. In the coming weeks, the Fiscal Year 1991 regular appropriation bill for Foreign Operations will be brought to the Senate Floor. Additional aid to Nicaragua will undoubtedly be included in the 1991 appropriation bill. The President has asked for $200 million. More can be provided if the Foreign Operations Subcommittee is satisfied that these funds are being spent in accordance with a well documented economic recovery program prepared by the incoming Chamorro government.

2. Because of concerns about the ability of the Nicaraguan Government to manage and control these funds, we include language in the Supplemental that requires the Administration to notify the Committee before each obligation. In addition, we include language requiring semi-annual audits of the assistance programs by the Inspector General of the Agency for International Development, and a complete audit of the entire program by the General Accounting Office at the end of Fiscal Year 1991.

BEGINNING RECOVERY AND RECONSTRUCTION

(FY 1990—$300 million)

Production Inputs: Catalyst for Economic Recovery—$128 million

Agricultural Inputs ($30 million). To address the urgent needs of the first planting season, a balance of payments program to finance the importation of seed, fertilizer, agricultural chemicals, spare parts and equipment is essential. Two of the three annual planting periods take place during the remainder of FY90, the "primera" or principal season (May-June) and the "postrera" or secondary season (Aug.-Sept.). Together they represent approximately 80% of the demand for imported fertilizers (approximately 60,000 MT) and improved, hybrid seeds (rice, corn, beans, potatoes and vegetables) all currently in critically short supply. In addition, spare parts, agricultural chemicals and equipment are lacking to initiate the rehabilitation of traditional export crops such as coffee and bananas.

Petroleum Imports ($25 million). One of the greatest challenges in rebuilding the devastated economy will be the supply financing of oil and petroleum products. Nicaragua's import bill for these products which have been supplied mostly by the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe whose continued support is uncertain, was $37 million for the first half of 1989. Early indications from the Nicaraguan Transition Team are that its current supply of crude oil will be exhausted two to three weeks after the inauguration. Therefore, resources will be made immediately available for the importation of three to four months of critical petroleum products. Additional petroleum supplies would be sought from Mexico and Venezuela.

Private Sector Production Imports ($73 million). Foreign exchange will be required for the reactivation of the private sector. Resources will be made available for the importation of raw materials, equipment, intermediate goods and spare parts to rehabilitate existing facilities and stimulate new activities in both the industrial and agricultural sectors. This assistance will support the development of a policy reform agenda and the initiation of reform actions.

Normalizing Relations with the International Financial Institutions—$50 million

Arrears to IFIs ($50 million). These funds would assist the GON to clear arrears to the IBRD and IDB, estimated at about $234 million. They would be disbursed as part of the multilateral effort. The IFIs would be expected to review and redesign lending programs in Nicaragua in order to be able to begin disbursements in a timely fashion once arrears are cleared. US arrears-clearing support would be linked to a sound policy framework supported by the IMF.

Repatriation and National Reconciliation—$47 million

Voluntary Demobilization and Repatriation of Resistance in Honduras ($32 million). These funds would be used to support the demobilization of approximately 60,000 Nicaraguan Resistance members and families back to civilian life ($30M). The Observer Group for Central America (ONUCA), with the consent of the UN Security Council, may have a role to play in supporting the voluntary demobilization and safe conditions in Nicaragua in accord with the Central American Peace Process ($2M).

Refugee Programs ($15 million). The U.S. contribution to refugee activities under UN auspices would be approximately $15M: $10M for approximately 60,000 Nicaraguan Registered Refugees (UNHCR) and $5M for the reintegration of a larger, yet undetermined number of repatriating displaced Nicaraguans (CIREFCA).

Reestablishing the Foundations for Democracy and Economic Growth—$75 million

Emergency Employment ($10 million). In the spirit of national reconciliation and to address even higher unemployment levels, now estimated at 27%, as a result of the demobilization of Resistance and reduction of the Sandinista armed forces, an emergency employment program would be initiated. Jobs would be created for activities such as the repair and improvement of existing public infrastructure, rehabilitation of schools and health clinics, renovation of deteriorated community facilities and other identifiable maintenance projects.

Medical Assistance Package ($4 million). Medicines, medical health personnel, equipment, supplies and services would be provided. Medicines and supplies would cover requirements for traumatic injuries, as well as more common treatments for endemic ailments such as severe malnutrition. This package would also respond, in part, to the medical needs of those victimized by years of civil strife in Nicaragua including the Resistance, civilians and the Sandinista Army personnel.

Economic Policy Planning Public Management ($1 million). Immediate access through a grant to a qualified Central American management institution to provide economic planning and public administration expertise to assist the new GON in overall economic policy planning including privatization, public sector management and public/private sector dialogue.

Assistance will be provided in the following area based on a sound economic reform plan:

Democratic Initiatives ($5 million). After a long hiatus, democracy has returned to Nicaragua. However, the institutions and processes of democracy are weak, and will require significant strengthening. This will be addressed through assistance to democratic institutions, a free press and democratic labor organizations.

Health Sector ($10 million). The health sector is confronted with an ever-increasing population (with growth in 1988 of 3.4 percent) and a shortage of foreign exchange. These funds will provide medicines, and pharmaceutical supplies and equipment currently in short supply. Particular emphasis will be given to child survival/maternal health programs which focus on nutrition, oral rehydration, and immunization.

Private Sector ($15 million). The Nicaraguan private sector has suffered from ten years of attempts to dismantle it; however a core remains and its reactivation is critical to renewed economic growth. Support will be provided to private sector associations to give private entrepreneurs access to technical expertise, new technology and investment to allow them to rehabilitate and modernize their operations.

Education Sector ($15 million). The rapid population growth, lack of budgetary resources and drain on human resources caused by the civil war have placed an enormous strain on the education system in Nicaragua. Critically needed commodities such as paper, textbooks, library materials and classroom equipment will be provided for primary schools. Scholarships will allow socially and economically disadvantaged young leaders to receive technical training in the U.S. University textbooks will be provided in technical fields, including economics, management and the physical sciences.

Agricultural Sector ($15 million). Agriculture accounts for roughly one-quarter of Nicaragua's GDP and employs more than 40 percent of the labor force. Over the past 10 years, mismanagement, lack of foreign exchange and poor economic policies have battered the agricultural sector. Resources will be used for small farmer credit, improved inputs supply and production marketing systems.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am almost ready to yield the floor, but I want to yield first to my distinguished friend and ranking member on the Democratic side on the Appropriations Committee, Mr. INOUYE, chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, who, as we all know, has been a leader in recognizing the needs of the Indian population in this country, and who has certainly worked hard to do what he could do within our budgetary restraints to meet those needs; and the fact that there is $50 million provided in appropriations for our Indian health facilities, it is, in very considerable part, because of Senator INOUYE and because of his interest.

I would like to yield to Senator INOUYE, after which I will very briefly sum up and make a couple of points in summation and put some material in the RECORD, and then I will send the amendment to the desk.

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii for such time as he may require, without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague, the President pro tempore of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. President, I rise this day with the unanimous support of the members of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and if I may be so bold as to suggest, with the unanimous support of 1,300,000 native American Indians of this country, on behalf of Senator BYRD's amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. President, clean water, water that is safe to drink, and waste disposal systems are taken for granted by most Americans. But on most Indian reservations and Alaska Native villages, these utilities simply do not exist or are inadequate or unsafe. In fact, in the continental United States, over 25 percent of the Indian homes have neither running water—and I am not speaking of safe water, just running water—or waste disposal systems. Though we knew the needs were many, in fiscal year 1990, the Congress appropriated $30 million for the sanitary facilities construction program. The hearing of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs held last year told us of the shocking magnitude of the problem.

Mr. President, the Indian Health Service, that is the administration service, told us that since 1979, appropriations for all years met about 2 percent of the need for sanitary construction facilities in all Indian areas for existing homes.

In Alaska alone, the Indian Health Service says there is an immediate need for spending at least $145 million just to raise all facilities to minimum standards for the community and safe waste disposal. For Indian communities in all States, the conservative estimate is that $800 million in construction funds are required, and those closest to the problem believe the need to be at least $1 billion.

Here we are speaking of $50 million, Mr. President. We cannot be inattentive to a problem of this magnitude, where our neglect will contribute to already existing problems of hepatitis B and other infectious diseases which will further reduce the health status of our fellow Americans.

Yet, the administration has chosen to eliminate sanitation construction funding in fiscal year 1991. Therefore, in 1991, Indian Health Service facility budget request contains no new funding for Federal or tribal construction of sanitation facilities. While the entire backlog of unmet need estimated at $676 million can be documented by the IHS, the administration did not request funding for this program.

Mr. President, in the interest of eliminating this backlog, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act Amendments of 1989 require the IHS to devise a 10-year plan to resolve this problem. We have reviewed this plan and are certain that the funding provided by this appropriation will ensure that at least 5 percent of this need will be filled in fiscal year 1990.

So if I may, on behalf of the native American Indian population of the United States, thank Senator BYRD for his leadership on this amendment. We have a long way to go to honor our commitments made to native American Indians and Native American Alaskans and should, at the minimum, provide assistance to secure water and sanitation facilities in Indian country.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague, the President pro tempore, for his time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank my colleague, the senior Senator from Hawaii, for his excellent statement and for his support and the fine representation that he has made and continues to make on behalf of the wonderful citizens of his great State of Hawaii and also the American Indians throughout this country.

I am not opposed to foreign aid, Mr. President. I wish to say that again. I do not oppose exercising our responsibilities as a world power. We have certain responsibilities. We cannot shun them, we ought not shun them, we must not shun them, and we will not shun them. But I do believe that America's foreign aid budget needs to be scrutinized in the light of our budget situation and our domestic needs here at home.

As the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, God knows and I know the straitjacket we are in when it comes to appropriating moneys to meet the needs of our people here in this country. It is becoming more and more difficult. The needs are growing, and the constraints that are upon us are such that it is very depressing to chair this committee and realize that the committee cannot meet, this Senate cannot meet the needs of our own people—the health needs, the education needs, the infrastructure needs out there, building and rebuilding our roads and our bridges and community facilities and our schools, and providing the research that is needed to keep our country on the cutting edge of technology. We can go on and on and on and on down the list.

It is not an easy job. It is not all that onerous either. It is difficult to have to say no to your own constituents.

We just do not have the money. So I think it is time that we examine more carefully requests that come before us in the foreign aid field. We are forced to do that. I believe it was last year there was an agreement with the administration on the budget, but it fenced off defense and fenced off foreign operations. Why fence off foreign operations? What is so sacrosanct, what is so untouchable about the foreign operations budget that we want to fence it off, not to touch it?

Mr. President, the time has come to limit that foreign aid budget and give it the same scrutiny we give all other areas of the budget. And let us remember who pays the bill in the final analysis, the American people.

Let us remember that this body has a responsibility to carefully spend the people's tax dollars, not only on our domestic needs, but we have a responsibility to carefully scrutinize the budget requests when it comes to foreign operations. We have a responsibility to carefully spend those dollars. We are the stewards of the American people who send us here. So why should not someone arise and say let us stop, look, and listen before we jump?

Let us begin to stop the pattern of throwing money at the foreign aid budget. That is what we have been doing. Let us meet our responsibilities abroad, but let us do it wisely and well so that we do not neglect the dire needs of our own people, our own flesh and blood.

Business as usual has to come to a stop. We have to begin to get our priorities straight. We are a world power. America carries the responsibilities as a world power. But we will not stay a world power if we do not begin to take care of the myriad problems within our own shores.

This amendment starts us in that direction. It says whoa, wait a minute, wait a minute, just hold on a minute; is that dollar justified, or is it not?

So we are going three-fifths of the way, 60 percent of the way, $300 million of the $500 million request, to say nothing of the $540 million request that we fulfilled in February for Panama.

The environment concerns, health concerns, education, children, measles—we have moneys in this budget, thanks to Mr. BUMPERS, to deal with measles, to deal with the outbreak, to provide help, vaccinations—and all the rest need to come first in our consideration.

If we do not start to address these needs now we may have no need for a foreign aid program in the future because we will have become a diminished power without the resources in our economy to continue to be a power in the world. We just cannot continue to give and give and give and increase that national debt and increase the interest that we pay on it every year without asking some questions. The goose that laid the golden eggs is going to die and we are going to help kill it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point a list of the major sites within the nuclear defense complex.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAJOR SITES WITHIN THE NUCLEAR DEFENSE COMPLEX

Feed Materials Production Center, Ohio.
Reactive Metals Inc., Ohio.
Mound Plant, Ohio.
Y-12 Plant, Kentucky.
Savannah River, South Carolina.
Pinellas Plant, Florida.
Pantex Plant, Texas.

AMENDMENT NO. 1524 TO THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 2, LINE 11

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators JOHNSTON, INOUYE, FORD, ROCKEFELLER, BURDICK, WIRTH, BINGAMAN, HARKIN, SHELBY, PRYOR, HEFLIN, MIKULSKI, and myself, I send to the desk the amendment about which we have been talking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. FORD, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. HEFLIN, and Ms. MIKULSKI, proposes an amendment numbered 1524 to the committee amendment on page 2, line 11.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 13, strike the ".", and insert the following:

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the additional amount appropriated to the "Economic Support Fund", to remain available until September 30, 1991, which shall be made available only for assistance to Panama, shall be limited to $300,000,000.

The following sums are appropriated for the following purposes:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION AND CONSERVATION SERVICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For expenses to carry out section 201(k)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 for 1990 crops damaged by a natural disaster in 1989, $13,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary shall spend not less than the amount appropriated herein.

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION PROGRAM

For additional expenses to meet the present emergency needs of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, Emergency Conservation Program, $8,000,000, to remain available until expended.

FOOD AND NUTRITION SERVICE

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN [WIC]

For an additional amount for necessary expenses to carry out the special supplemental food program as authorized by section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786), $12,300,000, to remain available through September 30, 1991.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

INDIAN HEALTH FACILITIES

For an additional amount for provision of domestic and community sanitation facilities for Indians, $50,000,000, to remain available until expended.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT

For necessary expenses for "Environmental Restoration and Waste Management", including the construction and acquisition of necessary plant and capital equipment, as authorized by the Department of Energy Organization Act (Public Law 91-95), $200,000,000, to remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I rise very briefly to reiterate my very strong support and cosponsorship of this amendment. As I said a moment ago, the basic issue that this amendment poses is whether the $120 million, which in our amendment is devoted to emergency priority needs in this country, should be spent in this country or whether that same $120 million, which does not relate to priority or emergency needs in Panama, should be spent to Panama. It is that clear. There is no doubt that the premise upon which this amendment is put in and offered to our colleagues is a correct premise.

I repeat that there are items in the present legislation which we seek to amend which would send money to Panama which have no emergency basis at all; $130 million to clear arrearages with multinational banks, neither caused by Operations Just Cause, not related to it in any way. That debt existed long prior to Operation Just Cause, and even if the money provided in this legislation were sent to Panama, it could not be paid off for months.

There is no justification at all for putting money in this legislation to provide for payment of multinational banks.

As to development of tourism, there is $30 million to develop tourism in Panama. Whether or not that is justified ought to await hearings, but it is clearly not justified by virtue of an emergency urgent supplemental.

The same thing is true for the construction of schools, some $20 million. Schools may or may not need to be constructed in Panama. They may or may not be. They are certainly not the responsibility of the United States. It may or may not turn out to be in the interest of the United States to construct schools in Panama. Schools remain in need and unconstructed in this country. But clearly there has been no predicate laid, there has been no foundation laid for $20 million for construction of schools in Panama.

The list goes on. Within the $420 million provided in this legislation there is more than $120 million which is not of an emergency nature. And what we do in our amendment, as we have been discussing, is to provide $50 million for Indian health services, $200 million in budget authority for environmental restoration at our nuclear plants. There are leaking tanks at Hanford, some 150. The radioactive in these tanks needs to be stabilized because it is producing a chemical reaction within the tanks which is producing hydrogen gas which can present a real danger. And the Fernald uranium dust has spurred lawsuits in Fernald, OH, which has resulted in judgments against the Department of Energy, and the problems remains unfixed. So we put $200 million in budget authority to deal with that problem in Rocky Flats, to deal with the problem in Fernald, to deal with the creeping volatile organic compounds which threaten in Rocky Flats to pollute the water and poison the water supply for the city of Denver.

Mr. President, we provide for emergency conservation programs that are unfunded in this country. We provide for $13 million for the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out provisions in the farm bill relating to natural disasters, to farmers in this country, and particularly farmers in my State who have suffered crop damages between 60 percent and 100 percent. We provide for special supplemental food programs, the WIC program for pregnant mothers and very young children who are without proper nutrition.

Mr. President, that WIC Program pays off, according to a Harvard study, $3 for every $1 spent in terms of dollars which need not be spent later to, in effect, repair the health of the damaged children.

So, Mr. President, it is emergency domestic needs in our amendment taking priority over nonemergency foreign needs. It is time we got our priorities straight.

I thank, once again, the Senator from West Virginia for his leadership. I am delighted to join with him as a cosponsor of this amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his joining as cosponsor, for his strong support, and for the consistently good work that he does as a member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, I want to leave the floor at some point. I would like to get a little bite to eat. But I do not want any consent given to any Senator to call up an amendment, to set this amendment aside, because I certainly want to protect the Republican leader. I made a commitment to him earlier today. Other amendments could be called up otherwise, and the Republican leader would be out of his amendment because there is not much remaining in outlays from which to fund his amendment.

So, I insist on this amendment, the pending amendment, remaining before the Senate and that should not be set aside while I am off the floor.

I will be back to protect my own rights shortly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if nobody else is seeking recognition, I am shortly going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

But hearing again some concern, I will only reiterate, whatever happens, my judgment on Nicaraguan aid. I originally had been a member of the party that was led by the distinguished Vice President of the United States, Vice President QUAYLE, yesterday. I did not go because I stayed here to work on this issue. We have a lot of other matters in it, and I could not leave. I was very proud the Vice President went down to represent the country.

As I said yesterday on the floor, I commend President Bush for sending the Vice President and a distinguished bipartisan group of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. I think it reflected, and should reflect to the Nicaraguans, the interest of this country to have that high-level delegation. I believe the Vice President is the highest ranking U.S. official we have sent there in a decade.

But, Mr. President, just so everybody understands, in Nicaragua and everywhere else, Nicaragua is going to get $300 million out of this package. I said earlier, to Nicaragua the $300 million they are going to get here is like money in the bank. In fact, as I said earlier, it is more money than they have in all of their banks put together, in hard currency, in the whole country.

So it is a tremendous infusion of cash and it is going to come. Some aid has already gone down that went down there yesterday in the nature of emergency aid. That $300 million is going to come.

No matter what the discussion is about this amendment before us, we should understand that the amendment by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia does not cut that Nicaraguan aid. The amendment of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia reflects some very serious and very urgent needs of the United States of America, but does not cut the Nicaraguan aid and nobody should suggest otherwise.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I wonder if I might attract the attention of the distinguished Senator from Vermont on the issue of Nicaraguan aid, a subject which he and I had discussed for a moment earlier today?

The concern which this Senator has expressed on the failure of the Senate to act on this foreign aid bill turns on not only the question as to whether the $300 million will be in hand—although I have every expectation, as does the distinguished Senator from Vermont, that it will be in hand—but the timing.

As I said earlier, I made the trip to Central America and was in Nicaragua and talked to President Chamorro and others there. One of the key problems which they brought to my attention was planting season was about to pass. So it is not only a question of the reasonable certainty of the funds being in hand, but the question as to when they will be in hand.

I would be interested in the assessment of the distinguished Senator from Vermont as to what the timetable will be which he anticipates, as the chairman of the subcommittee, in terms of conferencing and in terms of final action and in terms of the transmittal of the dollars as it impacts on the planting season there. We ought to keep our eyes on the issue of speed, because the money is urgently needed. And perhaps he has some information as to the Contra issue, specifically on the reintegration of the Contras into their society.

So as we move forward on this bill, and I am hopeful we can get it completed today, I will be interested in the timetable.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator will yeild, if he would like an answer from me I will give it right now, because otherwise he will have to wait for a while. I am supposed to be at another matter. If he will yield?

Mr. SPECTER. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. The planting season I understand is until late May. I will make a suggestion to the Senator, if he is as concerned as I am, and I am sure he is. This is assuming there would be no money for planting—and this would be the first year in 200 years Nicaragua is not going to plant anything unless we send aid, and I would not want to leave anybody with that idea. The fact is they already have some ability to plant. This would be the first time in several hundred years they have not, otherwise. So I assume they are ready to start some planting. It is late May.

If they want to use U.S. aid for it, I suggest the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania call his friends in the administration and urge them to get off the dime and get an AID mission down there and get some U.S. people in place. They could do it with or without this legislation, so when the bill is passed they can start using it.

I would hate to see again what sometimes has happened when we have had these dire emergency matters like Panama earlier this year, where we had zipped it through and then weeks later we find nothing has happened because they are still talking about it in the administrational bureaucracy, about getting somebody down there to kind of work the money out.

We have seen this so far this year in Panama, where all of a sudden they said: Whoops, Congress gave us the money and we forgot to put the people in there who were supposed to distribute it.

That is something that can be done right now. I happily join with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania to urge them to go down there. But do not think that somehow they will plant in Nicaragua if this moves, and they will not plant if it does not. After all, we are talking about aid of an extraordinary amount. We are talking about $300 million in aid to Nicaragua.

To put it in perspective, Mr. President, in 42 years, they have received $380 million in aid: 42 years, $380 million. And now, in 4 weeks, another $300 million. My God, this is something that is a dire emergency? Come on, let us be serious. It is as much symbolic as anything else. We are buying $300 million worth of symbolism. The money is going to go, but do not have anybody give the impression that after 10 years of trying to destroy Nicaragua, suddenly it is going to be destroyed if we take 3 or 4 days to try to figure out how we are spending the taxpayers' money around this place. In 42 years, we spent $380 million. In 42 days, we will spend another $300 million. Come on. Let us be serious. As I said, it is money in the bank as far as they are concerned, but it is also more money than all the banks put together. This is an extraordinary amount of money going into that small economy.

While it is coming, we actually ask about Head Start programs in the United States or women, infants, and children, or pregnant women who cannot feed themselves, the child they are carrying, or feed that child when it is born. If we ask to spend a day or so longer to ask that question, Nicaragua is not going to disappear in a day and a half while we ask about poor children in this country.

Let us be serious. There is not one single person in the administration that can stand here with a straight face and say $300 million is really the dire emergency supplemental we need for Nicaragua. They added up and gave the benefit of the doubt on every single cent. If they possibly could, they would come to a figure considerably less than $300 million.

I understand the President has put his prestige on the line on this, and I will back him on that. I voted for the $300 million. But, Mr. President, let us not stand here and think that this is some magic number or that it was put together after deep thought. It was a number as much picked out of the air as anything else.

So, while we are glossing up that symbolism and while we are painting that little sign, if we stop to ask about some U.S. citizens who also need some help and some dire needs in this country, where one out of every five children in this country is in poverty, one out of every five children in this country is in hunger, if we talk about that a little bit for another day or so, my God, Mr. President, do we have so many other things we have to do that we cannot do that? After all, it is the taxpayers' money; it is not ours. Nicaragua is going to get their $300 million. There is no question in anybody's mind in this country, nor in anybody's mind in Nicaragua. If people are a little bit anxious that they get it a day earlier or 2 days earlier, let me remind them $300 million is almost as much aid as has gone down there in the last 42 years.

Let me remind them also that there is a whole pipeline of requests coming in next year's budget for Nicaragua. Maybe if we had not put so much money in trying to develop a covert action policy instead of a foreign policy in Nicaragua we would not have to be spending so much money there. Maybe if we had not been so enamored of the idea of Contras, of military victory, the testimony we heard from Secretaries of State to others, they will march on Managua next year, something we heard for a few years and then people stopped, if we had not been so tied up with that, we would not be in this situation of having to pump money in. We will pump it in. We will pump in $300 million this year and pump in more money next year. I am willing to bet the United States will be asking for money for years and years to come in Nicaragua. In all likelihood it will go.

But let us not forget some of the needs here at home at the same time. There is nothing wrong with that, Mr. President. I am proud to be the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. I have worked extremely hard, along with my good friend BOB KASTEN, and others in this body, to put together a foreign aid bill. I want to make sure that the President of the United States, no matter who it might be, is successful in foreign policy because that is good for the whole country. I come from a State where we really believe in bipartisanship in foreign policy, and I have done everything possible in that committee to do it. But as a U.S. Senator representing the State of Vermont, I am also not going to lose sight of my responsibility to the constituents of my own State and to the other people in this country, because when I stand up there, Mr. President, and take my oath of office, I take it to protect the laws and the Constitution of the United States. That is part of my responsibility as a U.S. Senator.

So I will work to get a bipartisan policy through. I will work to support the President of the United States. Even though I feel $300 million is too much in too short a time, the President of the United States has made that a keystone of his foreign policy with Nicaragua. He has made his statement that he has, in effect, pledged that to them, and I will back up the President on that. I think it is too much in too short a time. I am convinced, after the hearings, the money is not justified, but I will back the President on that because it has become so important to him and to his policy in Central America.

But, Mr. President, if we take another day or another 2 days to determine some of the other needs of this country at the same time, Nicaragua is not going to fall in that time. The money will get there. Nor should we assume that nothing at all can happen in Nicaragua until this happens. Would we be as sympathetic had the Sandinistas won the election? We have done a number of things. The administration, to its credit, has worked very hard to try to end the Contra war. They have lifted the embargo. They have changed the sugar quota. The Vice President and a Senate delegation, led by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] went down there yesterday and gave some emergency medical aid. We will get this money. We will get the money.

Mr. President, if I can be excused, I will yield the floor or suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SPECTER. I have the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. I do have some matters in—in 1 moment I will yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. I am sorry.

Mr. SPECTER. I yielded for a question earlier because the Senator could not wait because he had a commitment 11 minutes ago.

Mr. LEAHY. It is on domestic matters in the Senate Agriculture Committee, Mr. President. I yield back to my good friend from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I shall make a few comments about what the Senator from Vermont just had to say. I shall not ask the questions again which he did not answer. But when President Chamorro said to me that she needed the money for planting, she did not say it with the emotionalism or the volume of the loud rhetoric of the Senator from Vermont, but I do think she was serious and I can tell you she had a straight face.

The issue of planting is a matter of enormous importance. I am not the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, but I used to live in Kansas and work on a farm as a teenager and know that you plant in seasons. When President Chamorro said they needed money for planting, it is more than seeds; it is for equipment; it is for an entire arrangement of an agricultural process. It has been well known, not only as to what President-elect Chamorro said to me when I saw her on April 6, but it has been widely publicized, about the urgency of having the money in hand for the planting season.

I had asked the distinguished Senator from Vermont a rather basic question, and that was, what is the timetable? And he said he could not wait because he had another commitment. I abbreviated the basis of the question and the background of the concern to yield to him. For the next 10 minutes, we heard about one child in five in America being in poverty, one child in five being hungry.

My voting record on the social programs is as good as that of the distinguished Senator from Vermont. When he talks about why we had covert action and why we supported the Contras, my voting record on opposing aid to the Contras is at least as good as the Senator from Vermont because I opposed aid to the Contras on every vote, following the lead of the distinguished chairman at that time of the Appropriations Committee, and distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

When he talks about a straight face, the Nicaraguans, in addition to President Chamorro, talked about the urgency of the need.

I do not believe that this body has discharged its duty on the timetable which we have undertaken here.

I addressed a question briefly to the distinguished majority leader yesterday about that subject, as to why we could not take up the matter right after the Clean Air Act. I did not pursue that beyond his statement that the committee had not reported it out, because the question was what do we do from this point forward. But I do think it is important that we act and act very promptly.

I must express some concern when the distinguished Senator from Vermont says the $300 million is added, but that he has agreed to that request in deference to the President, although he, as chairman of the subcommittee on which I serve, thinks that it is not a necessary amount of money. That, frankly, concerns me because I am interested to know what is the appropriate sum of money for Nicaragua in terms of our subcommittee action and in terms of our committee action.

He talks about the oath of office and being a U.S. Senator. I do not know anyone here who is not, who has not taken the oath of office. The comments really remind me of the old saw about the lawyers. When you have the facts, you pound the facts. If you have the law, you pound the law. If you do not have the facts or the law, you pound the table. We are having a lot of table pounding; we are having a lot of raised voices and a lot of volume. We really have not come down to some of the very basic questions here as to moving the process along.

I am not sure of the figure $300 million. I was, frankly, assured when the subcommittee chairman, the distinguished Senator from Vermont, recommended that figure. And if he now says it is excessive, I wonder about it. But I do not know how we are going to go back and rethink or redo that.

Mr. President, from what I saw in Nicaragua, not only from talking to President Chamorro and to officials in her government, but in talking to our Embassy officials and talking to citizens and talking to a variety of people, there is no doubt in this Senator's mind about the urgency of the need for the aid. I think it is a great shame that the aid was not in hand prior to April 25, yesterday, when Mrs. Chamorro was inaugurated, because there has been a major political brouhaha in Nicaragua about whether the United States would fulfill its commitment, because until the money is in, the money is not in hand. There are a great many steps before the check will be in the mail from the Congress and a great many things can happen. A great many things can happen.

I think it will be in hand, but until it is we do not know for sure, and when is another complicated question.

This bill has a great many issues. This bill has a lot of controversy surrounding it. You know how efficient the Senate is on Fridays. When we finished last Thursday afternoon, we expected four to five votes last Friday. Many of us changed a great many plans. I had wanted to be in Erie to attend the funeral of the mayor of Erie, PA. But I stayed here, as most all of us did, and no action occurred. There was no action on Monday.

So when is it going to be enacted? When is it going to go to conference? When is it going to be enrolled? When is it going to go to the President? And then, when will it be disbursed? I am told that the end of April is an indispensable date, and the money is not going to be in hand by that time.

I expressed earlier today a concern; I said to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who was present on the floor, my interest in discussing the issue of Humberto Ortega.

Then the distinguished Senator from Vermont took the floor and said he hoped nobody was suggesting that Humberto Ortega was kept as head of the army because we were slow in getting the money to Nicaragua.

I do not know why Mrs. Chamorro changed her mind. I know that the command position of the head of the Army of Nicaragua is a very, very important matter. When I arrived in Nicaragua on April 6, Friday after we went into recess, that was one of the first issues of concern which was discussed with the Embassy officials. As I had said earlier, the first item that I raised with President-elect Chamorro was what was going to happen to Humberto Ortega. I expressed my hope that she would not retain him. She did not respond at that time.

I had made the comment that we did not want to trade one Central American war for another and that if Ortega stayed in command of the Sandinista Army he might make the guns, munitions, and other equipment available to the guerrillas in El Salvador.

Immediately upon my leaving, Mrs. Chamorro had a meeting with the President-elect of Costa Rica. When that was concluded, she met the press, Friday afternoon, April 6, and made an announcement that Humberto Ortega would not be retained as the head of the army. Then in the media in the last few days, it surfaced that that was reopened and subject to reconsideration. And now we know from news reports that she has decided to retain Humberto Ortega as head of the army.

One of the questions I posed to the Senator from Vermont earlier today was, why did she change her position? His response was that politics in Nicaragua are subject to a lot of curlicues. I can understand that and the decision regarding Humberto Ortega may have had nothing to do with the failure of the Senate to act on this appropriations matter. It may have had absolutely nothing to do with our failure to act.

But I wonder about it. I think there is a distinct likelihood that the two may well be related because when President Chamorro did not have the $300 million in hand from the United States, and you had Daniel Ortega issuing the scathing denunciation of the United States—and I have not seen the text and do not know the details—but I would be surprised if he did not question our reliability in delivering the money which was not in hand. Then Mrs. Chamorro has to make her own arrangements.

It is probable that she retained Humberto Ortega not because she wanted to, in light of the fact that her closest advisers advised her not to, but she did so because she felt the necessity to retain him. Had the United States been beside her in a stronger position, it seems logical to me that she may well have made a different decision. Perhaps we will hear more about it as time passes.

In any event, Mr. President, I believe that we ought to conclude this bill today. We ought to advance the aid to Panama, and we ought to fulfill our commitments and show Nicaragua and President Chamorro at the earliest moment that we will back her and make her strong and make her successful so that when her term of office is over and another election is returned, we do not have Daniel Ortega and the Sandinistas back in power but we have a government headed by President Chamorro, which shares our values and will bring peace and prosperity and tranquility to Nicaragua.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I just want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he raises a very important and valid point, not only the timing for planting but for many other reasons we should expedite this whole bill.

I was very hopeful, as one of the managers of the bill, that we could complete it earlier this afternoon than even now. It is obvious that we have not reached that goal, and I am uncertain at this time when I could tell the Senator from Pennsylvania the answers to those questions that he legitimately and very appropriately raised: When are we going to finish the bill? When are we going to get to conference? When are we going to get it down to the President to sign? When are we going to get the money disbursed?

I am very hopeful that we still can finish this bill today or tomorrow, in order to present us with an opportunity to go to the House next week and finish the bill. I will do everything I can to expedite that.

Mr. President, we have colleagues on the floor at this time who I know have commitments. Rather than making some of my remarks in response to the other side, I would like to ask unanimous consent at this time to yield to the Senator from Indiana to use what time is necessary to express his views, and without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] is recognized.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for yielding to me, and the Chair for recognizing me.

I come to speak on the pending amendment which is a very important amendment in regard not only to this debate but to the foreign policy of our country.

I cannot stress in any way, without being overly dramatic, what a great moment this poses for us. I am going to try to make some stark outlines of our choice, because I suspect that each Senator will have to make a very important decision, I hope fairly rapidly. I share the enthusiasm of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and certainly the manager of this bill on the Republican side for expeditious action.

Mr. President, both of the situations in Nicaragua and Panama share common elements. The first common element bringing us to this appropriations bill is that the foreign policy of the United States of America was to impose as dramatic, comprehensive and total sanctions policy on the economies of those two countries as we were capable of producing.

As the deliberate policy of this country, we tried to squeeze Panama and Nicaragua very hard, and we succeeded. We did not know the degree of our success until after the turn of events that brought the fall of General Noriega, and the election of Mrs. Chamorro. But we now know. It is clear, and it ought to be clear to Members of this body and the American public that we were enormously successful in devastating the economy of Panama, and of Nicaragua.

As previous Senators mentioned, eight Senators were in Nicaragua yesterday for Mrs. Chamorro's inaugural. It was a very important occasion, in many ways a very tough occasion for politics in that country. It reflected the bitterness and the polarization that spills out.

Imagine an inaugural in a stadium in which half of the seats, approximately 10,000 to 12,000, are taken by those with blue and white sashes and flags, a sea of blue and white backing Mrs. Chamorro, and the other half with Sandinista colors, and the President elect of the country, Chamorro, coming in a white dress, her arms extended, standing there and being pilloried with balloons filled with water, with vegetables, with other objects that were in the hands of people in the stadium.

She courageously, in a gesture of reconciliation, reached out to the opposition. They pelted her. This is at a Presidential inaugural of a country. It gives you some idea of the flavor as the American delegation came in. The Sandinistas were saying, "Death to the Yankees," and not with a twinkle in the eye. They meant it. That was our reception.

If you take a look around that stadium, you see acres, square miles of devastation, where an earthquake hit years ago. Most of the rubble has been cleared up but not a single thing built. The stark outlines of a few buildings and their frameworks are still sitting there years later. This is a country that is flat on its back.

As a part of our policy, we helped bring that about. We were not alone in this. The Sandinista policies for 10 years pummeled their own people. We ought to be clear about that, Mr. President. The Marxist philosophy bankrupted the country. We made certain it did not recover until they had a free and fair election.

In Panama, Mr. President—and the memory of some wane apparently very rapidly—we strived for years, and the rhetoric on this floor resounded with thoughts about the evils of General Noriega. Senators fell all over themselves trying to point out ways in which General Noriega might be frustrated and brought under control. We were ingenious in attempting to think how we could strangle the economy of the country.

Mr. President, I simply find it preposterous to listen to the debate today that suggests somehow there is something wrong with the United States of America being concerned about the arrears in the debts of Panama. We did more than any other country to create those debts, to make it impossible for Panama to pay anybody. We tried to drive them into successive stages of bankruptcy. We have succeeded. We succeeded royally.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does the Senator concur with the information which have received, which is that even if we provide this money it will be months before those debts can be paid?

Mr. LUGAR. I respond to the Senator by saying that Panama is a sovereign country, and it will be the expression of the Panamanians about the speed with which they make their arrangements with the international banks. As a witness of conversations with Vice President QUAYLE—and the two of us were asked by the President to visit Panama and visit President Endara earlier this year. Very pointedly, we asked the President and the two Vice Presidents of the country for assurances that the moneys that we were proposing be utilized in this manner. Those assurances were given.

The sum of money in this appropriation bill are the sums, the best calculations of Panamanian and American officials as to what it would take to liberate loans from the rest of the international community to provide Panama. We have assurances that they will move as expeditiously as they can to make that occur. It is absolutely necessary for the credit of the country.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think the Senator has no information contrary to that which has been given that it may well be months before it will be paid off, and the point being the emerging emergency nature of the $130 million to pay off the loans, not the question of whether or not it is a good idea, but to provide them the money for which to do so, but simply the emergency nature. We are not dealing with something that travels in telecommunications speed. We are talking about something that if we gave them the money, then sometime along about the time that we pass the regular appropriations bill, they may or may not take a loan at all. Is that fair?

Mr. LUGAR. I think the information that we have maybe is the same. My own interpretation of this quite frankly is that the Panamanians have to have assurances, and they have to have at least the will of this Congress, and the figure of the President's hand to do business with these international banks and agencies.

In a technical sense, I cannot argue with the Senator as to what date specific transactions would occur. My impression is however that the assurance, the certainty of the action we are taking, the actual appropriations of money, is of the essence. It is purely an emergency for the credit of the country. I really have not found a dispute at least as I visited with Panamanians about that issue.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wonder if the Senator can tell me what is the emergency nature of the scholarships, the $4 million for the scholarships provided in this matter?

Mr. LUGAR. Well, the answer to the Senator comes at least in other submissions that have come to the Congress, one of which is that adult literacy in some sections of Panama is 87 percent. That is a shocking fact, but it is of the essence in terms of some rehabilitation and restoration of their economy.

If the Senator were to ask me why is education important, a question—there was a question raised earlier about why is tourism important—these are basic elements of a plan for the revival of the Panamanian economy. Without these, the economy does not move. These are basic elements, and they are not very much, but they help provide a jump start, which combined with the facility for credit and if the arrears or promise of the arrears are paid off, may lead to the revival. That is the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Would the Senator agree that of the $420 million, to give $300 million now, in effect, no questions asked, no time to hear the witnesses, no time to really have the hearings; emergency aid ought to be enough to get the job done, get the economy jump started and let the $120 million go through the regular process so they can come in and justify to us? And if the Senator says the case is a strong one, then I am sure the witnesses could make that strong case; would it not be better, keeping in mind that it is only a matter of a few months between now and the end of this fiscal year, and they would have plenty of time within which to make the case for this money and perhaps even more?

Mr. LUGAR. I respond respectfully to the Senator that months have passed since the American activity took place in December in Panama. The situation was dire then and has become more dire since.

I simply respond to the Senator that the difficulty of his proposition is that all of the money was needed a long time ago. In my judgment, it is needed now, and I predict to the Senator that more money will be required.

Hearings were held in the Foreign Relations Committee, at least on the authorization side of this proposition; we heard good evidence as to the value and the timeliness of this request. This does not come as a surprise to many Senators who have been involved in the process.

Let me say, Mr. President, that the dilemma we are facing is one in which the United States has assumed for a long time a foreign policy commitment, and we have helped to devastate a country, Panama, and subsequent to that, we have met—the United States administrative officials and Panamanians—to try and think of how we might revive that economy.

(Ms. MIKULSKI assumed the chair.)

Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, the problem here is that the United States values the relationship with Panama. There has been remarkable debate about the importance of the Panama Canal, about the importance of having a stable democratic Panama as a good friend in perpetuity. And amazingly enough, following the American activity in December and the coming to power of President Endara, who courageously has gone the course of an election last May and two great Vice Presidents of that country who have suffered physical terror and abuse, this country rejoiced that we had this opportunity.

Certainly, in the latter part of December and in January there was no question in the minds of most Americans that in order for the Panama Canal, for our forces, for our relations to be secure, that an expenditure of money would be required. And great care was exercised in trying to find a viable program, of parts that fit together at a minimum cost in outlays to the American Government.

That program was communicated, as I mentioned, Madam President, to President Endara of Panama by Vice President QUAYLE, and subsequent talks have occurred. President Endara will be in this country next week for further conferences with our President.

Let me simply outline, so there is a clear basis for the record, that the United States has made firm commitments to help Panama build its democracy and foster economic recovery. President Endara quickly formed an economic team, and despite all of the press speculation that somehow the leadership is not leaping to the floor, he performed this magnificently. Many persons throughout the world had no right to suspect that the Panamanian democracy born out of this crisis would function with this degree of skill that it has.

Panamanians have outlined and named objectives. They have pointed out to us these facts, Madam President, that since mid-1987—and that is just 2½ years ago—the output in Panama has declined in all sectors—manufacturing production dropped by 25 percent, and construction by 60 percent in that period. That was a direct effect of American sanctions. Real gross national product declined by 27½ percent in that 2½ year period of time, a real drop of 27½ percent. Unemployment went to 25 percent. Urban unemployment, 34 percent.

Those are the facts, and there has been very little to change those. It was in that spirit that Panama came to this country, and initially, a sum of $100 million was mentioned as a potential authorization appropriation.

Specifically, Panama is in arrears with other international financial institutions by $540 million, and the $130 million is absolutely critical to some understanding on the part of those institutions that the Panamanians are creditworthy.

Madam President, I do not propose, nor does any Senator, that the United States finance the entire rehabilitation of Panama. But if they are to be able to help them help themselves, they have to have the ability to borrow. It is extremely important that we assist in enhancing that proposition once again.

Madam President, I appreciate the appeal of the amendment. I have heard at least three Members of this body, the distinguished Members, all speaking about the important objectives in the United States of America. They are important causes. They are popular causes, for each one of us who is humane in this country.

I come not to argue against those propositions and the appropriators, and, hopefully, the appropriate committee people in each relevant committee will deal promptly and fairly with those situations. They may be dire emergencies, and that the appropriators will have to decide.

Madam President, I come to suggest that a very great division is about to occur here in which a suggestion is made that commitments to Panama on the part of our country ought to be truncated even in the face of the commitments that I believe clearly we have made as the people, and I believe that if that action is taken, that Panama's recovery will be stifling.

I believe that the trust and faith that has grown between our Governments and which is very important for the future activities in peace of the canal and of the commerce in our hemisphere, that that is likely to be soured somewhat.

Madam President, we rejoice in the thought now that somehow or other Castro in Cuba is without friends in Panama; that the Sandinistas, as a matter of fact, were badly hurt when they could no longer transfer shipments and launder money. But if there is to be any hope in Central America, Panama was pivotal to that, and we take them for granted now. It happened in December, and memories are very short, and it is now April and we have other causes, both foreign and domestic, but some of us, Madam President, remember the struggle over Panama.

We remember how important that victory was for Panamanians and for ourselves and how important it is that it be retained.

I would simply argue against the pending amendment that however well motivated and idealistic it may be with regard to certain objectives, it is not a good motion, it is not a timely motion; it is a motion that ought not to be made in conjunction with a very important foreign policy objective of our country, namely this assistance for Panama. I hope that the amendment will be defeated and the full amount that the Appropriations Committee has mentioned in this legislation will be forwarded by the Senate for consideration in Congress.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent now to yield to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee such time as he may like without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I thank my friend. I will require only a minute or two.

I wish to clarify one point with respect to the aid to Panama. The President's request of $420 million in aid to Panama included $15 million relating to environmental protection activities in that country.

In view of the fact that I have stated and others have stated the amendment we have today is a strong environmental amendment, which it will explain on its face, I felt that I should also make reference to the $15 million that is requested by the President for environmental protection activities in Panama.

Our amendment would give the administration flexibility with regard to how the $120 million reduction in aid to Panama would be allocated. However, it is clearly my intent, and I will support conference language to this effect, that the $15 million originally requested for these environmental activities in Panama be maintained at that level.

Madam President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for his courtesy in yielding.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to yield to the Senator from New York as much time as he finds necessary without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New York.

Mr. D'AMATO. Madam President, I am going to talk in opposition to this amendment because I think there are just so many reasons why this amendment is full of mischief. No one quarrels with attempting to fund badly needed health facilities or conservation programs, or to deal with crop losses due to natural disaster, or to fund the WIC Program for women, infants, and children. That can and must be strengthened.

But I think it is almost cynical to come before this body at this time and attempt to say that because one would support disaster relief for Nicaragua and for Panama, we therefore place a higher priority on aid to those outside this country than we do for our own people.

I do not think that is something that we should be undertaking. I recognize that there are times that some of us in this body on both sides may use these kinds of senatorial prerogatives, but I think it is wrong. I think it flies in the face of what this Nation is about, not to speak of this body. I think it cheapens it.

LITHUANIA

Mr. D'AMATO. Madam President, I shall depart just for several minutes.

It has just been reported by one of the news organizations that a basic agreement on trade has been reached between the Soviets and the United States. I think there could not be a worse time for such a development.

I am wondering how the Soviets can think we are serious in saying to them, "Listen, you negotiate with the Lithuanians, do not use aggression, do not use economic aggression, do not coerce, but negotiate," when the forces of our Government work away as if nothing serious is taking place, as if the people's cry for freedom in Lithuania is not legitimate, and when we hear that nothing stands in the way of implementing this agreement and signing it.

Lenin once said that the West would sell the Communists the rope that they would use to hang us. That has changed a little. Instead, we are selling at a cut rate the rope that will be used to hang the Lithuanians.

Madam President, this is the wrong agreement. It comes at the worst time, while the people of Lithuania are struggling for freedom. It must be perceived that we turn our back to them and given them the back of our hand. It is a sellout of freedom and, to be quite candid, it is sickening.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. D'AMATO. Madam President, for more than several years, a number of my colleagues and I urged this Government to take strong and definitive action as it related to Panama. Now I see an amendment that would do less than what we promised and what the Panamanian people need to nurture freedom, to give a capitalistic system an opportunity to grow, to set up a bastion of democracy in a hemisphere which is ours, where people go without, where people turn to communism, turn to radical movements, and where we have had a brave people stand up to the dictator. How quickly we forget, as Senator LUGAR said, how quickly we forget the pictures that flashed across the TV screens of the world showing President Endara beaten down, almost lose his life, Billy Ford beaten down. Now they are the President and Vice President respectively of Panama. They stood up against the dictator, and now they say to us, "Give us a chance, give us an opportunity," and we cheapen it. We are going to be one up. We are going to say you would rather vote to give aid to a foreign country than help those in our own country who are in need.

If the appropriators really feel that way and the Senate really feels we have to put more money into a bill, into a program, we have had a long time to do it, but you do not use this kind of technique to come forward and say, "Well, you mean to tell me that the needs of the people of Panama are greater than our own?" That is wrong.

Let me tell you, when I was in Panama this past January and visited the Panamanian people, I saw those who were displaced, and the thousands who are without homes and yet I also saw a spirit of people who had the yoke of oppression lifted off them. They did not look to the United States with hatred and emnity, nothwithstanding the 2 years they had to live with a double oppression—with the economic sanctions that we imposed and that of the dictator who enslaved them, who made them prisoners in their own homes. No. They said, "Thank God, you helped give us freedom."

I was touched, when I went to Mass in Panama City. Father Villanueva gave one of the most eloquent homilies, in which he asked sacrifices of his people and, yes, put a challenge to America. Let me just read for my colleagues part of that. He said, the fact is—

That the United States aided, created, and increased the power of Noriega's absurd Army, such that this isn't a present given to us—but ethically and morally, it justly is a restitution.

He is talking about aid—

I know that this sermon is being accurately translated for you, Senator, and perhaps what you can emphasize to your colleagues in Washington—

Is it not prophetic? Here is Father Villanueva in January, suggesting that we had more than just a little to do with the problems that had befallen the Panamanian people. He said:

What you can emphasize to your colleagues in Washington is that it is a moral obligation and it is just compensation, and not a gift from the United States—all your restitution of what was taken away from us by those who were your unconditional allies: the Panamanian Defense Forces.

Have we forgotten? Have we forgotten the aid, the comfort, the help that we gave to Manuel Noriega all those years? What do my colleagues think about the Panamanian people? How do my colleagues think they are viewing us now? Do we say, well, this is charity? This is aid? They are not entitled?

Then he followed:

Dear brothers and sisters, let us not annoy the Panamanian Government by asking for political positions—

He was talking about the new government—or by dividing up what Noriega—whose balloon deflated in front of El Carmen Church—called the pie. There is no pie left, because Noriega ate the whole pie.

And that is the fact. And yet, notwithstanding what we imposed upon the Panamanian people, not withstanding the importance of the canal, not talking about the national security ramifications and what it means for us to give democracy an opportunity—it is wonderful it is taking place in Eastern Europe—but what about in our own hemisphere? We are not going to help it?

We play these games, and that is what they are, they are games. And they are cheap games. They are not even good. It is not even close. I want to tell my colleagues something. If you want to give more money to these other programs, I will support that. But this is not the way, this is not the time, and that is not what this amendment was designed to do. It plays mischief with important foreign policy, which is important to the survival not only of Panama and democracy, but it will decide whether or not the President of the United States and, yes, this Congress, can keep its word.

Are we going to keep an emerging democracy on tenterhooks? Will Panama have to come back and plead for more? We recognize they are going to have to come back, but should we have them come back quarterly or semiannually? Maybe monthly? Maybe weekly?

For too long, the people of Panama endured. We should not torture them with this convoluted piece of legislation. It should be voted down.

Madam President, I yield the floor to my distinguished colleague from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Madam President, I feel the time we spent on this issue has been beneficial, and I certainly feel we have touched on some very significant issues, both on this particular vehicle and this amendment offered by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

But I think we ought to take a quick moment here, just to keep things in scale. I heard a great deal of talk here today about prioritizing. Somehow we are involved with the great exercise of reprioritizing our expenditures.

I wish I could take that with great seriousness, because the test is not here on $120 million relating to Panama. The real test would be when we take up the foreign aid bill of over $14.4 billion. That is big change, Madam President. That is not $120 million; that is $14.4 billion, divided about half and half, about half for military foreign aid, and about half for economic foreign aid.

We are not playing the game here today with the biggies. We are not playing with the accounts in that foreign aid bill of over $3 billion or over $1 billion. We are playing with our good cousins down south who do not have the kind of political muscle and the political power to exercise in the body politic here.

So let us not kid ourselves, if we are talking about kidding. Let us be very serious about trying to communicate to the great public out there what we are going to add, in this amendment, to the special supplemental food program known as WIC. There is no one on this floor who has supported that program more consistently for full funding than I have, and I believe very strongly in that. That is an account of over $1 billion, and it falls far from covering the eligible people in that account and in that program. Adding $11 million for the WIC Program is not reprioritizing the Nation's spending policies. So let us also be pretty clear as to what we are saying.

Then, to say that somehow we are reprioritizing the Nation's spending policies by putting $32 million in outlays to the Department of Energy environmental restoration and waste management activities of this Nation, let me remind my colleagues that we are, today, looking at a $155 billion bill; a $155 billion bill to clean up that nuclear waste. And the proposal by the administration is for $2.2 billion next year.

Take the Hanford, WA site for example; we have, over the last 4 years, starting in 1987, appropriated $173 million; $218 million; $232 million; $483 million; to a total of $1.1 billion. And now to try to say to the public that we are reprioritizing and we have new values and we are now going to take greater responsibility in the allocation of our funds by appropriating $32 million for the entire Nation? That is not playing against the biggies.

What about that $14.4 billion, divided $7 billion plus for foreign military aid? Let us not put it in contrast to Panama, for $120 million, to try to claim that we somehow have gotten religion and we are going to see the Nation's needs now met.

What would this vote be if we started with the military foreign aid, saying let us deduct this to return to the WIC Program maybe $500 million; or to the cleanup, another billion, and take some of that $7 billion out of that foreign military aid? I do not think we would be wearing our badges of virtue if that were the question before us.

It is amazing how we can, with respect to these little figures representing Panama, that is nobody's political threat or nobody's great political interest, perhaps, or nobody's great political influence, say we are going to take from Panama and give to WIC and take from Panama and give to the Indians and take from Panama and give to the cleanup of the nuclear waste.

I think we ought to keep this in scope and scale and perspective.

We can play with our press releases any way we want to. That is every Senator's right. It is an individual matter. But as one of the managers of this bill, if we want to say "no" to $120 million to Panama, that is one issue. That is fine. Let us argue it and debate it on that basis. But to get into this great matter of prioritizing and reestablishing our priorities in this country vis-a-vis this amendment just really does not make good sense.

I would be happy if this could become the new priority of our spending. But I am not going to be one who says it has happened if this amendment is agreed to—on the basis of this amendment, that we are going to pay more attention to our women and infant children; we are going to pay more attention to our Indians, our environmental problems, our agricultural problems, and all these other things. I will wait for the real test to come. I would like to be in the position to raise this amendment and offer some additions to this amendment for all these programs and deduct it from the foreign military aid, and see how many speeches we get here in support of that.

I am not just theorizing; I am going by the past record, Madam President, as the Senator from Maryland has known from the many times we have joined on occasions. Let us cut that nerve gas weapons system in our military Pentagon budget. Let us cut the SDI; let us cut the M–1 tank; let us cut the B–2; let us cut all these other weapons systems. Boy, we do not get very far, do we? We can raise the awareness of the Nation about hungry people and homeless people, about unmet medical needs, and all the other things, 37 million Americans not accessed to medical help, but, boy, that is not an argument that carries a great number of votes on this floor. It is postured and positioned and juxtapositioned against military spending.

So, I just feel very strongly that we are dealing here with a bill that we owe to the Panamanian people. This is not a matter of the administration versus the Congress, Madam President. Let me remind us again, and I repeat, it was a 99-to-1 vote to say to the President, and I quote from the resolution that passed in this body:

(2) The Congress hereby supports—

(A) the efforts of the President of the United States to restore constitutional government to Panama and to remove General Manuel Nortega from his illegal control of the Republic of Panama:

(B) The President's utilization of the full range of appropriate diplomatic, economic, and the military options in the Republic of Panama:

So we were party to that action that created the basic damage in Panama. I, therefore, do not see this as a typical part of a foreign aid package. This is an overdue bill. I do not know whether they can use it in the next month, 2 months, or 3 months, but let me say this. This bill is past due to the Panamanian people. Past due. We ought to pay up our indebtedness in that sense. I think that whatever is required to pay for the damages and to put that country on a stable economic base is in our national interest, as well as in the Panamanians' interest. We are not gifting anybody. We are not giving them a free ride. We are not providing some kind of wasteful foreign aid program here. We are paying off a debt.

Mr. CHAFEE. I wonder if the Senator might yield for a question?

Mr. HATFIELD. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. CHAFEE. Do I understand the original amount that came here on the floor, the $420 million, is less than the President requested?

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator is correct. The President asked for $500 million. We have authorized only $470 million. The House appropriated $420 million. So we are restoring it, in the amendment that was acted upon in the committee carried by a 15-to-14 vote, to the House level of $420 million.

Mr. CHAFEE. Still, that is $80 million less than the President requested?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CHAFEE. So this bill in no way is just a patsy bill giving the President everything he asked for. It starts right off with an $80 million reduction.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CHAFEE. I want to thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I am delighted that the amendment is attracting the passing of attention that it is getting. That encourages me to believe that indeed perhaps we are on our way to taking a closer look at our priorities.

I agree with my distinguished Republican counterpart that we need to look at military spending, too, and we are. That is exactly what we are doing. That is already underway. That is where this money is coming from. This money is coming out of defense. So we are already taking a look at defense, the so-called peace dividend. I am for applying as much of that peace dividend as we can to domestic needs.

We hear the plea that we owe this to Panama, that they are waiting. Madam President, we owe our first attention to the needs of the American people. They have been waiting likewise. They have been waiting for years. I also agree that the regular bill should be examined carefully, but why not start now? This is the starting point. Why wait until the regular bill? Start now; $200 million is not just exactly chicken feed; $200 million is no small amount—or $120 million is really what this amendment amounts to.

So I welcome the attention that is being given to the amendment. I understand that at some point a point of order will be made against it. Of course, that requires 60 votes to waive, but I have my waiver motion in my pocket and that likewise is debatable and waivable. So perhaps we will have more speeches on both sides on the question. Let us air it out well and let the American people see and know what is going on.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, it is with a degree of reluctance that I take the floor this afternoon to speak on the matter before us.

I say reluctance because it has been a rare occasion indeed in my 9 years as a Member of this body when I have found myself in the regrettable position of opposing not only a person for whom I have the highest regard or a person with whom I hold the highest degree of affection, who has been extremely generous and kind to me over these 9 years in the Senate, and whose lead I have followed, I think, about—I was going to say 99 percent of the time. That was true a week ago. Now it is down to 98 percent of the time.

I regret that because he is someone I care about, respect, and his leadership has just been phenomenal on any number of great issues.

This is a matter that I would not normally take the floor on. But I bear the responsibility of chairing the subcommittee that deals with Latin America as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, along with Senator PELL, who was involved a few days ago in the reauthorization of the emergency assistance for Nicaragua and Panama.

I think I, as my colleagues will in some cases painfully recall, have approached the level of wearing out my welcome on matters involving Latin America over these past 10 years. I think some of my colleagues see me coming, and they assume I am coming to bore them, harangue them, or bother them about some matter affecting either El Salvador, Nicaragua, and lately Panama.

I must say to my colleagues just as an aside, I had that wonderful opportunity yesterday to attend the inauguration of Mrs. Chamorro in Nicaragua, along with a delegation made up of a number of our colleagues, Vice President QUAYLE and his wife, and a number of other distinguished guests. It was in fact a great day, a day that I questioned in my own mind whether or not we would ever see occur; that is, the inauguration of a freely elected person in Nicaragua. Frankly, I think the wisdom of this institution over the years in no small measure attributed to the events that occurred yesterday.

In my own view, had Contra aid prevailed and the Arias plan failed, we would not have had an election on February 25, and certainly there would have been no inauguration on April 25. But because President Arias did prevail, and because a majority of the people in this body supported that effort, then I think it is proper to say that we can take pleasure, direct pleasure, in the events that occurred there yesterday, and only hope that in the coming months that Mrs. Chamorro and her new government can succeed in establishing a firm and solid basis for a democratic nation.

Along with my colleagues as well, an overwhelming majority supported, I believe, the actions taken by the Bush administration on December 20. There again I think all of us regretted the fact that we had to choose that option, but I think most who followed the issues in Panama respected the fact that President Bush had on a number of occasions tried to convince the Organization of American States, individual Latin American leaders, and individual regional organizations to take a more direct and explicit role in trying to deal with the growing and dangerous problem posed by General Noriega. The fact that military action was used on December 20 was a choice that I think most people understood and accepted reluctantly but nonetheless approved that particular action.

As we all know, 26 Americans lost their lives in the hours immediately following that invasion. A number of others of course were injured. We now know at least 200 or 300 Panamanian civilians also lost their lives that day. It is always a sad day indeed when any single American loses his life in defense of their country or in defense of freedom or democracy.

I would like to believe that all of us accept the fact that these young men did not lose their lives in vain, but lost them in the defense of liberty and freedom, lost them in the defense of tryng to make it possible for a nation that was caught in the strangulation grip of a thug, where democracy had been aborted in the May and June elections of the year previous, or that year in fact, and the nation looked as though it were heading for nothing but further turmoil and difficulty in the months and years ahead.

So I happen to believe, and I know my colleagues believe that young Americans were fighting for us, fighting for freedom, and fighting for our interests when they lost their lives on that December morning.

But today we come to the issue of whether or not the amount appropriated by the committee by the narrowest of margins is a sufficient amount, an adequate amount, or whether a lesser amount would do the job. This is a difficult call. We are talking here about a difference of $120 million, which is not insignificant but in the context of an overall bill and in the context of foreign aid it is not necessarily an overwhelming amount if you start talking about the entire Federal budget.

But I would like to suggest that what is involved here is not so much the dollar amounts. That is important. I do not minimize that. But it is vitally important it seems to me that everywhere possible the administration and the legislative branch ought to try and work together in the conduct of our foreign policy.

I say that as someone who has disagreed with the administration. I would never suggest that any Member of this body, particularly this body, ought not to exercise their independent judgments when they have disagreements with any administration in the conduct of foreign policy. But I think we all accept the notion that wherever possible we try to sing out of the same hymn book when it comes to advancing the interests of the United States.

So it has been suggested that there are funds in here for Panama which are not necessary in the context of emergency assistance. I have listened to some of the comments made, and I am not going to quarrel with individual comments about some of that assistance.

But I think there is here a far more important question in how this will be read, how it will be viewed, and how it will be interpreted throughout the Americas when it comes to the issue of whether or not the United States can live up to a commitment made to provide the assistance that Panama needs at this particular point in order to establish democratic roots so that we may never have to revisit the issue of military action in Panama, or anywhere else for that matter in the region.

I would point out to my colleagues here that this is a bill that obviously does more than just provide foreign aid. As I understand it, about one-third of the bill appropriates money for foreign assistance and two-thirds of the amounts appropriated are for domestic spending here. I gather the report goes through and recites the various programs at the domestic front including some military assistance. I guess military programs are included in this package.

We all know that foreign aid has never been a terribly popular program in this country. I have often said that the quickest way I know how to get a standing ovation in my home State is to stand up and suggest that in this particular year I am not going to spend any money on foreign aid. I find many of my colleagues find that an appealing approach; that foreign aid many people have a difficult time understanding the relationship between the investment in foreign aid, and how those dollars directly benefit the interests of the United States particularly when you start talking about foreign aid to countries where there is little or no constituency here at home to support those efforts.

We will all recall because it was only a few weeks ago that we all supported very strongly the necessary funds for Hungary and Poland. In fact, we had a rather lengthy debate about whether or not the funds were adequate. As I recall, many of us on this side of the aisle felt we should do more for Poland; more for Hungary. I think we accepted the notion it was in our interest, that these were countries that had just been achieving their freedom and independence, and that now is the hour to strike to provide the kind of resources that would help them consolidate that freedom, consolidate that democracy, and consolidate that liberty. I suggest there are probably dollars that were included in that package which would fall out of the parameter of an emergency.

I presume there were dollars there that were not going to be spent immediately that could have been held back and waited for another year before they were put forth. I think that is probably true in any package you look at. But I think we also felt as a body here that this was a historic moment that ought not be lost upon us. None of us wanted to be looking back a year or 5 or 10 years from now having said to ourselves, "Why did we not make that bit more of a commitment if it would have made the difference?" If anybody would suggest, for instance, if we had put a few more dollars into certain countries and freedom had been achieved, then those dollars would be well invested.

I am suggesting here, Madam President, reluctantly that I cannot predict and say, golly, if you do not do what the committee did, Panama will fall. That is ridiculous. I do not believe that. I also know that, knowing Latin America, things have been volatile over the years. This government is new and it is very fragile, and I will tell you far more fragile in Panama than in Nicaragua, because this government assumed power after December 20, having won the election but having been deprived of final count in June of the same year.

Mrs. Chamorro was elected, of course, on February 25 and inaugurated yesterday. There is a sense that there is pure legitimacy about her government. The Endara government lacks that same sense of absolute sense of legitimacy in the minds of some people in the region. So in a way it is a bit more fragile, even though they have consolidated their position and eliminated all of the opposition, particularly the opposition around General Noriega. So I urge my colleagues that we try and stick with this package.

(Mr. LAUTENBERG assumed the chair.)

Mr. DODD. I saw yesterday a number of leaders throughout the region at the inauguration, and all of them, without exception, expressed the hope that we would do whatever we could to be of help to these countries, to see to it that they had a chance to get going.

I say to those who would question whether or not these dollars could be better spent at home, of course, they could. I regret that we spend any money overseas. I wish we did not have to spend a nickel anywhere in the world. I would like to take all of our resources and spend them here and let everybody be strong and healthy enough around the world and democracy be established well enough that nobody had to look to any other country to borrow or to lend to in order to meet its needs.

I could use that $120 million for a good child care program. My colleagues know how much I care about that program. Or women, infant, and children programs. I need better schools in Hartford and some of our other poorest cities. Weaver High and Buckley High could use that $120 million.

I would be a fool to suggest otherwise to anybody here today. Unfortunately, the world is not that way. As much as all of us might like it to be so, the world is configured differently. Unfortunately, there are nations and people who are struggling to survive.

One of the things that makes us different than almost anyone else on the face of the Earth is that we have recognized that, and we understand that our wealth and our riches and our independence and freedom are not something we ought to own exclusively, but that other peoples were born with certain inalienable rights, such as life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and that we would like to see them have the opportunity, where they have been deprived of those rights, to achieve them.

What we are talking about here today is investing in nations to give those people the opportunity to enjoy those rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. So the $120 million ought not really be the subject of the specific debate, but whether or not we ought to try and make the commitment to invest in these nations and give them the chance to succeed.

Mr. President, I say to you, for instance, that I would hope that at some point here in the not-too-distant future we would be talking about an American common market, watching a single market emerge in Europe, and the Pacific Rim countries continue to make it difficult for our industries to penetrate their markets and to sell to their consumers.

We need to try and improve the economic condition so these countries can grow strong, become partners and become consumers of American produced goods. Obviously, they are going to achieve that, in my view, if they have democratic institutions, embrace democratic values, and have the kind of infrastructure that makes it possible for them to get moving.

So, Mr. President, I realize that there are very few people who are Panamanian Americans or who may be Nicaraguan Americans, except in certain cities or quarters of this country. I do not know if I have but a handful in my own State that would be directly interested in this subject matter, except that I would like to think that my constituency at home understands that investing in fledgling democracies is in our interest.

Investing in a new, struggling government in Panama is in our interest. While it may not be seen in direct returns today, I suggest that in the not-too-distant future, we will applaud and not regret the fact that we have made this investment, and people throughout this country, while they would like to see the dollars come directly to them, understand this is a good investment for America. It is America doing what it does best, sharing with those that are less privileged in our own society but trying to make it possible for others to get on their feet.

Mr. President, it is with reluctance and for the reasons I stated at the outset, because I find myself on the opposite side of the authors of this amendment, whom I care about, whose leadership I follow and whose judgment I trust, but I believe in this case what the administration has put forward; while not absolutely correct—anyone that would suggest that some number is magical is certainly deluding not only themselves but everyone else, or trying to. But we have a number here. The message has been sent out, and the headline tomorrow is going to be, if we do not do that, that we failed in our responsibility, in our commitment.

I do not like to have to say that but, unfortunately, that is how it will be read in most capitals throughout this hemisphere.

So I hope we can support the committee proposal as it has come out, which the administration and House suggested. We do a lot here, again, for domestic programs, although not as much as the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee would like. I find myself in agreement with him in the priorities he has chosen, but for the reasons I stated, I believe that America's interest is to do the patriotic thing today, do what we have held ourselves out as in the eyes of the world on our willingness to make commitment, to stand firm and support nations seeking freedom in this particular year.

I point out to my colleagues, for instance, that our European colleagues are coming up with a fund now of $24 billion for Poland and Hungary. That is billions of dollars they are going to provide. They have also announced collectively that they are going to have to pull back on their commitment financially to Latin America because of the growing concerns in their backyard, if you will, in their neighborhood.

I would like to think that we might say to our Latin friends, our neighbors, that we will step forward here, not with $24 billion, not with $2 billion, but to step forward here with, in this case, $420 million for Panama. That is a fraction of what is going to be offered to our European struggling, new democracies in that part of the world, and we are participating in that, and I want to see us continue to do so.

These numbers are a pittance as compared to what is being offered by European democracies, industrial nations, to help their neighbors get on their feet. I would like to think at this hour that we at least would be able to provide the amounts that have been offered in the legislation. So with reluctance and regret, Mr. President, I oppose the present amendment and support the committee markup.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objections, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators BUMPERS and LAUTENBERG be added as cosponsors to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I thank both Senators.

I ask unanimous consent that the name of Mr. CRANSTON be added as a cosponsor to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to make it clear at the outset that I am strongly supportive of aid to both Panama and Nicaragua. I feel we have a responsibility to assist these countries in the difficult task of reconstructing their ravaged economies, as the United States has done much to contribute to their destruction. Yet I must concur with many Senators here who believe that the President's figure of $420 million is too high. We should not be giving dollars to support tourism in Panama at a time when vitally important domestic programs are drastically underfunded. We should not be designating money for scholarships as "emergency assistance" at a time when 150,000 poor women and children are about to be dropped from a Federal food assistance program in California alone.

VITAL NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING FOR WIC PROGRAM

Mr. President, I want to address one very important program which would receive additional funding under the Byrd amendment. The amendment would provide an additional $11.6 million in additional outlays and $12.3 million in additional budget authority for the WIC—Women, Infants, and Children—Food Supplement Program.

This money is vitally needed to prevent drastic cutbacks in this important Program. The WIC Program has proven over and over to be one of the most effective ways of improving the health and lives of low-income pregnant women and their children. Providing food supplements to pregnant women at nutritional risk is one of the best ways to increase the likelihood that their babies will be born healthy and with a real chance to develop and grow into productive citizens.

I learned this morning that because of unanticipated increases in specific food products used in the WIC Program, the State of California anticipates eliminating an estimated 150,000 participants from the California WIC Program for the second half of the current fiscal year. Ths means that approximately 34,000 low-income pregnant women, infants, and children will be cut off the program each month for the remainder of fiscal year 1990. I have also been advised that 24 other States will face significant cutbacks.

This level of cutback would be a disaster for low-income families in my State and throughout the Nation. It would mean that close to one-third of the 480,000 low-income pregnant women, infants and children currently receiving WIC food supplements in California would be cut off from this program.

Mr. President, the WIC program now only reaches about half the eligible population. We ought to be serving all of the eligible population. WIC has been proven to save babies' lives by reducing low-birthweights and the incidence of prematurity. Providing food supplements to low-income pregnant women and their infants is cost-effective and humane. This modest transfer of funds will not solve the funding crisis which this program is experiencing, nor will it enable us to achieve the substantial expansion of service that is direly needed. But this increase is a step in the right direction and should be followed by substantially higher increases in funding in subsequent appropriation bills.

I ask unanimous consent that an article which appeared in today's Sacramento Bee, describing the devastation that will occur in California if additional funds are not provided immediately for the WIC Program, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Sacramento Bee, Apr. 26, 1990]

STATE CUTTING FOOD AID FOR WOMEN, KIDS

(By Nancy Weaver)

Faced with the threat of a $14 million deficit, state health officials are planning to drop 155,000 to 170,000 low-income women and children across California from a special nutrition program.

The Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program, which provides store vouchers to women and children who are in danger of not getting adequate nutrition, will be cut because of increasing food costs.

Within a few days, state health services officials will send out letter to local officials stating that the WIC caseload must be trimmed from nearly a half-million people to 309,000.

The letters confirm what state officials had told local WIC administrators and public health advocates in conversations during the last two weeks. They are appealing to the governor and legislature for help.

About 34,000 women and children each month will learn that their aid is ending in the state's desperate attempt to keep the program from going broke, state officials said.

Recipients are certified for six months at a time, and for many their aid simply won't be renewed. The first ones affected will be those whose six-month certification lapses Tuesday.

"It's traumatic and really a disservice to the community," said Sonia Parker, chief of maternal and child health programs for Sacramento County. "We'tell them that because of this directive from the state we can no longer continue them in the program."

No children over the age of 12 months, even if they have health problems such as anemia, will be served by the WIC program under the new guidelines. it is believed that most infants and pregnant or breast-feeding women will continue to get food vouchers from the WIC program.

State health officials told local WIC administrators that the program will run out of money in September unless the cuts are made.

Operating on $195 million in federal funds. WIC has never had enough money to serve all the eligible women and children. California doesn't contribute any state funds. The WIC program is designed to serve children up to 5 years of age who meet other health and income criteria. In California, only about a fourth of all eligible women and children are served by the program.

Stephen Kessler, the state's acting division chief for family health, said Wednesday afternoon that the costs of milk, orange juice, infant formula and other healthy foods bought for the program have gone up about 13 percent in the last year. An increasing caseload in many counties also has hurt the program, he said.

"We are significantly serving more WIC clients than we have federal funding available," said Kessler, "Anytime we're having to reduce 154,000 women and kids from the WIC program, it's indeed a serious situation."

The WIC program has grown by nearly 100,000 clients since last year, when the state solicited bids and won $50 million in rebates from a company providing infant formula for the program.

"We have a very high number of very high-risk individuals who need the program, and the doors were wide open so they came in," said Eloise Jenks, director of the Public Health Foundation, the largest WIC agency in the state. "Now, we're having to shut the doors again."

Lynn Simonson, a nutritionist with the Alameda County Health Department, said she dreads notifying the families that won't be allowed to continue with the program.

"This is going to be really hard to tell mothers that we have to take all kids off after one year—even with really sick kids," Simonson said.

Local WIC program officials and other advocate groups are asking the Legislature for money to help with the deficit and urging state officials to consider less dramatic cuts.

"The state has chosen the heaviest bludgeon approach. They should be taking a scalpel to it with a lot of expertise and finesse," said Laurie True, a food policy specialist with the California Rural Legal Assistance Foundation.

Steve Baranov, director of the Research and Education Institute at Harbor UCLA Medical Center, said the state's projections about higher costs may be too pessimistic.

"We believe there may be alternative, less drastic measures" to lower food costs, he said. His staff is working on a plan for nutritionists to tailor the vouchers for each individual client so that some may get less food, and more clients can be served.

A bill sponsored by state Sen. Marian Bergeson, R-Newport Beach, to provide $4 million in state funds for WIC is pending and that request may be increased to $7 million because of the threatened deficit.

"For every dollar that's invested in WIC, there's a savings of $3 later in health care costs," Bergeson said.

Chris Kahn, Bergeson's legislative assistant, said other emergency steps to avoid cuts are being discussed. "Appeals are going to be made to the governor, senators and other Assembly people so they also will explore ways of bailing out the program," he said.

WIC officials said many of the children and women who will be dropped are in need of supplemental food. "We will be taking something like 33,000 children off our program," said Jenks of the Los Angeles WIC office. "All of them are either ill or less than 18 months old. None of those children will be on the program."

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON].

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I know that it is a well-intentioned amendment. I have said, as I made a number of public statements, it is time we take a look at foreign aid. I think we ought to take a look at all of it, not single out the small country of Panama at a rather critical time.

I certainly share the concerns expressed by the distinguished chairman of the committee and chairman of the subcommittee, Senator LEAHY, and others with reference to foreign aid. I listened to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana talk at great length about foreign aid, but only as it applies to Panama.

I must say I think we are responsible in a large part for the devastation of the Panamanian economy. I think that was justified; the sanctions were imposed because of the Noriega government, the Noriega dictatorship.

I can recall way back in 1978 when we were debating the Panama Canal Treaty, I voted not to give the Panama Canal away and that is an asset of several billions of dollars. I think the RECORD will reflect that even then there were a couple of us who were talking about Manuel Noriega and Torrijos and saying you should not turn over the canal to people like this, you should not turn over the government to people like that.

As it turned out, we were not prophets, but we just happened to call it right, because after the death and plane crash of Torrijos, Noriega became the maximum leader in Panama.

I remember at that time a lot of debate on the importance of Panama and the importance of an orderly transfer of American property to Panama, and many of us argued at the time about the cost. We argued about the drug traffickers. We should not be turning over an asset of that size with leadership that we anticipated that country would have.

It was a close vote. As I recall, one vote made the difference—or there were two votes in fact, one on April 18, 1978, one on March 16, 1978.

But the larger point I make is this: I am certainly prepared as one Member of the Senate to work with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee in reviewing foreign aid, period. But to say we are going to review foreign aid only with reference to Panama, if we are going to start basing foreign aid on a per capita basis, then there are going to be a lot of small countries going to be in real trouble if it is going to be based on population.

So it would seem to me that all the things the distinguished chairman has in mind if we can reduce aid to Panama and allocate it somewhere else, it would probably be laudable. And there may be other countries where we ought to take a look at foreign aid and allocate some of that to the American people. That might be laudable.

I do not have it in mind, but I assume if we look, if we had a total review of the foreign aid programs, we could possibly make some very drastic changes.

I do not share the view expressed by some of my colleagues: Oh, we ought to just take part of the peace dividend or raise taxes or vote to spend more money on foreign aid. I have a feeling that many of those who make those statements probably would not vote to increase foreign aid if there was a RECORD vote. And there may be some RECORD votes on foreign aid this year or next.

But I would say that Nicaragua and Panama are certainly important. They are emerging democracies, just as Poland and Hungary are emerging democracies, and we could hardly wait to push through an $800 million package for them. We almost had a race between the two parties on who could spend the most and who could stand up and say, "Well, we are for the emerging democracies" more, Republicans or Democrats.

The distinguished majority leader and myself just met with the President of Venezuela, President Perez. I remember visiting him in December. Of course, they produce a lot of oil and we are going to be short of oil, and we are going to be importing more than 50 percent of our oil before long. I remember him telling me a number of times in our visit that America should look south, as well as to Eastern Europe; that we have emerging democracies in our own hemisphere and they are very important to us, they are important allies, they are friends.

And they did not have their hands out, but they said what they were concerned about is that we were going to be so consumed with Eastern Europe that we are going to find it very convenient to slash any aid programs in any Latin American country. We are proving today that he was right.

If it is Poland or Hungary or Czechoslovakia, or maybe some other Eastern European country, certainly they deserve our help. I am proud to have played a part in the package we passed.

I believe the administration has made a case, and I think the amendment should be defeated. Then, if the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee want to start a review of foreign aid, I think they will find a lot of us willing to help.

Let us not single out this small country, particularly where our Government is responsible in a large part for the economic devastation and the position they are in today.

We can draft amendments around here that certainly are enticing and attractive, sort of home consumption amendments. We could do that with aid programs to other countries, too. So, if we are going to start a precedent today, just picking off one country at a time, I think it is a mistake. In my view, it should be a broad review. It can still be done this year. And, if it is done, I will commit to the chairman right now that I will try to be helpful.

But to some of those who voted for the Panama Canal billions of dollars, and then today say we should not give $120 million to Panama, I find that hard to understand, particularly when there was a forewarning that people like Noriega would take over Panama. That is precisely what happened.

So for all the reasons stated, on this side of the aisle and by others, I hope this amendment will either be tabled or defeated. I think it is also subject to a point of order, which is a 60-vote requirement. There may be other parts of the bill; maybe the whole bill is subject to a point of order.

In any event, speaking as the Republican leader on behalf of the administration, I would certainly urge my colleagues on this side and the other side to defeat this amendment either through tabling or by an up-or-down vote.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate voting record on the Panama Canal Treaty votes of March 16, 1978, and April 18, 1978, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of Mr. KENNEDY be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, in a few moments I am going to make a motion to table the Byrd amendment. I do not in any way want to cut off debate.

I have had a discussion with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and others who are interested in the amendment on that side. I think all of us agree that we have had, now, a complete discussion. So in a few moments, I am going to move to table the Byrd amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KASTEN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. Could we have an understanding somehow as to a time when there would be a vote? I wonder if this has been discussed with our majority leader and minority leader, because there may be some Senators throughout the Hill right now, and on a tabling motion there will not be any debate once that motion is made.

Mr. KASTEN. The reason I prefaced my comments by saying "in a few moments," I say to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, is precisely that. Our leader has indicated to me that we are prepared to go forward with a vote within a few minutes, and maybe in the process of a few points that I am going to be raising here, we can see if it would be convenient for the vote to occur in 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. If we could check with our leader, too, perhaps we can agree on a time? Senator SASSER is here, and he wants to speak.

I will not interfere with the Senator any longer. I just wanted to raise that alarm.

Mr. KASTEN. I will yield the floor, and the Senator from Tennessee can make his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin for yielding to me.

Mr. President, I rise to add my strong support to the amendment of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator BYRD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I think we can all agree that our distinguished friend from West Virginia understands the art of legislation. This amendment by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I think, is characteristic of his vision. I think it is a worthy amendment, Mr. President, because it clearly defines the issues that are before the Senate this afternoon.

The amendment that is offered by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee is about the priorities of this Nation. Where are we going to place the budget priorities of the American Government, here in the decade of the 1990's?

In these days of declining domestic productivity relative to our trading partners in Western Europe and Japan, in this era of staggering fiscal budget deficits, how should we spend the hard-earned money of the taxpayers of this Nation?

Mr. President, the amendment offered by the President pro tempore gives us an opportunity to cast a vote today for the people of the United States. We can either vote to meet the needs of the people of this country or, conversely, we can cast a vote for foreign aid that is unnecessary, in this Senator's view.

The Byrd amendment is very carefully drawn. It frames the issue perfectly, and the question is: What comes first around here, the needs and aspirations of the American people or more foreign aid?

I completely disagree with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee that the time has come for us to carefully examine our foreign aid expenditures. This is not 1948. This is not 1958. This is not 1968.

This is 1990, and this country is borrowing $300 billion a year to finance the operations of the U.S. Government. So we are not a Nation now with infinite resources, as perhaps we thought we were 20 and 30 and 40 years ago. Clearly, we are still a wealthy Nation, and as still the wealthiest Nation in the world, we have certain responsibilities to help needy allies, to help them help themselves, but not, I submit, at the expense of our own people, not by failing to take care of the pressing domestic priorities that are faced by this Nation.

I, frankly, cannot go back to my native State and face my constituents and tell them that there was such an emergency in the country of Panama that I voted to give Panama $30 million for the development of tourism because it was an emergency situation. There are emergencies and there are emergencies. Natural disasters in this country are emergencies. The inability of poor families in Appalachia to provide adequate nutrition for mothers and children is an emergency. In my State of Tennessee, fully 60 percent of the women and infants and children who would otherwise be helped by the WIC fund are not getting those resources, those valuable nutrients, simply because there are not adequate financial resources, we are told, to fully fund the WIC program.

There is a lot of talk about native Americans and the state in which they find themselves as we move down this decade toward the year 2000. Some of our friends from the West tell us there is an extreme state of emergency in Indian housing in this country, as far as our native American population is concerned.

I do not need to tell anyone in this body of the need to accelerate the cleanup of our nuclear facilities around this country, including my native State of Tennessee at Oak Ridge. That priority represents an emergency, I say to my colleagues, here in the year of the environment, less than a week after Earth Day.

Contrast those emergencies with providing $30 million to aid tourism in Panama. Is that an emergency of equal significance? Or providing $4 million for scholarships to Panamanian students, is that an emergency? Certainly we would like to see the students of Panama well educated. Certainly, we would like to see all who are able in Panama to go to a college or university. But how about the young men and women of this country who also aspire to higher education at a time when we have sharply escalating college tuition costs here in the United States?

Yes, I am in favor of providing $20 million to build new schools in Panama if we have the money and if our school system here in the United States is not without need. But how can we say it is an emergency to allocate $20 million to the country of Panama to build new schools when we know that there is a crisis in education right here in the United States?

How about providing Panama $130 million to repay loans from multilateral banks; is that an emergency? Are we to go on the money market and borrow an additional $130 million from our friends, the Japanese, so we can give it to the Panamanians so they can repay their loans to multilateral banks? The question comes, who is going to pay the debts of the United States of America that are accruing at the rate of over $300 billion a year? Who is going to pay off the deficit of the United States of America—this Government's deficit—that we have seen go from $900 billion in the space of a decade to now an indebtedness that exceeds $3 trillion?

Mr. President, I submit that the people of this country have been very generous with Panama. Following the invasion there, we released to the country of Panama, if memory serves me correctly, in excess of, $400 million. If this amendment is approved the bill that is before us today will provide another $300 million for the legitimate emergency requirements of Panama. And I say to my colleagues, we are talking about a country with a gross national product of only $5 billion, and in the space of less than 6 months, the U.S. Government will have transferred over $700 million to Panama. That translates out to a figure of about 18 percent of Panama's total GNP that has been flowing from the Treasury of the United States to the Government of Panama in less than 6 months. So we are already doing our share in assisting the people of Panama.

The distinguished chairman's amendment makes clear that in an emergency supplemental, we are going to provide emergency funding, and we are also going to defer those amounts which do not constitute an emergency. Yes, we do need to carefully consider our foreign aid responsibilities. As the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee has already pointed out, the President of the United States is requesting more money for Panama than we have provided to the country of Panama for the last 42 years. The President's request would provide $215 for every man, woman, and child in the country of Panama.

I remind my colleagues that we only provide $158 per capita for education, training, and employment funded by the Federal Government in the United States. If you add up how much we spend in the United States for community and economic development, for energy, for agriculture, for natural resources and environment, we spend only $172 per capita. Yet, we are going to send $215 for every person in the country of Panama under the President's proposal.

I ask, Mr. President, where are our priorities? I say that my priorities fall with those of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee. He knows that there are needs in this country which exceed the need to provide unnecessary foreign aid that is not an emergency in this emergency supplemental appropriations bill.

The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee knows that there are emergencies in this country. He knows there are quiet emergencies in small little houses all over Appalachia where mothers and fathers are looking for funds to try to provide adequate nutrition for a baby that they are expecting, to see that the mother has adequate nutrition, or adequate nutrition for a growing child up to the age of 5 years.

I submit it is an emergency when these children and their mothers, whether they be in Tennessee or West Virginia or South Carolina or wherever, cannot get access to the WIC Program simply because there are not enough funds for it.

I commend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for his leadership in trying to allocate some funding to meet this quiet but desperate domestic emergency.

Mr. President, I think the distinguished chairman, by his amendment, helps put the priorities of the United States straight. Yes, we favor additional aid for Panama, but we also favor flowing some of these funds to meet these desperate emergencies that we have right here in the United States, the emergencies of our own people and of our own constituents and of our own citizens.

I say when you have a choice between unnecessary foreign aid that can be deferred, when you have a choice between providing $30 million for developing the tourism industry in Panama, or providing funds for the women, infants and children's feeding program, my vote is for the women, infants and children of this country.

Mr. President, I commend the distinguished chairman for setting our priorities straight today, and I urge, Mr. President, the adoption and approval of the Byrd amendment.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I have great respect for the work of the Senator from West Virginia, and for his effort here today. His amendment, because he has identified many worthy domestic programs in need of additional funding. And while I could support increases in funding for these domestic needs, I cannot do so based on the debate today.

The proponents of this amendment would have us believe that we are faced—at best—with a choice between equally valuable ends. At worst, the argument goes that we should not ship our taxpayers' money overseas to solve the problems of those on some distant, foreign shore when people here at home are more deserving of the help. The argument is that worthy as helping others may be, helping them does not help us.

Mr. President, helping Panama does help us. And the money spent there will directly benefit Americans—in the war on drugs, and by avoiding consequential spending of taxpayers' money in areas as diverse as immigration, military security, and social programs.

Panama is not a marginal interest of the United States. First, there is the Panama Canal, which the United States is slated to return to Panamanian sovereignty under the treaties now in force. Second, there is the history of Panama as a pipeline for drugs to the United States. Operation Just Cause, which we launched to topple the sordid and incompetent Noriega regime, was a costly investment in a vital American interest—a stable and democratic government in Panama.

The assistance to Panama that would be reduced by the pending amendment is not marginal or optional. The funds that will go to pay Panama's arrearages to multilateral banks are crucial, because they will help reopen lines of international credit that Panama needs to revive its economy.

Should our aid be insufficient, the Panamanian economy will deteriorate. The consequences of which could be civil disturbances, perhaps the takeover of the current government by another corrupt dictator. Unless we move forward with a comprehensive package of assistance now, we risk throwing away the lives of 23 American soldiers and 3 civilians who died in Operation Just Cause.

What are the impacts in the United States if we do not help Panama now? We don't have to look too far back in the past to find the answers.

MILITARY COSTS

According to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, maintaining security in the Canal Zone during the Noriega years added $150 million a year to our defense costs.

We have about 13,000 troops in Panama. Those young men and women are at risk. And, believe me, their deaths or injuries matter a lot back in the U.S.A. to their parents, and ought to matter to Congress.

The development assistance in this bill will ease the crisis in unemployment that would lead to civil disturbances and put our troops at risk.

IMMIGRATION

We already have millions of illegal aliens crossing our borders. Poor people, living on the fringe. Unless the situation in Panama improves we could see thousands upon thousands of Panamanians coming to this country with all the social costs that such mass immigration occasions.

WAR ON DRUGS

First, I want to discuss money laundering. Noriega's Panama laundered literally billions in drug money. The first step taken by the Endara government was to agree to put much tougher rules in place regulating bank transactions in cash. The institutional assistance aid in this bill is designed to help the Endara government keep that pledge.

Second, let's not forget the past use of Panama for drug transshipment. Noriega's Panama was a major transshipment point for drugs from elsewhere in the region. How big? We'll never know. But, in 1986 alone, before Noriega went rogue, the DEA and the PDF seized 900 kilograms of cocaine worth nearly $1 billion on the streets of our American cities. The next year, the effort netted 1,446 kilograms of cocaine worth more than $1½ billion on American streets.

The importance of the Panama Canal, the need to protect our youth from the drugs that could find a way to our shores via Panama, the additional risks to our American service people in Panama and the 35,000 civilians there, the increased social costs to handle an influx of illegal immigration, these matter to the citizens here in America.

It is imperative that we move quickly and decisively to shore up the Panamanian Government and revive the Panamanian economy. It is imperative for Americans. We can benefit Americans by approving the full package of aid for Panama we have before us today.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I would like to make a statement in support of the Byrd amendment under consideration today. As my colleagues are aware, this amendment would shift money within the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill from Panamanian aid to a number of areas of domestic concern. While I do not want to belittle the importance of the United States commitment to Panama, I feel that given our country's deficit, and given the many pressing needs at home, more money in this supplemental appropriations bill could and should be spent within United States borders.

The largest portion of money in this amendment would be sent toward environmental restoration and waste management activities at Department of Energy [DOE] facilities. This is an account that profoundly affects Washington State. At the Hanford facility in Washington, we have tanks full of highly radioactive wastes that could explode. We have plutonium residues in the ventilation systems of a plutonium finishing plant. We have an environmental budget that falls short of meeting cleanup needs by more than $300 million in fiscal year 1991 alone.

Nationwide, the Department of Energy is short of the manpower and expertise needed to adequately address health, safety, and environmental needs at its facilities.

While shifting $32.5 million to DOE cleanup in 1990 will not solve all of the environmental problems faced by Hanford and other Department of Energy facilities, it will be a good step toward addressing this problem. Further, by putting this additional money in this particular bill, we are acknowledging that cleaning up DOE facilities is, indeed, urgently needed.

This amendment also contains critically needed funds for the special supplemental food program [WIC]. It would provide $24.4 million of additional funding for local health clinics to provide supplemental foods to low-income women, infants, and children who are at nutritional risk. In recent testimony before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee hearing in Seattle, WA, several witnesses spoke of the vital role the WIC Program plays in helping drug abusing pregnant women to properly nourish their unborn children. Drug abuse in pregnancy is one of the most pressing health care issues in our Nation today. If ever there was a dire emergency, and a need for immediate assistance to citizens of our own country, this need must certainly rank near the top.

Recent studies and press coverage have drawn attention to the truly deplorable conditions existing in Indian housing projects on many reservations in this country. This amendment would direct funds to the Indian Health Service to begin addressing the backlog of sanitation requirements for the most pressing needs that have been identified. The present backlog is estimated to be $650 million, and while the funds made available under this amendment would make only a small contribution toward the reduction of this critical health problem, it is needed immediately.

As I noted at the beginning of my statement, Mr. President, I do not intend to write U.S. overseas commitments off. If we are wishing to address dire emergency needs in this bill, though, perhaps we should also look at cleaning up the messes in our own back yards.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, we are going to try to put together some kind of format by which we can agree to a vote, I would hope, at 5 minutes before 6. I see the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from South Carolina, both on the floor, would like to speak. Is it possible that we could allocate that time?

Let me, therefore, ask unanimous consent that a vote on the Byrd amendment—and it will be a motion to table the Byrd amendment—occur at 5 minutes before 6.

Mr. WIRTH. Reserving the right to object, who will allocate that time and how much time will be allocated? The Senator from Colorado would like to briefly comment in support of the Byrd amendment.

Mr. KASTEN. I will put myself in a position to try to allocate that time. First of all, how much time would the Senator like?

Mr. WIRTH. A minute and a half or 2 minutes.

Mr. KASTEN. A minute and a half, 3 minutes and 5 minutes. And that will be that I would end up with about a minute and a half or 2 minutes. Let us try to work within this rough understanding. I ask unanimous consent that a vote occur at 5 minutes before 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I do not see how the Senator's arithmetic works in the 10-minute period. That is Wisconsin arithmetic.

Mr. KASTEN. Five plus three is eight, plus a minute and a half is nine and a half, and I will speak for a half a minute.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Oh, half. I thought the Senator said a minute and a half.

Mr. KASTEN. I am hopeful my friends will cooperate by each shaving a minute or maybe 30 seconds off and we could work this out. I would like to yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, the unanimous-consent agreement is agreed to. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this debate this afternoon really is not about the support of the American people or the support of the United States Senate for the restoration of democracy in Panama. Clearly, it is not. There is a uniform sense in this body and among the American people of support for the restoration of democracy and the building of democratic institutions.

But, Mr. President, what really, basically, has taken place is that the President of the United States has said that there is $800 million in the defense budget that can be allocated to Nicaragua and can be allocated to Panama. What the Senator from West Virginia is saying is that if he can find $800 million for Panama and for Nicaragua, he can find funds to deal with some of the most critical needs facing the American people.

This is the first debate on the peace dividend, and it has been initiated by the Senator from West Virginia. Those of us who are supporting the Senator from West Virginia are saying we support the restoration of democracy in Panama. But not all of the administration's request for Panama—$500 million—is for an urgent need in that nation. Some of the purposes in the administration request can surely wait for the normal appropriations process. As the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out, the lifting of the sanction against Panama has already provided an infusion of resources; and the additional $300 million proposed in this amendment is a clear demonstration we are committed with additional resources. The remaining administration request can be accommodated by the Appropriations Committee through its regular process of markup for the 1991 Aid Assistance Program.

I am convinced that the Panamanian people and those who are involved in the restoration of democracy will find the American people are going to continue with their support. But this vote, quite frankly, Mr. President, is saying this: We have other urgent needs which ought to be accommodated in an urgent supplemental. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia shifts the priorities of the administration's request to some of the most critical needs of the American people. That is the issue, and I hope the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will prevail.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I would like to yield, if I could, 4½ minutes to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will try to limit my remarks, Mr. President. Let's be clear that this is not a debate with respect to finding $600 million for one purpose and then finding $600 million for the other. It is a debate strictly with respect to Panama and Nicaragua. I emphasize this point. Indeed, this is the reason I rise because I make no pretense to being the mother superior for Central America. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, along with the Senator from Vermont, presented the amendment in the Appropriations Committee.

I ask unanimous consent that this chart be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HOLLINGS. On this chart, the Senator from Massachusetts will see what the emergencies were just 48 hours ago. The emergencies presented by our distinguished chairman were Chile Development, Caribbean, Namibia, Development Fund for Africa, Eximbank, Exim (I-Match), Refugee and Migration Assistance. That is what the emergencies were 48 hours ago.

Now, when we voted on that in committee, I knew the Senator from West Virginia felt strongly about it, but I felt equally strongly that we not pinch pennies with the President in his judgment on Central America. Nicaragua is a basket case, and Panama after Noriega, after the ransacked banks, and in the wake of all the economic sanctions we imposed, Panama is another basket case. Accordingly, I thought what we ought to do is give the full amount, the $300 and $500 million.

In the vote Tuesday in the Appropriations Committee, by a mere one-vote margin, we adopted the House figure of $421 million. We cut it back from the $500 million to $420 million, and then of course we went along with the sum for Nicaragua of $300 million.

Now I have been up in the Budget Committee all day and they tell me Senator BYRD has an amendment, now, to make the package more attractive to me and Senatbr DECONCINI. I do not know whether that is the case or not. But we were the two Democrats who did not submit to the discipline. I was told that the amendment includes Indian health services, which Senator DECONCINI is interested in, plus the items that I am definitely interested in; that is DOE, environmental restoration and waste management activities, the Hugo-related agricultural emergency conservation program, and WIC, the supplemental food program which is dear to my heart. I wrote a book on the hunger crisis; toured areas of the country where hunger existed; and I worked with our late leader, our friend the Senator from Minnesota, Senator HUMPHREY, when we started the women, infants and children's feeding initative under the agriculture bill.

So I am put in a dilemma. I want to make it 100-percent clear that when I vote for aid to Nicaragua and Panama, I am not voting against the environmental cleanup in Savannah River or Hugo or WIC. Everybody knows my position on those issues.

I am going to work to fully fund every one of them. However, it is quite obvious to me that by changing the list of emergencies within a brief 48-hour period, the chairman is seeking the votes to cut the sum for Panama. We happen to differ on that. I intend to vote for the full amount.

But I could not let this particular debate and vote occur, and have my vote misconstrued. We all know how the campaign consultants distort your record, running ads that claim, oh, back in 1990, you voted against WIC, or back in 1990 you voted against Savannah River, or back in 1990 you voted against Hugo relief.

This is what brings me to the floor, which I had not intended to do. Specifically concerning Panama, I would simply add that I have been there. I have followed events there. I have talked to the Ambassador from Panama. I have talked to President Endara. I know Secretary Eagleburger went down and took the measure of their needs. I think, yes, if the Senator from West Virginia is correct and we do not need this amount for Panama——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used all of his time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I can amend my remarks later on.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator be allowed to finish his sentence at least.

Mr. HOLLINGS. If we do not need those moneys in Panama, then the distinguished chairman of Appropriations can show me where the money is being wasted. In that case, I would very definitely go along with him. And I would vote to cut at that point, when they are coming back for a full appropriation.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, thank you, very much.

I want to associate myself with the comments of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] and the devastating analysis of the expenditure of money, and support the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Senator BYRD].

I would like to open one other window on this and that is the cleanup of nuclear weapons complex alluded to by the Senator from South Carolina. We have a major problem at the Rocky Flats plant in Colorado. The administration requested $9 million. Since that time we have changed contractors because the one there was not doing the job. We have had a major Federal raid on the facilities to find out what was going on there. We have had major problems related to the incineration that is going on there. Now we have just discovered that there are 62 pounds, Mr. President, of plutonium in the ducts. That is enough for seven or eight nuclear weapons.

We have to commit a great deal more money to the cleanup of Rocky Flats, and I think a lot of other facilities, and this is an opportunity to do it. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, of which I am a cosponsor, includes funds to help us clean this up. I must say it also helps us to wipe out a little bit of the waste that is in here.

Does the Senator from South Carolina know there is $30 million in the initial amendment for tourism, to encourage tourism in Panama? I have a great deal of difficult trying to explain that to my constituents that we are going to spend $30 million to promote tourism in Panama and we are not going to spend money to clean up the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant in the backyard of a million citizens in Colorado.

Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment because it contains important language for the clean up efforts at our Nation's Federal nuclear facilities. As you may know, one of those facilities—Rocky Flats—is located just outside of Denver, in my State of Colorado.

The Rocky Flats plant has been plagued by health and safety concerns. Most recently, almost 62 pounds of plutonium—enough to build 7 nuclear bombs—was found in the air ducts of the complex. Last summer a near criticality situation occurred at Rocky Flats that left the city of Broomfield fearful of contaminated drinking water. The budget request for environmental cleanup at Federal nuclear facilities was cut by $50 million this year. Even DOE officials now admit that the $89 million requested for next year will be insufficient to keep to cleanup commitments and to bring Rocky Flats into compliance with Federal and State environmental, health and safety laws. This mismatch between rhetoric and reality at DOE is inexcusable. All in all, our Nation's commitment to clean up at its nuclear facilities is flagging and is taking on mammoth proportions.

I might point out, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman comes at a critical time. Just yesterday, Victor Stello, the nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of Energy for Defense Programs, withdrew his name from consideration. The cleanup at Rocky and other nuclear facilities is essential to the health and well-being of our nuclear network and the communities in which they are located. We need to make sure that the money we do put in to clean up is spent well and spent effectively. My concern is that the administration send us another nominee for the top health and safety job at DOE—someone who is well qualified by experience and disposition to place health, safety and environmental concerns above production concerns.

I support this amendment, Mr. President, I want to see more attention given to the problems of Rocky Flats and surrounding communities and I think this amendment is a large step in that direction.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. About a minute-and-a-half.

Mr. KASTEN. I would be pleased to yield 20 seconds of that time to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

The distinguished Senator from South Carolina outlined the proposal that I made in the committee the other day on which he indicated he would vote against a cut. He did not say we also included $44 million for the VA Medicare, $166 million for Head Start, and $11 million for flood control in the Southern States, plus $150 million for Eximbank in Eastern Europe.

We are trying to help the businessmen of this country to get in on the ground floor. The Germans are eating our lunch over there. So if we are going to have it all laid out, let us lay it out.

May I say I would love to have the vote of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. He indicated the way I crafted this, perhaps he could vote for it. But I would be surprised. I was not counting on it. I would love to have his vote.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I wanted to make one very basic point. Why are we here? The reason we are here is because of the change in Panama and the change in Nicaragua in an emergency situation in which these two emerging democracies desperately need our help. They need our help not now. They needed it yesterday, the day before, and they have needed our help for months. These requests are emergencies.

A number of other issues that are on these different amendments—we added on some in committee, and we have now an opportunity to add on—are all very good programs. I support them. I think most people in this Senate support them.

But the emergency situation is that we have two brandnew fledgling democracies that desperately need our help, and they need it now.

We on a unanimous vote authorized $470 million for Panama. The administration wanted $100 million. If we were to adopt this number, it would be a 40-percent cut in aid to Panama from what the administration requested. This is an emergency. It would be a crime for us not to fund these two brandnew democracies and give them a chance. I hope that we will vote to table the Byrd amendment.

Mr. President, I move to table the Byrd amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 48, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table Amendment No. 1524 was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I want to express my views on why the Byrd-Johnston amendment was justifiably opposed in the context that it was being offered.

The distinguished chairman of the committee and President pro tempore certainly did a good job at making his amendment as attractive as possible on the second try, and it took Members of strong character and clear thinking to resist the chairman's siren song.

The distinguished chairman proposed to transfer $120 million in aid from Panama to domestic needs, which appeared to be a worthy proposal. However, there is little question that this particular proposal was politically motivated. It's no secret that the other party has been attempting to radically redirect the President's aid proposal. In its first attempt, the other party attempted to redirect aid from Panama to Eastern Europe in the committee markup. A one-vote margin spelled the defeat of this attempt. Nevertheless, there is no question that the original intent of the sponsors of the present amendment was to take money away from Panama and give it to Eastern Europe. When this attempt failed, a more politically palatable approach was pursued. This partisan approach was also doomed to fail, because a majority of Members in this Chamber understand and accept our commitments to the people of Panama and the security interests of the United States.

The security of the United States depends on a politically stable, as well as an economically and militarily secure Panama. The committee mark is a major step toward meeting these security needs. The United States also has some responsibility in helping Panama to rebuild after the December invasion to remove Noriega from power.

Mr. President, although our commitments and obligations to Panama and our security interests must be met, we certainly must also meet out commitments and obligations to our domestic needs. I intend to do what I can to meet these needs. In fact, this supplemental includes hundreds of millions of dollars for these domestic problems, including more money for disaster relief for farmers, fuel assistance for the poor, increased veterans benefits and increased funds for unemployment insurance. And, of course, in the regular budget and appropriation cycle, these and other needs will be addressed further.

Mr. President, the amendment was misdirected and politically motivated, and the Senate, therefore, appropriately defeated it. I hope the Senate will proceed from this point on a more bipartisan basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs upon the first committee amendment.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished Republican leader has an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas, the Republican leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 1525 TO COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 2, LINE 11

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier today, I am offering this amendment for myself, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN]; the Senator from West Virginia, the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD]; and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

It provides $5 million for Armenian earthquake aid, and also covers transportation. There was some question raised this morning by the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] whether or not they can spend the money. I have a letter from AID. They have finished their mission. There are a number of applications pending; they can spend the additional $5 million. And I hope the amendment could be accepted.

Last year, we did appropriate an additional $5 million for earthquake relief. But the needs remain enormous: more than 500,000 people remain homeless—for many of them, a shack would look like a palace.

There are also enormous medical needs. Private voluntary agencies have done great work, but there are still thousands who need immediate and long-term medical help.

One other area where help is especially needed: transportation. There are great quantities of supplies waiting right now in warehouses here in the country—ready to be shipped, but with no transportation available.

Senator LEAHY raised the question whether the money could be effectively expended. We have an answer from AID. The answer is: Yes.

AID has moved too slowly. Frankly, groups working in Armenia were slow in getting their act together.

But there has now been an AID needs survey team. Its report is ready. Applications are starting to come in. Significant spend-out will start in the near future.

Just one responsible Armenian-American group—the Armenian Assembly—itself has compiled project proposals way in excess of $10 million.

I would stress that this new money will be available for transportation. We could probably effectively spend the whole $5 million on backlogged transportation needs alone.

Appreciate cosponsorship of Senator LEVIN and Senator BYRD.

This program responds to critical needs, and reflects the best in America. I urge all Senators to join adopting this amendment.

I know of no objection to the amendment, but I will be happy to have anybody inquire about it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I join with the Republican leader in asking the amendment be accepted. As manager of the bill on this side, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. If I can ascertain one thing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the letter which Senator DOLE has provided to me be printed in the RECORD, along with the amendment.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT,
Washington, DC, April 26, 1990.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: This is in response to your request for factual information concerning the current and future operation of A.I.D.'s Armenia post-earthquake assistance.

A.I.D. has sent an assessment team to review and report on the current need for additional assistance to the earthquake affected areas. The team recently submitted a report of its findings. It concludes that the needs now and for the future include housing, health, and education/training activities which cross-cut many sectors.

A.I.D. is now in the process of reviewing the report and is preparing a request for proposals from private voluntary (PVO) and nongovernmental organizations (NGO) qualified and experienced to undertake these activities.

We have reviewed the proposed amendment and we agree that additional funds could be productively utilized with the cooperation and collaborative efforts of the PVO/NGOs presently operating in Armenia.

Sincerely,

RICHARD M. BROWN,
Director, Office of Egypt and European Affairs, Bureau for Asia, Near East and Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment with Senator DOLE for earthquake relief for Armenia. I want to commend the minority leader for his leadership on this, and the cooperation offered by his staff. This is an example of a bipartisan, nonpartisan effort for humanitarian relief for suffering people that transcends politics.

The report that accompanies this supplemental legislation states that more than 500,000 Armenians remain homeless from the December 1988 earthquake, and the plight of many people in Armenia is increasingly desperate.

There have been questions about whether this money is needed. It is. Last year we appropriated $5 million for earthquake relief in Armenia, and the Agency for International Development has been preparing to spend the money wisely and appropriately. AID is in the process of completing the needs assessment and preparing the final report. The infrastructure is moving into place. This money today will be available through September 30, 1991. There are large and unaddressed needs in Armenia, and the applications to AID for much-needed and sound programs will far outstrip both this and last year's money. This money is desperately needed.

Mr. President, this amendment is in the finest tradition of Americans opening their hearts to unfortunate people in need. It will provide relief that is greatly needed and will make an important difference in both the short and long run in alleviating suffering.

Once again, Mr. President, I thank the sponsors of the bill, and Senator DOLE and his staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I would like to add as a cosponsor the distinguished manager on this side, Senator KASTEN, to the amendment and thank him for his assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I will be very brief. I have no intention of objecting to this amendment or registering opposition to it. But I would like to point out that this puts Americans in a very complicated position because we have a natural, well-founded, and historical desire to help people who are victims of disaster. But I would point out that the Soviet Union, while they are accepting this aid from us for their victims in Armenia, are still spending over a couple of hundred million dollars a month to support the Government in Afghanistan.

So, while all of our hearts are with the Armenians, and they belong there, I tell my colleagues that what we are doing is we are relieving the Soviet Government from an obligation that it itself ought to shoulder before the priorities of American tax dollars go in there.

Having said that, I would ask the Republican leader if he would add me as a cosponsor of this. But just remind ourselves of what we are doing when we hear about the Soviet Union's desperate need for hard cash; they spend it outside their country on things that are in violation of the rights and freedoms of others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I do not quarrel with the Senator from Wyoming. In fact, I would point out the money will go to private voluntary organizations, not to the government. But his point is still well taken.

I also point out this will make a grand total of about $11 million in Federal aid to the Armenian people, compared to Italy, $100 million; West Germany, $80 million; Czechoslovakia, $35 million; France, $30 million; Poland, $8 million; and Great Britain, $40 million.

So we have not done a great deal, but we have done some. I certainly share the concern expressed by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, and I am pleased to make him a cosponsor along with Senator CHAFEE and Senator MOYNIHAN and Senator THURMOND.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, those Senators will be made cosponsors along with the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask I be listed as a cosponsor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I make a similar request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I also so ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. DOLE], for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. DODD, Mr. REID, and Mr. PELL, proposes an amendment numbered 1525 to committee amendment on page 2, line 11.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, add the following:

For an additional amount for the "Economic Support Fund," $5,000,000 to remain available until September 30, 1991, which sum shall be made available, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, for humanitarian relief, transportation of materials provided for such relief, medical treatment, and education and vocational training to the victims of the Armenian earthquake of December 7, 1988, which assistance shall be channeled through United States private and voluntary organizations and other United States nongovernmental organizations, provided that such funds are an addition to funds previously made available for such purposes; provided further, that of the funds made available by this paragraph for assistance for Armenia, up to one percent may be used by the Agency for International Development for costs of administering such program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Oregon will also be made a cosponsor.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment. When the earthquake devastated Soviet Armenia in December 1988, the world responded swiftly with appropriate emergency assistance.

Armenia is still reeling from the effects of the earthquake which left more than 25,000 dead, 100,000 injured, and more than a half a million homeless. Ethnic violence in Azerbaijan has contributed to the suffering of the Armenian people, and has exacerbated the refugee problem. This amendment would provide desperately needed refugee assistance, and would demonstrate our continued support of the Armenian people.

Mr. President, it would be a tragic mistake to drop our commitment to helping the Armenian people at this time. I urge my colleagues to adopt this important amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment (No. 1525) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1526

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator LEAHY, and Senator WIRTH, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. KASTEN], for himself, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. PELL, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. DOMENICI, proposes an amendment numbered 1526.

On page 25, after line 21, insert the following:

"FORESTRY PROTECTION

None of the funds appropriated in this Act for Nicaragua or Panama shall be used for any project that would result in any significant loss of tropical forests."

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, this amendment is very simple. It requires that none of these funds be used to support projects that will result in the significant loss of tropical forests in Nicaragua or Panama.

Nicaragua and Panama have some of the most outstanding, and least disturbed forests in all of Central America. However, those forests are under severe pressure.

In Nicaragua, I would note particularly the efforts to protect the forest along the Nicaragua/Costa Rica border. These governments are now working together to establish the International System for Protected Areas for Peace, known as SI-A-PAZ.

In Panama, I would point out that the operation of the Panama Canal is dependent on the protection of healthy forest systems in central part of the nation. The water source for the canal is the rain forests in central Panama.

Because the economy in Panama is in such bad shape, people are leaving the cities, and moving into the forests. When they move into these areas, which on paper are protected as parks, they are cutting the forests. Unsustainable development is being touched off because of the need for short-term economic opportunities.

This legislation will be a key step in addressing the underlying problem—a sound economy. It also contains language to promote environmental protection. But it is critical that none of our funds be used for cross purposes, to fund forest destruction.

Since most of my colleagues are not familiar with the forests of Nicaragua in particular, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed description of this critical natural resource be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

NICARAGUA'S FORESTS

Nicaragua is blessed with wide ecological diversity—from the humid tropical forest of the southeast (the Caribbean's largest unspoiled tropical rainforest), to the arid tropical pines of the highlands in the north-central mountains, The wide range of climatic, topographical and vegetational types, coupled with the demographic and social variations, tends to complicate the planning for sustainable natural resource management.

The motor which drives the economy of Nicaragua is rooted in agriculture. During the 1980s, the Nicaraguan government initiated a sweeping agrarian reform which resulted in the redistribution of the ownership pattern of agricultural land.

The approximate breakdown by ownership of agricultural land is as follows: 40 percent private; 40 percent cooperative; 13 percent State; 8 percent non-titled.

One of the key points in future social stability throughout the rural sector will be centered around the Ministry of Agriculture (MIDINRA). Vital to a stable relationship will be the technical help and availability of credit to the cooperative sector.

The second most important factor will be the emphasis and importance which is placed on the sustainable management of the non-agricultural lands (i.e. the forests).

Historically, in any agrarian-oriented economy, the forestry sector is neglected and sacrificed to relieve pressure from landless peasants. This problem is especially acute at the present time due to the bankrupt condition of the Nicaraguan economy, resulting in hungry and desperate people. This situation does not lend itself to long-term sustainable environmental management. Therefore, an integrated approach at the top levels of government, is vitally important to push for both social and ecological solutions.

The U.S., in its development assistance, must avoid any further threats that would undercut the forestry sector in Nicaragua. The aid that we provide should be building up the forestry sector for its other values (e.g. watershed management and fuelwood).

The western regions of Nicaragua, where over 80% of Nicaraguans live, has been deforested for agriculture and firewood. As a result, the country is losing millions of dollars in agriculture crop production due to both wind and rain erosion. Nicaragua also has a critical shortage of fuelwood and building materials. There are floods every year that destroy the infrastructure of the country, especially in Managua.

Agroforestry (i.e. reforestation, wind breaks, and soil conservation projects) should be put high on the list of programs that would provide an emergency response within a short term and also provide long term development. Agroforestry and reforestation projects would reactivate private sectors and generate employment for hundreds if not thousands of Nicaraguans.

A Brief Overview of Specific Regions from a Forestry Perspective: Managua & Southwest Region:

This area contains over 50% of the Nicaraguan population and is suffering from severe environmental degradation. There is a strong need for an agroforestry extension program. The UN has designated Lake Managua as one of three lakes worldwide to receive special international aid to correct their pollution problems. We need to make certain that there is no further degradation of Lake Managua's watershed.

Southeastern Region:

There are three ecological divisions in this region. (1) Inland is a humid tropical zone with a heavy influx during the past twenty years of subsistence farmers. (2) The Bluefield-Rama area was heavily damaged by Hurricane Joan in October 1988 (at least one million acres). Regeneration has taken place, but the greatest threat is from forest fires.

Southeastern tip of Nicaragua along Rio San Juan:

The forest surrounding the mouth of the Rio San Juan is the Caribbean's largest unspoiled tropical rainforest.

Northeast Region:

The predominate vegetation in this region is Caribbean Pine. The forest fire control plan which the Northeast Forestry Project had in the late 70s and early 80s needs to be reinstated.

North Central Region:

This region has three general ecosystems. (1) Pine forests which grow on harsh, low rainfall sites have been heavily overcut for industrial use and subsistance farming. There needs to be a vigorous forestry extension program which promotes reforestation and forest fire control. (2) North/Northeast of Matagalpa are virgin deciduous forests which have been virtually untouched due to rugged topography and their isolated location. A sound management plan which will provide protection from over-exploitation is needed. (3) The land around deciduous forests south/southeast of Matagalpa is presently used for cattle raising. Agroforestry would be a sustainable type of management for this land.

Northwest Region:

This area has suffered extensive environmental damage from cotton production, pesticide poisoning and over-cutting of the natural forests. A long-range forest extension program to foster agroforestry and the protection of the natural forests in the mountain ranges is needed.

Hope this helps. Please let me know the status of the proposed amendment. Thanks a lot.

Mr. KASTEN. This amendment is strongly supported by the U.S. environmental community. It will protect both the environment and economic opportunity in the democracies of Panama and Nicaragua.

I believe this amendment has been cleared, and ask for its immediate adoption.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, both the Republican ranking member and I know nothing about this amendment.

Mr. KASTEN. It was my understanding that the amendment had been cleared.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold? I may request a quorum call if we need it, but maybe I might just discuss this briefly, something about this amendment and what it would entail, if I may be recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this amendment by the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] and myself, is language to prohibit foreign aid money that might go, in this bill, to either Panama or Nicaragua to be used in any way for destruction of rain forests.

In last year's foreign aid bill, I expressed, as did the Senator from Wisconsin and others, concern that foreign aid, however nobly intended, might be used for purposes that were destructive not only to the environment of the recipient country, but destructive to the environment possibly hemispherewide; in some instances, worldwide.

We tried in last year's foreign aid bill, and I think successfully in some areas, especially those areas involving some of the international lending authorities, to limit U.S. foreign aid, at least to those matters of an environmentally sound nature.

I note, Mr. President, it would be my intent, as we go along to support amendments, to at least put some kind of environmental requirements on our foreign aid, if not tying our foreign aid to proenvironmental positions, at least stop our foreign aid from being used in a way that is destructive of the environment. I would not want to see the money that we may vote for Nicaragua and Panama in this aid package to be then used for destruction of rain forests in those two countries.

I suspect the majority of Senators would agree with it. That is what the amendment is. It adds no money. It takes away no money. It just says the U.S. dollars, foreign aid dollars, cannot be used for destruction of rain forests and, thus, for the degradation of the environment in this hemisphere.

If nobody else is seeking recognition, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, is there now an amendment pending?

Mr. KASTEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. KASTEN. There is an amendment pending. I understand we will be able to dispose of it now that it has been cleared by the leaders on both sides.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on this side, I am prepared to accept the amendment and recommend its adoption by the Senate.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I also accept it on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Oregon completed his statement?

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to commend the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Vermont and all those who had a part in this amendment. I think it is a good amendment. I hope we will be extra careful in our foreign aid to be sure it is not used for purposes that are destructive of our environment. Therefore, I commend those who are supporting this amendment. I ask unanimous consent to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator PELL, of Rhode Island, also be added as a cosponsor to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. And for Senator HATFIELD, of Oregon, I ask the same unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator for Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Parliamentary inquiry. In order to dispose of this amendment, is it first necessary that I ask unanimous consent the committee amendments be set aside, or can we move directly to this amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we are ready to act on this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, first, that Senator BYRD, of West Virginia, also be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Withoug objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KASTEN. And, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] be added as cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who seeks recognition?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, did we adopt the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. we have not disposed of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am sorry.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to discuss this amendment briefly with the senior Senator from Wisconsin. Specifically, I note the amendment prohibits the use of these funds to cause the significant loss of tropical forests.

So that there is no misunderstanding, I ask him to explain to other Sentors what we mean by that.

Mr. KASTEN. First, this provision would apply to the use of these funds that would touch off the direct, or indirect loss of tropical forests.

That means that these funds could not directly be used to fund projects that would result in the significant loss of forests.

It also means that these funds could not be used to fund projects that would touch off the loss of a significant forest area.

By significant, this amendment means more than just a few acres.

Mr. LEAHY. Let me give a couple of illustrations for clarity.

A direct loss of forest, for example, could be the clearing of a large forested area to establish a cattle ranch or row cropping.

An indirect action, for example could be the building of a road into a relatively undisturbed area that would open the area to clearing.

Mr. KASTEN. The senior Senator from Vermont is exactly correct.

Mr. LEAHY. And by significant, this amendment would not restrict the cutting of trees per se, but would prohibit the cutting of more than a few acres from any project, or the funding of projects that indirectly would lead to the cutting of more than a handful of acres of forests.

Mr. KASTEN. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1526) was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

AMENDMENT NO. 1527

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] proposes an amendment numbered 1527.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, after line 2, insert:

"SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For expenses to carry out section 201(k)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 for 1990 crops damaged by a natural disaster in 1989, $11,891,000: Provided, That the Secretary shall spend not less than the amount appropriated herein."

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the amount transferred here, $11,891,000, is within the allocation in the bill. It is used to carry out section 201(k)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 for disaster relief. My particular interest in this program, Mr. President, has to do with the disastrous loss, because of the freeze, in the sugarcane fields of Louisiana this last year. We had the coldest weather in the century. As I mentioned this morning, Lake Pontchartrain was frozen over. What sugar farmers have gotten in my State is 60 to 100 percent of the crop damaged. In addition to that, the seed for next year's crop was also damaged.

So, Mr. President, this is money within the allocation of the bill. It is deficit neutral for that reason. It carries out that section of the Agricultural Act of 1949.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be made the pending business before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I only ask to hear what the request was.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Simply to make this the pending amendment because the committee amendments have not yet been cleared.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendment will be considered at this point.

Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. I will ask for a quorum call unless the Senator from Louisiana can assure me that this has been cleared by the subcommittee ranking member on our side. I have no message from him that he has seen this and knows about it. I do not know about the chairman of the Agricultural Subcommittee on the Senate side. Has this been cleared by both sides?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, is the Senator speaking of Senator COCHRAN?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have not personally cleared it with Senator COCHRAN. I think it will be all right. But I do suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Senator asking for a quorum? As I understand it, Mr. BURDICK, the chairman of the subcommittee on this side, is agreeable to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Let me say that I am agreeable to it. It is within the outlays; therefore, it is deficit neutral. I am willing to accept the amendment and hope that the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have no knowledge as to whether the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the ranking member of the subcommittee, has seen the amendment or approves of it. I only ask the indulgence of the Senate until we can reach him and check it out. He may well support it, but I do not have that information.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, at the suggestion of chairman of the committee, I move to amend the amendment by making the figure $11.891 million, $11 million even.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is talking about page 3, line 6. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON. On my amendment, that is line 4, the figure $11.891 million. I want to modify it to read $11 million even.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify the amendment, so the amendment will be modified as stated by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment as modified is as follows:

On page 3, after line 2, insert:

"SALARIES AND EXPENSES

"For expenses to carry out section 201(k)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 for 1990 crops damaged by a natural disaster in 1989, $11,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary shall spend not less than the amount appropriated herein."

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, Senator COCHRAN is now in the Chamber.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, we have looked at this amendment. I just have one question to ask of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. In the reference to section 201(k)(2) of the Agriculture Act of 1949, is that section a specific crop or is it a number of crops that would qualify for aid under that section?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The section covers peanuts, soybeans, sugar beets, or sugarcane.

Mr. COCHRAN. So this is not an attempt to target this amount of money for any one specific crop but any of those crops that are described in that section would be eligible if they were otherwise entitled to benefits under the other terms of the act?

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, we have no objection to this. There have been some severe disasters, as we all know, that have hit the agriculture sectors around the country, and I will be willing to recommend that the amendment be accepted as a part of this supplemental appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield the floor? The Senator has yielded the floor. Is there further debate?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I just want a chance to read the amendment. I understand it has been looked at from the appropriations point of view, but I just wanted to make sure it is not something within the jurisdiction of the Senate Agriculture Committee. It should be looked at from that point of view. I think we could do this very quickly. In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, while the Senators are conferring with respect to the pending amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside for 2 minutes in order that Senator HATFIELD and I may dispose of another amendment and save that much time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1528

(Purpose: To direct the Department of the Interior to proceed with the design and construction of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial in accordance with the direction contained in the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990 (Public Law 101-121))

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration. This is on behalf of Senator INOUYE, Senator REID, and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], for himself, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. REID, proposes an amendment numbered 158.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 32, after line 8, insert the following:

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

CONSTRUCTION

Of the funds made available under this head in the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-121), not less than $5,852,000 shall be made available immediately for design and construction activities associated with Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is a very straightforward, simple amendment to the Interior Subcommittee part of this appropriations bill. The Congress last session for the current fiscal year appropriated $5 million to start construction of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial. That design had moved through many processes and had been signed off and approved by the required agencies such as the Fine Arts Commission and the Capital Planning Commission, and all the others that play a part in any kind of memorial.

Correspondence between the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Policy and Budget, to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior over the Park Service had instructed the Park Service not to proceed with the memorial.

In one way, one could say this constituted a line-item veto, but I will not get into that argument at this point. Mr. President, basically, then in sequence there were some new appointments made to the Fine Arts Commission, and with these new appointees there was raised in that Commission a request to review the design. In reviewing the design, they asked the Architect, Mr. Halpern, to modify the design—not to change the design but to modify it in scope, and in developing a little more grass and a little less stone.

The problem is now, in order to get that redesigned, there is no money available, even though we appropriated $5 million for construction, that could be utilized for the costs of modifying the design. All this amendment does is instruct the Interior Department to proceed with what we have appropriated and what we have determined for current fiscal year 1990, and therefore free up that money to be used, a portion of that money, for the modification of the design.

Mr. President, it has been my pleasure during the past few months to serve with my distinguished colleague from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], as a Cochairman of the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission. Prior to my service as a cochairman of the Commission, I had served as a member of this Commission since the early 1970's. It is one of the oldest Federal commissions, a dubious honor since the goal of the Commission was to work itself out of existence by the construction of a memorial fitting to the memory of our 33d President.

Last year, in the fiscal year 1990 Interior appropriations bill, the Congress finally took the long-awaited step of appropriating funds to build the memorial according to the design that the Commission first submitted to the Congress in 1976 and which was approved by the Congress in 1978. It was exciting to all of us who had served on the FDR Memorial Commission to see the light at the end of the tunnel of this important project. No one was more gratified than the late former Senator and Congressman from Florida, Claude Pepper. As the Chairman of the FDR Memorial Commission until his death last year, he had revitalized the project and testified eloquently before the House Interior Appropriations Committee, in his last appearance before a congressional committee, on behalf of the fiscal year 1990 appropriations.

I am told that when President Bush visited Senator Pepper at his deathbed, Senator Pepper, despite his great physical frailty, urged the President to give full support to the memorial and that the President assured him of that support.

Apparently that word has not been passed along to certain officials at the Interior Department. Contrary to instructions contained in last year's appropriations bill, a memorandum was circulated with the Department earlier this month requiring the deferral of all spending for the project. Contrary to law, no reprogramming request was forwarded to the Appropriations Committees of the Congress. This work stoppage has come at a critical moment in the construction program. The National Park Service was completing the arrangements to sign a contract for final design services and construction, and the Fine Arts Commission has requested additional work by the designer of the memorial for which he must receive the appropriated funds.

Mr. President, our amendment simply directs the Department of the Interior to proceed with the design and construction of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial in accordance with the direction contained in last year's Interior appropriations bill.

This amendment would have no budgetary impact since it merely instructs the Department to spend money that has already been appropriated. I understand that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, my dear friend and chairman, Senator BYRD, has cleared this amendment and I ask for the support of my colleagues.

There is no new money involved. We do not have to offset because it is existing appropriations we are addressing.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for one additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I support the amendment proposed by my good friend from Oregon on his own behalf and on behalf of Mr. REID and Mr. INOUYE. The amendment adds no money to the bill. It directs the administration to spend money for the construction of the FDR Memorial in the exact manner which was prescribed in the report accompanying the fiscal year 1990 Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriations acts.

This amendment ensures that construction begins. I accept the amendment on this side and urge that the Senate adopt it.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator for his support.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Oregon, as a sponsor of this amendment dealing with the design and construction of the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission.

Mr. President, in the fiscal year 1990 Interior and related agencies appropriations bill (Public Law 101-121), Congress appropriated $5.8 billion for the design and construction activities associated with the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial. However, staff of the Office of Management and Budget have taken it upon themselves to defer the construction of this project. Further, the National Park Service has been directed to develop other plans for the use of this money. This reprograming I note, was without prior consent of Congress.

This amendment does not appropriate any new monies, but ensures that the construction of the FDR Memorial does begin. Mr. President, I wholeheartedly support this amendment and urge its adoption by my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment (No. 1528) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1527

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, if it is necessary to ask unanimous consent, I ask unanimous consent that we now consider the Johnston amendment that was temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary. The question will recur on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Is there further debate?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on this amendment we only have a question on authorizing. I will not object to it. I will just note for the distinguished Senator that I think I can clear up the question I have on the authorizing language but if not, I may be in a position to seek to revisit this during the committee of conference. I do not want the Senator to think suddenly we will come back on that. I know what he is trying to do for people in his State. I commend him for that. But I want to make sure we are not getting into an authorizing issue that we should not.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I think it does not do that. I thank him for his concurrence. I am thankful for the concurrence of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, as to the provisions in the bill as they relate to the Agriculture and related agencies title, there are funds in here the Senate should know that would help pay the cost of expenses that were incurred in connection with disaster assistance for Hurricane Hugo damage, California earthquake damage, and other disasters that have occurred that have had a serious effect on agriculture in many parts of the country.

There is also a substantial amount of funding in this agriculture title to meet the needs of the Food Stamp Program. These funds are necessary to carry out this program in an orderly fashion for the balance of this fiscal year.

There are other provisions of this title for funding of programs that are needed before we act on our regular fiscal year 1991 appropriations bill.

Mr. President, H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, as reported by the Appropriations Committee on Tuesday, April 24, appropriates a total of $852,255,000 in budget authority for program activities under the jurisdiction of the Agriculture, Rural Development and Related Agencies Subcommittee.

The largest item, and probably the most critical item, in the agriculture chapter is the supplemental appropriation of $705,000,000 to meet the needs of the Food Stamp Program. Participation and benefit costs continue to grow, and that is the current estimated amount based on recent trends and historical participation patterns. The committee recognizes the need to protect the benefits for low-income Americans.

During the past year, Hurricane Hugo, the California earthquake, tornadoes, severe storms and flooding have caused tremendous loss of life and devastation of property. To provide needed and necessary assistance as a result of the severity of the damage, the committee provided $137,000,000 in disaster assistance. Of that, $52,000,000 is provided for emergency watershed and conservation work which comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. These funds will permit the installation of emergency measures for immediate protection of life or property. Emergency work includes, but is not limited to, repairing diversions and levees, opening dangerously restricted channels, sloping of steep and eroding banks, and establishing quick vegetative cover on denuded land.

Because the 1990 crop insurance program is now estimated to be larger than was anticipated, additional funding is needed for administrative and operating expenses to cover insurance commissions owed to those who sell crop insurance policies. This bill appropriates an additional $15 million to cover the shortfall of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Other important items in the agriculture chapter of the bill include: (a) an appropriation of $1,200,000 for the pseudorabies eradication program and $6,800,000 for the grasshopper control program, both of which are administered by the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service [APHIS]; (b) an additional $13,900,000 for Food and Drug Administration generic drug activities; (c) supplemental funding in the amount of $3,655,000 for the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for additional staff to implement various reform proposals and to deal with recent trade practice abuses; and (d) an additional $4,700,000 to support the January 1990 caseload levels of the Commodity Supplemental Food Program.

In addition, this bill disapproves two rescission proposals, R90-1 and R90-2, which were submitted to offset the increased outlays of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. These rescissions would have caused the delay or cancellation of several construction projects needed to carry out the agricultural, research, extension, and teaching programs of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I support the agriculture chapter as reported by the Appropriations Committee. I commend the chairman of the committee, Senator BYRD, and the ranking member, Senator HATFIELD, for their dedicated efforts and work in bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, Louisiana sugar cane growers have experienced their worst natural disaster in many, many years. A severe, record-breaking freeze struck Louisiana late last year.

The sugar cane crop for 1989 had been harvested, but, given the nature of sugar cane, which is produced on a 3-year cycle, second-year cane and plant cane were damaged badly. Estimates of an average acreage loss statewide have been as high as 50 percent. For some individual growers, acreage losses will be much higher. On the remaining acres, yields are expected to be down significantly.

Farmers' income next year will be reduced even more because some of the cane that will be able to be harvested will have to be used as plant cane instead of being able to be sold in the market. This natural disaster has serious ripple effects throughout the cane region of the State. The many communities, their residents, their economies, and affected agribusinesses all will be hurt by the freeze.

The Food Security Act of 1985, in section 1008, authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, to provide disaster relief for soybeans, sugar beets, and sugar cane. On April 5, the Louisiana congressional delegation, in a meeting with Secretary of Agriculture Yeutter, urged the Secretary to use his authority to provide Louisiana sugar cane growers disaster relief administratively. The Secretary, unfortunately, refused to do so. Secretary Yeutter told our delegation that we would have to pass special legislation in the Congress to obtain disaster assistance.

The April 5 meeting was called and set up under the leadership of our delegation's senior Senator, the Honorable J. BENNETT JOHNSTON. Today, again under his leadership, we are trying to provide assistance for Louisiana sugar cane growers. I strongly support my senior Senator and join with him in his efforts to help our industry, a role in which he has served so well over the years. Indeed, section 1008 of the 1985 Food Security Act was enacted as a result of his leadership.

I urge my colleagues to join with Senator JOHNSTON and to support a provision for disaster relief for Louisiana's sugar cane growers. Though the bill we consider calls for assistance for foreign governments, this is also a time of critical need for some of our American farmers, specifically Louisiana sugar cane growers. For that reason, there is every justification to help those at home who have experienced an agricultural and economic disaster. Again, I urge your support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

SEC. 204. (a) For additional amounts for Military Personnel as follows: "Military Personnel, Army", $192,000,000; "Military Personnel, Navy", $240,000,000; "Military Personnel, Marine Corps", $70,000,000; "Military Personnel, Air Force", $278,000,000.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, on the date of enactment of this Act, unobligated balances available to the Department of Defense from previous Acts making appropriations to the Department of Defense are hereby reduced and cancelled by such sums as necessary to reduce outlays for the Department of Defense by the same amount as increased by the sums provided for military personnel in subsection (a): Provided, That such reductions shall be applied by an equal percentage to the unobligated balances of each program, project, and activity as set forth in section 9046 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-165) or other relevant Department of Defense Appropriations Acts: Provided further, That military personnel accounts, as well as programs and activities exempt from sequestration under section 255 of the Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, shall be exempt from the uniform reduction required by this section: Provided further, That for purposes of this section, the rescissions of Department of Defense funds contained in this Act shall occur prior to calculating the amounts of unobligated balances: Provided further, That for purposes of applying this section, the Office of Management and Budget shall determine outlays from unobligated balances cancelled under this subsection and provided by subsection (a) by multiplying cancelled amounts under this subsection and amounts provided in subsection (a) by the same first-year outlay rate for each account as was used for the most recent sequestration order under the Deficit Control Act of 1985 as amended.

SEC. 205 (a) Not less than 30 days before a cooperative project agreement is signed or amended on behalf of the United States in conjunction with the NATO Research and Development program, the President shall transit to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives a numbered certification setting forth the text and providing an explanatory statement on the purposes of the proposed agreement or amendment.

(b) Any cooperative project agreement or amendment referred to in subsection (a) shall contain a provision stipulating that United States participation under the agreement or amendment is subject to the availability of appropriated funds.

SEC. 206. (a) Of funds available during fiscal year 1990 under the heading "Research Development, Test and Evaluation, Defense Agencies", for the NATO Research and Development program—

(1) not less than $12,776,000 shall be transferred immediately upon enactment of this Act to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency to finance the advanced neural networks information processing technologies project; and

(2) not less than $12,224,000 shall be transferred immediately upon enactment of this Act to the Joint Technology Department program.

(b) None of the funds referred to in subsection (a) may be transferred from the AV-8(B) radar development, F/A—18 radar upgrade, medium surface-to-air missile, and multifunctional information distribution system projects.

SEC. 207. Funds available to the Department of Defense during the current fiscal year may be transferred to applicable appropriations or otherwise made available for obligation by the Secretary of Defense to fund the additional cost of pay and allowances, operational expenses and other costs associated with military operations in Panama known as Operation Just Cause: Provided, That funds transferred shall be available for the same purpose and the same time period as the appropriations to which transferred; Provided further, That the Secretary shall notify the Congress promptly of all transfers made pursuant to this authority and that such transfer authority shall be in addition to that provided elsewhere in this Act.

SEC. 208. None of the funds made available by this or any other Act shall be used by the Department of Defense to conduct a Request for Proposal for the development or acquisition of the Real Time Automated Personnel Identification Systems (RAPIDS) until such time as an operational test and evaluation of Individually Carried Record (ICR) technologies is completed.

SEC. 209. Of the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1990 for Air Force Operation and Maintenance, $29,000,000 shall not be obligated or expended until not less than $7,000,000 is expended as settlement for the pending dispute regarding Contract Numbered F29650-82-C-0201.

amendments en bloc, following line 21 on page 25 over to page 57, through line 4 thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, while we consider the request, I do not know that we will object. We do need to look at all that is included in all those pages before we can agree to that request. I hope we can. If we could have just a minute or two to look over the request.

Mr. BYRD. Absolutely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is there a quorum call pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia withdraw his request for the moment?

Mr. COCHRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, with respect to the unanimous-consent request of the distinguished chairman, the Senator from West Virginia, we have no objection on this side to the request as stated by the Senator, if, as I understand correctly, we would accept the amendments down through line 4 on page 57.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. We have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendments.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 25, line 22, through page 57, line 4, insert new language as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion?

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments, en bloc.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the several committee amendments were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate pass over the amendment on page 57 beginning on line 5 and going through the period and quotation mark and the period on line 10, set that aside and then proceed to agree en bloc to the amendments from there over to page 62 at the end of line 20 thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, we have no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendments.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 11, through page 62, line 20, insert new language as follows:

SEC. 313. (a) Section 802(b)(1) of the Arizona-Idaho Conservation Act of 1988 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) in consultation with the Joint Committee on the Library, the Senate Commission on Art, or the House of Representatives Fine Arts Board, as the case may be, transfer such property to the entity consulted;".

(b) Section 803(b) of the Arizona-Idaho Conservation Act of 1988 is amended—

(1) by striking "subject" and all that follows through "respectively"; and

(2) in paragraph (2) by inserting "subject to the approval of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, after "(2)".

(c) Section 8(c) of the Bicentennial of the United States Congress Commemorative Coin Act is amended to read as follows:

"(c) REPORT REQUIRED.—The Commission shall submit an annual report of expenditures to the Congress.".

SEC. 314. (a) The supervision and jurisdiction of the United States Capitol Police shall extend over any area with respect to which the Architect of the Capitol has contracted, or otherwise entered into an agreement, for parking space in the Union Station parking garage to accommodate personnel of the United States Senate whose parking privileges have been affected by the construction of the Judiciary Annex Building, and over any area and streets necessary to carry out such supervision and to travel between such parking area and the United States Capitol Grounds.

(b) In carrying out such supervision, the United States Capitol Police shall have, within any such area or street, jurisdiction, concurrent with that of the Metropolitan Police of the District of Columbia, to provide security for such personnel and property of such personnel and of the United States Senate within such area or street, and to make arrests for the violation of the laws and regulations of the United States and the District of Columbia.

(c) The provisions of subsections (a) and (b) shall be effective only during the period that there is in effect a contract or other agreement as referred to in subsection (a).

SEC. 315. (a) Section 101 of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1977 (2 U.S.C. 61h-6) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 101.", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Majority Leader, the Minority Leader, and the President pro tempore of the Senate, in appointing individuals to consultant positions under authority of this section, may appoint one such individual to such position at an annual rate of compensation rather than at a daily rate of compensation, but such annual rate shall not be in excess of the highest gross rate of annual compensation which may be paid to employees of a standing committee of the Senate.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall be effective in the case of appointments made after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 316. (a) Consistent with the purposes of Senate Concurrent Resolution 74 of the 101st Congress (agreed to October 26, 1989), and until October 1, 1992, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, upon the approval of the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, from funds authorized to be expended by subsection (b) of this section, is authorized to provide for the donation of equipment and training to the Senat and Sejm of Poland by—

(1) purchasing and donating new equipment;

(3) arranging for the preparation, delivery, installation, servicing, modification, and adjustment of, and the training, accessories and supplies for any items donated under paragraphs (1) and (2);

(4) replacing in the United States Senate used or surplus equipment that is donated under paragraph (2); and

(5) conducting such other transactions as necessary to carry out the purposes of section 2(c) of Senate Concurrent Resolution 74 of the 101st Congress.

(b) Of the unexpended and unobligated funds in the appropriation account for the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate within the contingent fund of the Senate which were appropriated for fiscal years prior to October 1, 1989, not more than $1,500,000 shall be available to the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate to carry out the provisions of subsection (a).

SEC. 317. (a) Effective with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and each fiscal year thereafter, any unexpended and unobligated funds in the appropriation account for the "Secretary of the Senate" within the contingent fund of the Senate which have not been withdrawn in accordance with the paragraph under the heading "General Provisions" of Chapter XI of the Third Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1957 (2 U.S.C. 102a), shall be available for expenses incurred, without regard to the fiscal year in which incurred, for the conservation, restoration, and replication or replacement, in whole or in part, of items of art, fine art, and historical items within the Senate wing of the United States Capitol, any Senate Office Building, or within any room, corridor, or other space therein.

In the case of replication or replacement of such items, the funds available under this subsection shall be available for any such items previously contained within the Senate wing of the Capitol, or an item historically accurate.

(b) All such items of art referred to in subsection (a) shall be known as the "United States Senate Collection".

(c) Disbursements for expenses incurred for the purposes in subsection (a) shall be made upon vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Senate Commission on Art or the Executive Secretary of the Senate Commission on Art.

SEC. 318. Subsection (a) of section 3 of the Legislative Appropriations Act, 1989 (2 U.S.C. 68-6(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "during any fiscal year," and inserting in lieu thereof "during any fiscal year (1)"; and

(2) by striking out "; and inserting in lieu thereof ", and (2) from the Senate appropriations account, appropriated under the headings "Salaries, Officers and Employees" and "Office of the Secretary" to the appropriations account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, for expenses of the Office of the Secretary of the Senate, such sums as he shall specify; and".

SEC. 319. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of the Treasury by this or any other Act, shall be obligated or expended to contract out positions in, or downgrade the position classifications of, members of the United States Mint Police Force or the Bureau of Engraving and Printing Police Force, or for studying the feasibility of contracting out such positions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further discussion?

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments, en bloc.

The committee amendments were agreed to, en bloc.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the several committee amendments were adopted.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 64, LINE 8

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now pass over the amendment beginning on line 21, page 62, section 320, and ending on line 7 with the word "budget.". on page 64 and that the Senate agree to the amendments on page 64 following line 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion?

Mr. COCHRAN. We have no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 64, line 8 through line 20, insert new language as follows:

SEC. 321. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, let me see if I may recapitulate here. The only amendments remaining are these: the amendment beginning on line 17, ending with the period on line 21, page 25; the amendment on page 57 which runs through lines 5 and 10 inclusive; and the amendment beginning on page 62, line 21, and running through line 7 on page 64.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, that is the understanding of this side as to what is left of the committee amendments to be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. So there are three amendments that remain. Mr. HELMS is interested in two of those amendments. Mr. HOLLINGS is interested in another of those amendments. The managers are ready, willing and able to proceed with any one of those amendments.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if the Senator would yield, I have a noncontroversial amendment which I think has been agreed to by all sides.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I have a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Senator from Connecticut have to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the committee amendments in order to proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the committee amendments for the purpose of proceeding to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1529

(Purpose: Emergency relief for the people of Lithuania)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself and Mr. KASTEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1529.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill add the following:

EMERGENCY RELIEF FOR LITHUANIA THROUGH INTERNATIONAL RELIEF AGENCIES

Up to $5,000,000, of the funds available in Public Law 101-167 for the purposes of chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 or pursuant to section 515 of such public law, may be made available through international relief agencies as emergency assistance to the people of Lithuania, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this is a very simple amendment. It is designed to try to at least express what I believe are the needs of all of us here in this body and elsewhere, and that is our sense of solidarity with the people of Lithuania, but to do so in a way that is responsible.

I want to commend the chairman of the committee for an amendment that is already included in the legislation that I think is a tremendously worthwhile one, and one that I support.

This amendment authorizes a budget authority of $5 million to go to international relief organizations. If those international relief organizations are able to get assistance into Lithuania, we would like to provide some assistance to those organizations so the people of Lithuania might be the beneficiaries of some assistance.

We have written the language in a way, here, such that it would not require a budget waiver. It insists that these funds may—it does not insist, but rather, these funds may be made available through international relief agencies, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

This would cover the possibilities, here, of violating the Budget Act. Obviously, again we recognize under the function that allows spending for the Agency for International Development, they are in very lean circumstances. So this does not insist the moneys come out of there, but rather may come out of there.

Mr. President, I urge we adopt this amendment. I think it sends a very strong and worthwhile message.

I ask unanimous consent Senator KASTEN be listed as cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, as I understand it, this amendment is cleared on both sides with both the minority and the majority.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment (No. 1529) was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if there is no other Senator seeking the floor, I do have one issue that has been cleared. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending amendment and have it be in order to consider an amendment which I will then send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying the amendment aside? None is heard. It is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1530

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] for himself, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. GRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 1530.

On page 27, line 19, strike all after "Provided," through "country" on line 21, and insert the following:

"That of the funds made available under this heading not less than $3,000,000 shall be made available only for Haiti to support the democratic electoral process; Provided further, That of the funds made available under this heading not less than $10,000,000 shall be made available only for Jamaica."

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this amendment which I am offering jointly with the distinguished ranking member of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, Senator KASTEN, and with Senator GRAHAM, would provide $3 million in economic support funds to support Democratic elections in Haiti.

As noted, it is an earmark.

These funds are in addition to $10 million in prior year development assistance to support urgent development needs in Haiti, including critical imports.

Few people can forget the photographs in the newspapers of the slaughter on November 27, 1987, when Haitians last went to the polls to try to elect a democratic government after decades of repressive rule by the Duvaliers. The remnants of the Ton Ton Macoutes, the Duvaliers' thugs who for years sowed terror throughout the country, attacked polling places and shot to death dozens of people waiting to vote. The army, rather than protect the voters, did nothing to prevent the attacks.

Since that tragedy the Haitian people have not given up their struggle for elections. We all hoped that time had come last year, but those hopes were dashed when General Prosper Avril reneged on his promise to hold elections and imposed a state of seige early this year.

Despite that setback, the Haitian peoples' desire for freedom was too strong for General Avril to contain. On March 10 Avril relinquished power and left the country, and today the potential for democratic elections in Haiti is greater than any time in recent history. Haiti's interim leaders have all expressed their strong desire for elections at the earliest possible time. However, the country is bankrupt, the transition government is beleaguered, millions of Haitians are unemployed and hungry, and without immediate assistance the chance for free elections may be lost.

The United States has a strong interest in assisting Haiti in this difficult transition period. Our intent is that the $3 million in Economic Support Funds will be used to support the electoral council, and to be in addition to other AID funds available for technical assistance and other electoral needs, including the costs of voter registration, printing of ballots, and to assist international monitoring of elections which will be key to preventing a repetition of the disastrous election of November 1987. I am aware that this amount is insufficient to meet urgent electoral needs and urge the Administration to make additional Economic Support Funds available for this purpose from existing resources.

The $10 million in development assistance is to finance critical imports of petroleum and other supplies during this fragile period, as well as to support continuing health and other development projects. As was the case in the House, we intend that these funds will be in addition to other development assistance previously allocated for Haiti. However, we strongly urge that none of these funds be transferred from sub-Saharan Africa, where development assistance cannot be spared.

Finally, I want to emphasize that the history of Haiti is one of repeated disappointments. No one can predict whether this will be the year for democracy to take hold. Therefore these $3 million in electoral assistance should not be expended until the following conditions are met: (1) the Government of Haiti has named the members of a genuinely independent electoral council to conduct free, fair and open elections; (2) such electoral council has established and publicly issued an electoral law; (3) dates for registration of voters and elections have been publicly announced; (4) official investigations have been reopened in connection with the disruption of the November 29, 1987 election; and (5) adequate steps are being taken by Haitian civil and military authorities to provide electoral security.

Mr. President, this last condition is the most difficult, and the most vital. The security situation remains precarious. Those who caused the disruption in 1987 are still at large and capable of repeating that terrible violence. In order for the Haitian people to feel that it is safe to go to the polls, the Haitian army will have to do its duty and protect them.

Haiti is at a critical juncture. It was in large part due to the effective diplomacy of the American Ambassador that General Avril gave up power creating this opportunity for democratic elections. Having helped set the stage for democracy the United States cannot now sit on the sidelines. We should do what we can to support the Haitian people at this critical hour.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment has been cleared by the other side. I know the ranking member of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee is a cosponsor. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I support this amendment which would provide assistance to Jamaica and Haiti. These are perhaps the principal areas in the region in which we have an ongoing political interest, as well. I compliment the Senator and urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment (No. 1530) was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASTEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no idea how many amendments remain. There are three committee amendments that remain, but there may be, and I understand that there are, several other amendments.

I wonder if Senators who have amendments could let us know if they have amendments so we can proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, in response to the request of the distinguished Senator, it does appear now that I will offer, or some other Member will offer, an amendment relating to wetlands. This is a very emotional controversy for our agricultural interests. I am not certain that amendment will be offered, I would like to say.

Should such an amendment be offered, let me assure the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee that if I offer the amendment, I would be perfectly willing to agree to a reasonable time limitation on the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of Senators, I have discussed the status of this legislation with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, with the acting Republican manager, and with the Republican leader. I am asking the staff of both sides to immediately request of all Senators a list of any amendments that are intended to be offered with suggested time limitations so that we can make an assessment of where we stand and how long we have to remain in session this evening. Depending upon the results of that, we will make a determination. We are going to finish this bill, and I would like to get some idea in that regard.

I will, in a few moments, after the lists have been prepared and the distinguished Republican leader comes to the floor, which he has indicated he will do shortly, propound a unanimous-consent agreement which, hopefully, will permit us to identify with specificity the amendments that remain and, if possible, to gain time agreements and, therefore, be able to judge when we will be in a position to complete action on this bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in response to the distinguished majority leader, there are three committee amendments remaining. Only amendments to those amendments are in order, except by unanimous consent. I understand there are several amendments that are still hanging around, and some very controversial. I personally hope, as the manager of the bill on this side, that very controversial legislative amendments could be avoided on this bill. I recognize the right of any Senator to offer any amendment he wants to offer.

I had suggested earlier, may I say to the leader, that Senators who have amendments should let us know so that we know what kind of a timetable we are working under.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished chairman. We will be in a position to know that shortly when we receive from the staffs the lists of any amendments and I propound a unanimous-consent request. We will then find out whether we are going to get an agreement identifying and limiting amendments and time. If not, we will have to continue in session well into this evening and throughout the day tomorrow to finish the bill. There will simply be no alternative to that.

So I hope Senators will cooperate in this regard and, as the distinguished chairman has indicated, refrain from offering controversial legislative amendments on this bill. But that will be the decision made by each Senator. We will, hopefully, in a very short time, be in a position to present a request, as I have indicated previously.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues. I thank the distinguished managers.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUMPERS). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to see that my colleague from Vermont and also my colleague from Wisconsin are on the floor. I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to the language appearing on page 28 of the committee report of this bill. The language reads as follows:

> Because of Israel's demonstrated capacity to plan and implement a housing program, the committee believes AID administrative processing should be minimized. AID review should be limited to monitoring actual or planned expenditures and implementation to ensure conformity with the purposes set forth in the legislation. * * *

Mr. President, I absolutely agree about the urgency of putting these guarantees into place and getting the housing under way. Nothing should delay that. These comments that I am going to make are not intended to delay those guarantees in any way. The sheer volume of immigrants who need shelter demands that there be no delay.

But, Mr. President, this language is nevertheless troubling to me because, looking at it in isolation, one might think we are giving blanker approval to the Israeli housing sector's mode of operation.

It is the view of many observers, including myself, that the Israeli housing sector is sorely in need of reform. I added language to the supplemental authorization for this program pointing this out and giving the United States Government leverage to promote the efficiency of the housing sector in Israel, again, not for the purpose of causing any delay.

Therefore, I was pleased with the language that was found on page 28 of the report which reads as follows:

> To ensure that this urgent program is implemented as rapidly as possible, the Committee expects that a significant amount of the housing construction—whether it is regular construction, infrastructure, or modular, prefabricated housing—will be carried out by American concerns. It is the Committee's understanding that the Government of Israel agrees with this approach and intends to utilize American housing contractors and businesses.

Mr. President, granting fuller access to American firms is one of the important kinds of reforms that the Israeli Government and Israeli housing industry need to undertake and should undertake because it will expose the Israeli housing sector to a fuller range of free market forces—but it is only one of many reforms that should be undertaken.

I am afraid that many of the loan dollars guaranteed by this program will be wasted covering expenses that will not add a single square foot to any house in Isreal or improve anyone's housing situation. For example, land is terribly overpriced and hard to purchase; only 7 percent of the land is in private hands. It takes up to 2 years and sometimes more to get the needed permits to begin the construction of a house. Imports of housing materials are constrained by enormous import fees, taxes, and other charges. The supply of many building materials is controlled by cartels or monopolies. These and other policies, including Israeli tax and labor policies, should be reformed in order to make best use of the funds these guarantees would help make available.

I certainly hope the Isreaelis will adopt some of these reforms of their own accord. It would certainly be influential if there are to be further housing incentive guarantee programs.

I will pursue the administration and I will ask those who oversee the placement of these guarantees whether or not reforms are being made by the Israelis because I consider that to be an important element of building houses and of the reform of the Israeli economy.

I thank the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I first of all want to say that I agree with the thrust of the Senator's comments and, as he stated, we in our committee report noted similar views, and this simply is another way of reemphasizing the importance of these views.

It is also important that nothing said here should be viewed in any way as a delay in the implementation of the Housing Investment Guarantee Program. Time is of the essence. This is clearly an emergency situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am supporting a provision that will help Israel accommodate the large and welcome inflow of Soviet emigres into that country. I do, however, have grave reservations about the way Israel may put these loan guarantees to use. My concern arises over the very high level of state ownership of housing in the State or Israel.

I am not only concerned over the high level of state ownership of housing, but also the high level of state ownership of everything else. It seems to me a large part of Israel's economic problems is the high level of socialism in that country. I hate to see us providing loan guarantees that may well yet be put to use increasing still higher the level of state ownership in that country.

I do not see there is much we can do about it at this point. It is a pressing situation, and the immigrants are arriving in large numbers, thank goodness, and need to be accommodated.

I hate to let the moment pass without raising that complaint and without expressing the hope that this and any further help by the United States, whether in the form of cash or loan guarantees, will not be used to exacerbate this problem of state ownership.

I wonder if the Senator from Minnesota might care to respond to that observation.

I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I certainly agree with the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. I would hope there would be a private ownership of the housing stock in the State of Israel, particularly that built by American guarantees. It is an important thing.

I quite agree with the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire about the fact that there is too much State ownership in general, that there is too much public ownership and, as a result, there is an economy that is not, at the present time, as aggressive and as expansionary as it might be.

I think Israel could do much to improve in that regard. Certainly, the idea of private ownership of this housing stock is an important element in that.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator for his response, Mr. President. There is nothing we can do in Israel at this point. I do hope, however, this colloquy will be taken to heart and that government officials of that country will seek to use the assistance of the United States, whether in the form of cash or loan guarantee, to increase the stock of privately held housing.

For example, these housing units which will be constructed under this measure could well be sold to the tenants in 10 years, let us say, as a suggestion. I hope Isreal will consider doing that.

For my part, if any further measures of this kind come up during this year,

I intend to offer language that will require such a course of action.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the role.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator never yielded the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire retains the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I beg pardon for the lapse of business. I will yield while I am discussing for a moment with the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, is there a quorum call? Apparently not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1531

(Purpose: Technical amendments)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have three technical amendments for chapter 10 of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that they may be offered at this time and offered en bloc to be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, these amendments have been cleared on our side of the aisle. I support the chairman in his request to adopt these amendments.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending committee amendment will be laid aside and the clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes amendments en bloc numbered 1531.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 54, line 2, insert after the word "Needs", the following: "For Natural Disasters".

On page 54, line 3, strike "Needs" and insert the following: "needs for natural disasters".

On page 54, line 5, strike "That" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That, notwithstanding any other provision of law".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendments relate to the President's unanticipated needs account for natural disasters. They are all technical in nature, correcting an account title and making clear the committee intent with respect to the funds appropriated.

I urge the adoption of the amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment (No. 1531) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move en bloc that the vote on the amendments en bloc be reconsidered.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1532

(Purpose: Technical correction)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendments be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending committee amendment will be laid aside.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes an amendment numbered 1532.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 13, line 24, delete "$19,900,000" and insert "$34,900,000";

On page 14, line 2, delete "$31,158,000" and insert "$16,158,000".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment is technical in nature. It corrects a drafting error in the bill. One of the programs recommended for rescission by the committee was included in the wrong fiscal year. The funds are rescinded from fiscal year 1990 research and development when the correct citation is fiscal year 1989.

This amendment corrects the error.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I join the chairman and support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment (No. 1532) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DASCHLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have an amendment in behalf of Senator MOYNIHAN on Burmese assistance which is basically a technical change. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and that this amendment be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1533

(Purpose: To make available funds for displaced Burmese nationals)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] for Mr. MOYNIHAN, proposes an amendment numbered 1533.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In chapter III of title II of the bill, under the heading "MIGRATION AND REFUGEE ASSISTANCE", strike the period at the end and add the following: ": Provided further, That finds used pursuant to the last proviso (relating to assistance for Burmese students at camps on the border with Thailand) under the heading (MIGRATION AND REFUGEE ASSISTANCE' in the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-167) may be used to provide assistance to any Burmese person in Burma or Thailand who is displaced as a result of events relating to civil conflict.".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I offer this amendment with the concurrence of the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senators PELL and HELMS. It is an amendment that provides a technical change to the wording of the 1990 foreign operations appropriations bill.

In last year's bill the Congress appropriated a modest sum, $250,000 in humanitarian assistance, for Burmese who have been displaced as a result of the brutal suppression and civil conflict that exists in Burma. The displaced include "students", a term used to describe not only students, but also others, who fled the suppression of the Burmese Army that followed massive prodemocracy demonstrations in 1988.

Indeed, Tiananmen Square occurred in Burma before those dramatic events of last June. And many more were killed. The result was an exodus of students toward Burma's border with Thailand, to camps under the control of Burma's ethic minorities, who themselves have been in a state of civil war with the ruling military dictatorship since it seized power in 1962.

The appropriations law language now provides the assistance to the displaced students on the border with Thailand. Unfortunately, the State Department legal office—as is there job—have interpreted the wording narrowly, in the geographic sense of the border. While that would not have been such a problem 6 months ago, a major Burmese Army offensive has driven the student and minority camps off the border and deeper into Burma and Thailand. Indeed, many of the displaced Burmese have gone to Bangkok or other larger towns.

Efforts to remedy this legal problem through a colloquy on January 30 at the time of the repassage of the State authorization bill by myself and Senators PELL, KASTEN, and LEAHY, were not considered sufficient by State. Thus, the need for the change in statutory language. I understand that the State Department supports this change, as they earnestly want to provide the assistance that is so desperately needed.

I again thank Senators PELL, HELMS, LEAHY, and KASTEN for their support in this matter, and I also thank the managers of this bill, the President Pro Tempore, Senator BYRD, and Senator HATFIELD for their help and consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a recent article in the New York Times by Steven Erlanger on the condition of Burmese refugees be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 18, 1990]

BURMESE ARMY'S SUCCESSES PRODUCE A NEW FLOOD OF REFUGEES FOR THAILAND

(By Steven Erlanger)

BANGKOK, THAILAND, April 17.—Advances by Burmese troops against rebellious ethnic minorities along the Thai border are creating a new refugee problem here, with thousands of Burmese seeking shelter and assistance in Thailand.

The Thais, who have hundreds of thousands of Cambodian refugees already on their soil and who have substantial business interests in Myanmar, formerly Burma, are rapidly turning against the Burmese, many of whom are hiding out in the cities to escape the police.

Thai officials and relief workers say there are now nearly 50,000 Burmese in Thailand, most of them lacking any documentation or legal status.

Most of those seeking assistance are Burmese young people who fled after the military cracked down on a prodemocracy movement two years ago. For a time they joined forces with the ethnic rebels fighting the Government in Yangon, but a combination of disillusionment, hardship and pressure by the military have gradually driven them to seek refuge in Thailand.

Fearful that even more Burmese will be drawn to this country, the Thais have put pressure on foreign governments, relief agencies and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees not to recognize the Burmese as refugees or give them aid. The Thais have already jailed or deported large numbers of Burmese as illegal immigrants.

U.N. AGENCY HALTS ASSISTANCE

Pressed by the Thais and by its own budget constraints, the High Commissioner's office here has stopped giving assistance of any kind even to those Burmese it recognizes as legitimate refugees, as opposed to economic migrants. it will not even interview asylum seekers from Myanmar's ethnic minorities.

Thai officials, who asked not to be quoted by name, argued that Thailand had behaved with great tolerance, risking harm to relations with the Burmese Government. They said that Thai law does not recognize refugees, that the Burmese are here illegally, and that the Thais had resisted requests from Yangon to deport all Burmese residing here.

"We have done little harm to them and have looked the other way," a senior Thai official said. "But we have 300,000 Cambodians here already, and thousands of Vietnamese and Laotians. We have some Vietnamese here from 1954 and even Nationalist Chinese. Are we to shelter everybody?"

After the military crackdown of August and September 1988, in which more than 3,000 Burmese demonstrators for democracy were killed, perhaps 5,000 Burmese students fled to border areas, where a dozen ethnic minorities have been fighting for autonomy from the government in Yangon, formerly Rangoon, since the 1940's.

The students vowed to fight alongside the minorities, but by early 1989, the number of students had dwindled to less than 3,000, and many were ill with malaria. Yet they feared persecution at home, and if discovered in Thailand, where many went to work or live temporarily, they were deported. On the border, at least, they were left alone.

But beginning with the dry season in December, the Burmese army has made a concerted effort to attack the strongholds of the ethnic minorities along the border. In the last 10 weeks, nearly all the major camps of the Mon and the Karen have fallen, including some, like Thay Baw Bo and Three Pagodas Pass, that had been considered too remote or well-defended to attack. The Burmese are now shelling Manerplaw, headquarters for the Karen, the Democratic Alliance of Burma and the All-Burma Students' Democratic Front.

The ethnic insurgents continue to resist. But only 500 students are still fighting alongside them, and the rest have joined a large flow of noncombatant refugees farther into Thailand. Relief officials and diplomats say at least 22,000 people have crossed the border in the last 10 weeks.

HOW THEY LIVE NOW

Many of the students wind up like Ko Hlaing Myint, 24 years old, Ko Thein Naing, 22, and Ko Aung Nge, 28, who share a tiny, bare room in Bangkok with five other Burmese youths. They each have one set of clothes, given to them by a church. The room has one fluorescent bulb, one mosquito net, no fan or furniture, and bars on the glassless windows. There is a toilet outside, with a bucket of water for sponge showers. The rent is $36 a month. When they do get temporary work, a risky prospect since they have no identification papers, the pay is $1.60 to $2 a day.

Mr. Thein Naing, the least educated, was sold for $72 to a Thai merchant in Ranong by a Burmese guide he trusted. He made bricks for a year, getting no wages, little food and poor shelter; finally he ran away.

Mr. Aung Nge served for four years in the Burmese Army, rising to lance corporal. After returning to civilian life as a construction worker, he joined early student-led demonstrations against the Government in October 1987 and then fled Yangon. He went to Thay Baw Bo, where he gave military training to students until last March, when he went to Mae Sot because of the shortage of food and medicine. He was arrested there, fined and then expelled from Thailand near Three Pagodas Pass, where he joined the Mon.

From there he made his way to Bangkok, where he was arrested again, spending 76 days in jail because he had no money to pay his fine. Expelled at the Burmese border, he immediately returned to Bangkok. Last week, he was interviewed by the High Commissioner's office, but received no documents and no money.

REQUESTS FOR AID ARE SPURNED

Mr. Hlaing Myint was a student leader at Mandalay University. He fled in August 1988 to join the Karen, leaving his pregnant wife behind. He had a month's military training, but did no fighting. He went from one camp to another, as they fell, then finally fled into Thailand. He was arrested, but the police took pity on him and gave him some money. He arrived in Bangkok on January 22.

The High Commissioner refused his request for assistance because officials there said he was educated and could work. But he had no papers and no work permit. He was given an April 2 appointment for an interview to see if he qualified as a refugee, but was arrested that morning and spent nearly a week in detention before paying his fine with money supplied by a charity. He has a new appointment with the High Commissioner's office on May 29.

"I think I cannot bear these conditions in Bangkok for a long time," Mr. Hlaing Myint said. "Even for tomorrow we have no money, only 20 baht," or 80 cents. "But I do not know where else I can go."

U.N. DOCUMENTS WERE IGNORED

Workers with the High Commissioner's office here say they are unable to provide even basic protection to people clearly needing and deserving their help.

For a time, the office gave letters to Burmese who qualified as refugees, saying that the person in question was "of concern" to the High Commissioner. As the influx accelerated and after some 350 letters had been issued, the Thais insisted in late January that no more letters be given out.

Some Burmese carrying the letters were deported anyway. Still, 20 to 30 Burmese a day show up at the High Commissioner's office, where four people now work full time, conducting a total of 10 interviews a day.

The American Embassy, Burmese say, is now more sensitive to their needs and their problems than it was a year ago. The Americans try to move Burmese with relatives in the United States, even those without valid passports, out of Bangkok and with Thai permission, not calling them "refugees" or publicizing the cases.

But the number of cases remains tiny, currently less than a dozen. Of those, only five Burmese thus far have been able to go to the United States.

"No one is really standing up to the Thais on this one," a senior Western diplomat said. "There have been little victories, but nobody has very much to be proud of. And the situation is getting worse."

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I understand that that amendment has been cleared by both sides and also by the majority and minority in the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment is agreeable on the part of this side. I accept it, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, we have had an opportunity to review the amendment. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment (No. 1533) was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to reconsider the vote

Mr. KASTEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier this evening, we have attempted to compile a list of all remaining amendments to the legislation that is pending, and I will now propound an unanimous-consent request to limit consideration to the following listed amendments.

As I read the list, it will become evident that "limit" is not the proper word to use in this regard, because it is a very substantial number; but although it represents only modest progress, it is at least some progress in precluding amendments, other than those which are to be listed. Both sides have been consulted, and I believe this is acceptable. But I will now propound it and read through the entire list.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in consideration of the remainder of this bill, H.R. 4404, the following amendments be the only amendments in order, in addition to the remaining committee amendments, and that no second-degree amendments be in order except where specified, or with respect to the listed Helms amendments on abortion and NEA, and that no points of order be deemed waived.

The amendments are: a Wallop amendment on MX rail garrison and F.E. Warren Air Force Base; a Hatch amendment regarding drugs; a Gramm amendment regarding the death penalty to murderers in the District of Columbia; a Hatfield second-degree amendment to the Gramm amendment; a Helms-Humphrey point of order on the committee amendment on page 57, lines 5 through 10; a Helms amendment to strike the committee amendment on page 57, lines 5 through 10; a Chafee second-degree amendment to a Bumpers-Pryor wetlands amendment; a Mack amendment on Cuba; a Gramm amendment on domestic programs; a Heinz-Specter amendment on the Beechwood housing development grant project; a Wilson amendment on dropouts; a Wilson second-degree amendment to a Kohl amendment on dropouts; an Armstrong amendment on refugees; a D'Amato amendment on EBRD Lithuania to prohibit contributions; a Kasten amendment on Namibia; a Dole leadership amendment; a Simpson amendment on Yellowstone; an Armstrong amendment on Lithuania; a Helms second-degree amendment to the committee amendment, re: Nicaragua; a Helms amendment on abortion; a second Helms amendment on abortion; a third Helms amendment on abortion; a Helms amendment on the NEA; a Helms amendment regarding the Soviet Union; a Helms amendment regarding Iraqi sanctions; a Kasten second-degree amendment to a Kennedy amendment on Chile; a Kasten second-degree amendment to a Wirth amendment on the UN; a Danforth sense-of-the-Senate resolution on court taxation; a Moynihan amendment on GSA public buildings; a Bentsen amendment on DOD impact in schools; a Kohl amendment on school dropouts; a Wirth amendment on the UN environmental program; a Wirth amendment on S&L bailout; a Riegle second-degree amendment to the Wirth amendment on S&L bailout funding; a Wirth amendment relative to section 320; a Levin amendment on Panamanian cooperation combating drug money laundering; an Exon possible second-degree amendment on abortion; a Biden amendment on a national crime information center; a Biden amendment on economic assistance to Andean nations; a Pell amendment on a reporting requirement to the Foreign Relations Committee; a Hollings amendment relative to section 614, State Department U.S.A. funding; a Hollings amendment relative to section 320; a Pryor amendment on wetlands regulations; an Inouye amendment condemning Iraq; a Conrad amendment on drought disaster assistance; a Kennedy-Harkin amendment on Chile; a Dixon amendment on the Air Force; a Byrd amendment relative to the Embassy in Lithuania; a Byrd amendment on study of foreign aid assisting U.S. investments abroad; a Bumpers amendment on food safety inspections; a Mitchell leadership amendment; a Nunn second-degree amendment to the Wallop MX rail garrison amendment; a Biden second-degree amendment to the Danforth resolution or amendment on court taxation; a Dole second-degree amendment to the Inouye amendment on Iraq; a Dole second-degree amendment to the Helms amendment on Iraq; a Dodd amendment on Central America.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. Leader, reserving the right to object, it was pointed out in my point of order on 320, I would not have a Social Security amendment. If I did not prevail, if we are going to amend the Budget Act in the supplemental, then I would add the Social Security amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. A Hollings amendment on Social Security.

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Leader, I will not object. I just returned to the floor in the middle of your reading the list. Assuming the consent is granted, what is the leader's intention with preference to how we are going to proceed to finish this bill? Are we going to work tomorrow and Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, we are going to stay right at it until we finish. We will work tonight and tomorrow and Monday and keep going until we finish.

As I indicated, I think it is clear this is really not much of a limitation, and this is a dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. As you can see, as we are proceeding, more amendments are coming in. So there is no alternative.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is it fair to assume we will not be in on Saturday?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think we can make that assumption. It depends on the progress we make tonight and tomorrow.

Let me complete, if I might, the list and then respond to the Senator in that regard. I have an addition, a Stevens amendment on chemical retrograde, a Helms second-degree amendment to the Dodd Central America amendment, a Harkin amendment on drug-free schools, and a Harkin technical amendment, a Sasser-Bentsen second-degree amendment to the Hollings Social Security amendment. That is Sasser and/or Bentsen second-degree amendment to the Hollings Social Security amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I have two entirely technical amendments. One is to put the Armenia matter in the proper page; one was to replace a word that was dropped in the printing. I would ask that I be allowed some appropriate time to bring up these two totally technical amendments that will take all of about 10 seconds. That can be added to the list.

Mr. MITCHELL. I propose the addition to the list the amendments identified by the Senator from Vermont. I have more additions here.

A Moynihan amendment regarding Social Security, a second Moynihan amendment regarding Social Security, to both of which a Bentsen second-degree amendment would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think we both have what we call technical amendments. I assume at the time we discover they are not technical the leadership, with the chairman, and others, can make the determination.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. We have no objection. But I believe there is going to be a lot of legislating on an appropriation bill. So if the chairman needs any assistance, maybe some of us will be happy to help.

We have no objection.

Mr. BYRD. The leader has included the provision that points of order are not waived.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is exclusive.

Mr. President, I add a Kohl second-degree amendment to the Wilson dropout amendment to the list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am advised by the Senator from New Mexico he would like a Social Security amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Since I have not had a chance to examine the Social Security amendment, I would like a Domenici amendment with references to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Social Security.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I will add a reservation as to the second-degree amendment to that for Senator SASSSER and/or someone else to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, a second-degree amendment to the Domenici amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I simply say to my colleagues that when I started reading the list we had approximately 53 amendments proposed to be offered by 34 Senators. I do not know what the number is now, but I assume it is over 60 amendments involving somewhere between 35 and 40 Senators. We are obviously going to finish this bill.

So please do not any Senators come to me over the next couple days and ask when can they leave or whether there is going to be any votes or not. We are going to stay until we finish. There is no other alternative to it. So we can plan on being here for a while this evening. We can plan on being here all day tomorrow.

I want to respond to the Senator from New Mexico specifically. We cannot exclude working on Saturday, if necessary. This is a very important bill. The President asked for this weeks ago and we did not meet the requested timetable of the administration. Now we are in a position of acting on it at some distant point in the future. And it is clear from what has occurred that the lure of an important bill has proven irresistible.

I do not know whether all these amendments will be offered. Senators, of course, have the right to do so. The one thing Senators do not have the right to do is to say they are going to offer amendments and then just do not show up and so inconvenience the full Senate. So I hope that out of this 35 or 40 Senators and this 60 or so amendments we can at least get Senators here this evening to offer amendments so we can start down this list and proceed.

I know the distinguished Senator from South Carolina is ready to go, and he has been patient and waiting.

I hope both sides will work to get Senators here. It is my intention to go for a while longer tonight to complete as much as possible, but not to attempt to stay all night or anything like that, and then to come back and start on the bill at 9 o'clock tomorrow and just stay here for a very long day tomorrow.

Senators should be prepared for that, with votes throughout the day. We have to try to finish this bill. It is very important legislation. Senators will have to make individual judgments as to whether or not to offer these many amendments, and managers will have to decide along with the leadership on how to respond to them.

It is obvious that we have a very long and difficult road ahead of us and there is no alternative but to stay here and work at it until we finish action on the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Let me underscore what the majority leader has said. I think there are probably well over 60, and that is not insurmountable, but it might be between now and some reasonable hour tomorrow. I am prepared to cooperate in every way with the leader and the distinguished chairman of the committee and Senator HATFIELD, the ranking member, if they decide to start tabling some of these nongermane amendments, or legislation on appropriations bill; otherwise, Mrs. Chamorro's first term may expire before we get the aid down there. I think she is kind of planning on it yet this year.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the managers for their cooperation, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have an amendment listed on the study of foreign aid assisting U.S. investments abroad. I would be happy to enter into an agreement for 20 minutes to be equally divided and with the understanding that I go with that amendment the first thing tomorrow, and that will get us rolling. I make that request, that it be 20 minutes equally divided. It provides for a study of foreign aid assisting U.S. investments abroad.

Some of our competitors make a condition to foreign assistance. They tie it up, they tie it, they tie in their business interests. It is about time we tried some of that. So this would be a study. I would begin with that at 9 o'clock. Is there any objection?

I ask unanimous consent then, Mr. President, that at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning I be recognized to offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to order the yeas and nays on the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. So there will be a rollcall vote around 9:20 tomorrow morning. That gets us off to a good start.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if I can get the attention of the distinguished chairman, I think I have to get unanimous consent. It is a parliamentary situation. We can go now or first thing in the morning.

Mr. BYRD. Just ask unanimous consent, may I suggest to the distinguished Senator, and go now.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent for permission to offer the committee appropriations amendment on section 614 which is the State Department authorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1534

(Purpose: To repeal certain provisions of law and to provide for the submission of reports under the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal years 1990 and 1991)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for himself and Mr. RUDMAN, proposes an amendment numbered 1534.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III of the bill, insert the following:

SEC. 307. (a) The following provisions of law are repealed:

(1) Section 614 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-162).

(2) Section 302 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (Public Law 101-246).

(b)(1) Section 127(b) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (Public Law 101-246) is amended by striking out "February 3, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "120 days after the date of enactment of this Act".

(2) Section 153(b)(2) of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991, is amended by striking out "January 1, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1991".

(3) Section 161(a) of that Act is amended in the second sentence by striking out "February 1, 1990," and inserting in lieu thereof "120 days after the date of enactment of this Act".

(4) Section 162 of that Act is amended by striking out "December 31, 1989," and inserting in lieu thereof "120 days after the date of enactment of this Act".

(5) Section 1005(b)(2) of that Act is amended by striking out by "December 31, 1989," and inserting in lieu thereof "not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act".

(c)(1) Section 506(a) of part E of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act (42 U.S.C. 3756(a)), as amended by the third proviso under the heading "Organized Crime Drug Enforcement" of title II of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-162) and by section 212 of Public Law 101-162, is further amended—

(1) in the text above paragraph (1), by inserting "required" after "setting aside the amount"; and

(2) in paragraph (1), by striking out "0.4 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000 or .025 percent, whichever is greater,".

(2) Title V of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-162) is amended under the heading "Educational and Cultural Exchange Programs" of the United States Information Agency by striking out "$160,300,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$156,506,000".

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, this repeal of section 614 goes to the State Department authorization and USIA. All of us, as Senators, remember the closing days of last year. What we have is a unique provision in law that we cannot have an appropriation for these two entities unless there is an authorization.

At the time we enacted the appropriations bill, the 1990 fiscal year authorization for State and USIA had not passed. As a consequence, we brought the further conference report to the floor with section 614. That put it at the 1989 level.

Now the authorization bill has passed, and what we want to do is repeal section 614 so that the State Department can spend its money, already appropriated, at the 1990 level that we debated and passed overwhelmingly, really by a voice vote finally, on final passage.

I do not think there is any dispute about the contents of this particular amendment. I think there is a question that was raised in committee relative to a point of order, that it did not conform to our 302(b) allocation, and this is where I would ask my colleagues' attention. It did conform to our 302(b) allocation at the time it passed. No question was raised there, because there was not any question to be raised.

No question should be raised now because no amounts in that 1990 bill have been changed. What has changed, if there is such a thing, is that our 302(b) allocation, was exceeded by the relief measure for Hurricane Hugo and San Francisco. But certainly not by the State Department's appropriation.

As a consequence, the State Department obviously is very much supportive of this particular amendment. Otherwise, they are cut some $311 million from the levels we approved in conference.

There is a list of things that have been brought to our attention by Secretary Baker. We had a hearing yesterday with the Secretary. There are critical shortages overseas, just exactly what our distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee was emphasizing relative to Eastern Europe. There was some $51 million that was cut from the USIA budget, the very budget that brought us the success of the Voice of America and the educational and cultural exchanges.

All we are asking is to repeal this particular section already in law, and with that repeal it happens automatically. It has nothing to do with actually appropriating this time, but only allowing the appropriation to get in step with the authorization; the appropriations which were enacted last year, all within our 302(b) allocation.

I yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, last October Senator HOLLINGS and I brought a conference report to the floor that included funding for the State Department and the U.S. Information Agency. Despite the fact an authorization bill had not been enacted, we believed it was important to continue the operations of the Government in an orderly manner. Therefore we included a provision to waive section 15 of the State Department Basic Authorities Act, which requires an authorization prior to the obligation of appropriated funds. In an attempt to acknowledge the importance of the authorization process, we included a provision to maintain the State Department and USIA at continuing appropriations rates until enactment of an authorization or November 30, 1989—whichever came first.

This was not the first time it has been done. In fact, it had been done in almost every year of the years that I have served on this subcommittee.

We were somewhat surprised when the Foreign Relations Committee objected to this provision; we were even more surprised when the Senate voted 53-45 to sustain the position of the authorizing committee and support a delay in the obligation of appropriated funds until an authorization was enacted. This action was taken despite the fact the fiscal year had already begun and the House and Senate authorization conferees had only met once to discuss their differences.

As a result, the State Department and the USIA are operating at continuing appropriations rates. However, the authorization bill was enacted in February, and with the pending amendment the Senate has the opportunity to allow for the obligation of the funds originally appropriated in the Commerce-Justice-State conference report. Adoption of the amendment is consistent with the position taken by the Senate last October.

Except for several technical changes, this amendment is identical to legislation reported jointly by the House Foreign Affairs and House Appropriations Committees. It would repeal section 614 of the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations act. It would also repeal section 302 of the authorization act, which would extend to the Board for International Broadcasting the requirement that an authorization be enacted prior to the obligation of appropriated funds. This repeal is consistent with an agreement reached between Senator HOLLINGS and myself and the leadership of the Foreign Relations Committee.

There are also several technical changes to reporting dates contained in the authorization act. Finally, the amendment would correct two enrollment errors in the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations act.

Technically, this amendment violates the Budget Act, and I repeat, "Technically." Let me say that when the Commerce-Justice-State conference report was brought to the floor of the Senate, the subcommittee was within its section 302(b) allocation. Subsequent to consideration of that act, the Congress decided to provide additional funding for disaster assistance for the victims of Hurricane Hugo and the California earthquake. Neither the Budget Committee nor any other Senator raised a Budget Act point of order in connection with that action. However, as a result the subcommittee would be in violation of its section 302(b) allocation if the amendment is adopted.

OMB Director Darman and my colleague, Senator DOMENICI, the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee, agree that this is a unique case. As Director Darman stated in a letter to House Subcommittee Chairman NEAL SMITH, "* * * your subcommittee had planned to accommodate funding at the section 614 repeal levels, only to have the plan overtaken by the disaster bill. * * * I now conclude it is unfair to insist on the points of order that could be raised against (a repeal of) section 614 if it is not offset."

I believe OMB Director Darman is correct. The Commerce-Justice-State Subcommittee should not be punished for the failure of the authorization committee to enact its legislation in a timely manner. Nor should it bear the burden for the unwillingness of the Congress to accommodate disaster funding consistent with the Budget Act. I urge adoption of the amendment so the Secretary of State and the Director of the U.S. Information Agency have the resources they need to respond adequately to a rapidly changing world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that letters from the Secretary of State and OMB Director Darman be printed in the RECORD at this point, and with that request I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, April 24, 1990.

Hon. WARREN B. RUDMAN,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR WARREN: I strongly support your efforts to repeal Section 614 of the Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judicary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (PL 101-162). The President is concerned about Section 614's impact on his ability to successfully conduct U.S. foreign policy, and urges that this provision be repealed immediately.

Section 614 restricts funding for the Department of State and the United States Information Agency (USIA) to Continuing Resolution levels, making them the sole U.S. Government agencies which have been denied their FY 1990 appropriated funds in this way. Both the Senate and House passed full funding for these accounts. Section 614 was a temporary action which occurred in conference to spur passage of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. It passed in February. Section 5614 was never intended to last this long.

Sweeping international changes make restoration of these funds imperative—we must have Section 614 lifted now or face serious consequences. Section 614 prevents us from effective operation of our programs and facilities in Eastern Europe, Panama, and Nicaragua. It endangers the security of our people, property, and information worldwide because we are forced to delay scheduled security and building improvements. It is restricting USIA's efforts to promote democratic values through broadcasting and exchange progams.

The President is particularly concerned that this law prevents us from meeting our financial obligations to the United Nations and other international organizations, jeopardizing U.S. leadership of these institutions at a time when the importance of international cooperation on issues such as refugees, has never been greater.

The Administration has made several efforts to resolve this issue, and as the enclosed letter from Dick Darman explains, the Administration does not believe repeal of Section 614 requires offsets in these very special circumstances.

We urge expeditious action to repeal Section 614, look forward to working with you to bring this about, and appreciate your efforts on our behalf.

Sincerely,

JAMES A. BAKER III.

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, March 13, 1990.

Hon. NEAL SMITH,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter concerns the possible repeal of Section 614 of the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Bill for FY 1990. I was asked about this when I testified before the House Appropriations Committee on February 7, 1990. Representative Conte inquired about the need for offsets. I responded that I was torn on the issue.

On the one hand, I favored offsets—for all the obvious, conventional reasons. On the other hand, I felt it was unfair to penalize State and USIA for what had been our collective failure to insist on offsets in funding emergency relief for the California earthquake. I said I was about 93% of the way toward decision.

After the hearing, I asked my staff to review the programs under the Subcommittee's jurisdiction to see if any legitimate offsets could be found that would not unfairly penalize an innocent party. We discovered that the SBA Disaster loan fund had over $2 billion in available resources and that less than half of that total would be used during FY 1990. We therefore suggested rescinding $475 million of the SBA funds in order to offset the budgetary impact of repealing Section 614. This rescission would have had no impact on the disaster program in FY 1990. It seemed reasonable to propose the offset to maintain the important principle of providing offsets for discretionary supplemental appropriations.

Apparently, the offset that we proposed is not acceptable. In view of this response, I have been asked to consider once again my position on offsets—given that this is an unusual case.

The case is, indeed, unusual. At the time that the first Commerce, Justice, State conference was completed (October 19th), your Subcommittee was within your 302(b) allocation. The House-Senate Conference Report included the higher funding levels for State and USIA that we are now proposing to make available by repealing Section 614. At the time of the conference, you would have had enough room under your 302(b) allocation to repeal Section 614 without going over your limit.

On October 25th, however, Congress passed the second continuing resolution. It included earthquake disaster relief (with $500 million for SBA disaster loans and an increase in the SBA loan limitation to $1.8 billion). During consideration of the second continuing resolution, the House waived any Budget Act points of order that could have been raised as a result of the disaster assistance funding. In the Senate, no Member raised Budget Act points of order. In the interest of providing assistance to the State of California quickly, the Administration supported passage of the resolution.

The additional SBA funding (and the $219 million in associated outlays from increasing the loan limit) is now included in the Budget Committee's scoring of the Subcommittee allocation. It is the reason that you have only $45 million in budget authority and $39 million in outlays remaining in your 302(b) allocation.

Of the four subcommittees that received earthquake disaster funding, yours is the only one that remains under the 302(b) ceilings. The other three, Transportation, VA/HUD, and Treasury/Postal exceed their budget authority limits by a total of over $3.4 billion. This fact lends further credence to the view that your Subcommittee had planned to accommodate funding at the Section 614 repeal levels, only to have the plan overtaken by the disaster bill.

Given that the Congress did not raise the points of order against the second continuing resolution in October, and that that is what caused the current problem, and given the apparent absence of offsets that are both acceptable and fair, I now conclude that it is unfair to insist on the points of order that could be raised against your resolution (H.J. Res. 471) to repeal Section 614 if it is not offset. In reaching this conclusion, however, please let me assure you that I view this as a very special case. The peculiarities of timing involving your original intentions, the subsequent action which triggered the interest in repeal, and the intervening decision on disaster funding apply only to your Subcommittee and the Section 614 limit. I do not view this as precedential. Indeed, I continue to believe in the fundamental importance of offsets and intend routinely to seek them for discretionary supplemental appropriations.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me be blunt. This amendment is a budget buster. As such, I must oppose it. Let me explain why.

At the end of last year, due to a dispute between the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Commerce-State-Justice Subcommittee, a provision—section 614—was placed in the Commerce-State-Justice appropriation bill. This provision limited obligations for the State Department operating accounts to current operating rates or fiscal year 1989 levels, whichever was lower.

This limit was to stay in place until an authorizing bill was signed into law and subsequent legislation was enacted to repeal section 614. But, it also had the effect of lowering the amount of spending in the Commerce-State-Justice bill. In effect, it helped the subcommittee stay within its budget allocation. And that is the rub.

Eventually the money was spent elsewhere. Now I am not complaining about the other choices made by that subcommittee—and the Congress for that matter—when it passed this appropriation bill last fall. But, the fact is that funds were never set aside for the State Department. They were spent on other programs.

Comes now this bill which would increase appropriations for the State Department. It increases appropriations by over $363 million in budget authority and $257 million in outlays.

This increase not only breeches the subcommittee's budget allocation—that is not what worries me so much—it also breeches the overall maximum deficit allowed under section 311 of the Budget Act. Every other item in this emergency supplemental appropriations bill has been offset. This is the only item to come before this body that does not have an offset.

What this amounts to is simply directing the Secretary of the Treasury to go out and borrow an additional $257 million, with $363 million in budget authority underlying that, borrow the money to give it to the State Department.

The administration has offered no legitimate offset for this new spending, and it is interesting to note that OMB originally refused to support this waiver without such an offset. But then OMB started to buckle and weave and dodge and turn. They are now silent on the issue. Perhaps the Secretary of State has talked to his former assistant over at Treasury, now the Director of OMB, Mr. Darman.

Without an offset, I am compelled to oppose this measure. I have no quarrel with the State Department. I have no quarrel with the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the subcommittee on which I serve, as a matter of fact. I am simply saying that without an offset, this breeches the Budget Act, and it puts us $257 million over. If we make this allowance for the State Department, where do we stop? Or why should we stop? There are other needs that I think are just as important as that one that is raised here for an additional $257 million for State Department operations this year.

So, Mr. President, I raise the point of order under section 311 of the Budget Act, and I yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, permit me to say before the Chair rules, pursuant to section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive the provisions of that part of the act as cited by our distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee. I move the waiver. Can we be heard on this particular score just for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to waive is debatable.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will be very brief. I am confident there is a misunderstanding because, when my distinguished chairman calls this waiver a budget buster, I can cite nothing better than the Sasser Good-Government Certificate. I read from the Budget Committee memorandum, dated November 13, 1989. I say to my colleagues, this is before section 614. Without 614, we brought the first conference report to the floor of the Senate and this is the report of the Budget Committee. I read:

> The conference Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill is $100 million below the Senate 302(b) allocation in budget authority and $100 million below the Senate's 302(b) allocation in outlays.

That is when we brought back the first conference report. That was without section 614. The cardinal point here is that we had an appropriation included also for 1990, which the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee took exception to, and he prevailed. He said, "You shan't put a waiver of the authorization in there along with your appropriations." We wanted to do that, and he prevailed on that score.

Incidentally, we had been checking with him. The whole idea was not to preempt the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In fact, the House Foreign Relations Committee asked that we not put that section in until November 15. We had that section read "until November 30." But we had a certificate from the distinguished Budget Committee itself that we were $100 million below both budget authority and outlays of our 302(b) allocation. So this cannot be a budget buster. We have not added any money to it. They sent us back to conference when the Foreign Relations Committee prevailed. Thereupon, we said, "All right, if that is what you want to do, we will have to put in a section making the appropriations in accordance with the 1989 authorization." That is what section 614 said.

Yes, the State Department lost out. They have had to hold back programs and other initiatives for the months of October, November, December, January, February, March, and now into April. They passed the authorization bill in February and it's time to let them do their work. But striking 614 at this particular point of consideration by the U.S. Senate does not increase or decrease the bill at all. It just says get rid of that 614 and go to your goal of what we had passed in our original conference report.

We have the certificate right here. It is not a budget buster. What it does is bust the most vital and indispensible department of government in this era of perestroika, the fall of the Wall, ascendant capitalism, and expanding democracy. We all want to undertake new initiatives, we all want the State Department to get into the act in Eastern Europe and Central America. Yet here we threaten to cut the State Department to the bone on the basis of a technicality. This is absolutely wrong.

The OMB is not silent. I have a letter dated March 13, to the chairman of the subcommittee on the House side, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, March 13, 1990.

Hon. NEAL SMITH,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This letter concerns the possible repeal of Section 614 of the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Bill for FY 1990. I was asked about this when I testified before the House Appropriations Committee on February 7, 1990. Representative Conte inquired about the need for offsets. I responded that I was torn on the issue.

On the one hand, I favored offsets—for all the obvious, conventional reasons. On the other hand, I felt it was unfair to penalize State and USIA for what had been our collective failure to insist on offsets in funding emergency relief for the California earthquake. I said I was about 93% of the way toward decision.

After the hearing, I asked my staff to review the programs under the Subcommittee's jurisdiction to see if any legitimate offsets could be found that would not unfairly penalize an innocent party. We discovered that the SBA Disaster loan fund had over $2 billion in available resources and that less than half of that total would be used during FY 1990. We therefore suggested rescinding $475 million of the SBA funds in order to offset the budgetary impact of repealing Section 614. This rescission would have had no impact on the disaster program in FY 1990. It seemed reasonable to propose the offset to maintain the important principle of providing offsets for discretionary supplemental appropriations.

Apparently, the offset that we proposed is not acceptable. In view of this response, I have been asked to consider once again my position on offsets—given that this is an unusual case.

The case is, indeed, unusual. At the time that the first Commerce, Justice, State conference was completed (October 19th), your Subcommittee was within your 302(b) allocation. The House-Senate Conference Report included the higher funding levels for State and USIA that we are now proposing to make available by repealing Section 614. At the time of the conference, you have had enough room under your 302(b) allocation to repeal Section 614 without going over your limit.

On October 25th, however, Congress passed the second continuing resolution. It included earthquake disaster relief (with $500 million for SBA disaster loans and an increase in the SBA loan limitation to $1.8 billion). During consideration of the second continuing resolution, the House waived any Budget Act points of order that could have been raised as a result of the disaster assistance funding. In the Senate, no Member raised Budget Act points or order. In the interest of providing assistance to the State of California quickly, the Administration supported passage of the resolution.

Th additional SBA funding (and the $219 million in associated outlays from increasing the loan limit) is now included in the Budget Committee's scoring of the Subcommittee allocation. It is the reason that you have only $45 million in budget authority and $39 million in outlays remaining in your 302(b) allocation.

Of the four subcommittees that received earthquake disaster funding, yours is the only one that remains under the 302(b) ceilings. The other three, Transportation, VA/HUD, and Treasury/Postal exceed their budget authority limits by a total of over $3.4 billion. This fact lends further credence to the view that your Subcommittee had planned to accommodate funding at the Section 614 repeal levels, only to have the plan overtaken by the disaster bill.

Given that the Congress did not raise the points of order against the second continuing resolution in October, and that that is what caused the current problem, and given the apparent absence of offsets that are both acceptable and fair, I now conclude that it is unfair to insist on the points of order that could be raised against your resolution (H.J. Res. 471) to repeal Section 614 if it is not offset. In reaching this conclusion, however, please let me assure you that I view this as a very special case. The peculiarities of timing involving your original intentions, the subsequent action which triggered the interest in repeal, and the intervening decision on disaster funding apply only to your Subcommittee and the Section 614 limit. I do not view this as precedential. Indeed, I continue to believe in the fundamental importance of offsets and intend routinely to seek them for discretionary supplemental appropriations.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, it is signed by Richard G. Darman and it says it is within our budget authority and outlay levels. It is not a budget buster at all. So we are back to where we were at the very beginning. Section 614 did not lower it except temporarily with the actual spending. If you want to look at it that way, we have saved money. But the actual enactment now for a repeal of that section does not bust the budget. It goes back to the original conference report, and I have the certificate for it, that we are within the 302(b) allocation.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I wonder if I might direct a question to the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee. I just want to make sure we have all our facts in agreement. Did I understand my friend, the chairman of the committee, to state that we needed section 614 to stay within our 302(b) allocation, or was that just a misstatement?

Mr. SASSER. At the time we originally passed the bill, we did not need section 614, I am advised.

Mr. RUDMAN. That is correct.

Mr. SASSER. Let me say to my distinguished friend that what occurred at the time of the letter or communication to which the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee refers, the subcommittee was, indeed, below its allocation level. But what occurred subsequent thereto was the using up of those funds for something else other than this State Department matter.

Now we come back and say we need these funds now for the State Department. What I am saying to my friend from New Hampshire is those funds have been used up. If we want to meet the needs here of the State Department, then we need to find an offset. If we do not do that, then we breech section 311 of the Budget Act.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank my friend for his response. Let me cite three incontrovertible facts so there is no misunderstanding amongst our colleagues. Fact No. 1, when this subcommittee passed its legislation, it was well within its 302(b) allocation. No question about that. No question about that.

Incontrovertible fact No. 2. When those disaster relief packages came to the floor of the Senate, no one raised a point of order against them because we understood the enormous tragedy in South Carolina and in California. In fact, of the total package approximately $500 million of SBA disaster relief under the jurisdiction of the committee was included but included by a vote of the Senate that I believe was nearly unanimous, with no attempt whatsoever to get an offset.

Point No. 3. If the waiver that we are requesting is, in fact, passed by a supermajority of the Senate tonight, then the State Department will be in precisely the same position of every other agency of the Government at the end of October, exactly the same position. If we do not do it tonight, then essentially what is going to happen is that the State Department and USIA budget, which as I think the Senator from South Carolina pointed out is probably more needed than ever—in fact, it may be inadequate right now—is essentially going to be seriously diminished, and the net result will be that we will be paying disaster relief for Hugo and for the earthquake in California from the State Department and USIA budget.

Now, that makes no sense whatsoever. That is turning the world on its ear. Nobody ever intended, sitting in this Senate, when we heard the story from Senators HOLLINGS and THURMOND, and Senators WILSON and CRANSTON about what happened in their States, that somehow if we voted that relief, knowing that it would go well over the budget numbers for the year because of the emergency, somehow the State Department would be unable to operate, the USIA would be unable to operate, and the penalty for the humanitarian relief would come out of the hide of the State Department. That makes no sense whatsoever.

There are times around here when we have to waive the Budget Act. I have voted to waive it I think maybe once or twice in an extreme circumstance. This is one of those circumstances. The State Department, the U.S. Information Agency with its radio broadcasts all over this world to freedom-loving people, ought not to have to shut down transmitters because there was a hurricane in South Carolina or an earthquake in California. That is the effect of the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. I wish to waive it and I hope our colleagues will support me. I yield the floor.

Mr. PELL. I would like to express my strong support for the Hollings-Rudman amendment to repeal section 614. Repealing section 614 will allow the Department of State to spend funds that have already been appropriated.

If section 614 is not repealed it will have severe consequences for the Department of State. At a time when we should be expanding our diplomatic presence so as to take advantage of the changed world situation, we would have to close missions abroad and reduce our presence overseas. Failure to repeal 614 could result in the closure of more than 20 consulates and missions. It would also prevent us from opening new posts in such cities as Bratislava and Leipzig in the newly democratic Eastern Europe.

Repeal of section 614 is necessary so as to permit the United States to meet its treaty obligations to the United Nations and other international organizations. Currently the United States is paying only 40 percent of what it owes for this calendar year. Repeal of 614 would allow the use of already appropriated funds to pay all but $20 million of our current dues.

The United Nations has demonstrated its value in Nicaragua, where U.N. observers were key to the free election that ousted the Sandanistas, in Namibia, where the United Nations was midwife to that country's emergence as an independent democracy, and in the Persian Gulf, where the United Nations provided the framework for ending the bloody, costly, and dangerous Iran-Iraq war. It is our obligation to pay our dues; it is also in our vital national interest to pay.

The reason repeal of 614 causes a Budget Act problem is that the Senate has approved urgent supplementals to meet the disasters caused by Hurricane Hugo and the San Francisco earthquake. The funding for the foreign affairs agencies is completely within the level envisioned by the budget resolution.

The Budget Committee chose not to make a point of order against the budget-busting disaster relief measures. It would be unfair and contrary to our national interest to sustain a point of order now. In effect, we would be penalizing the State Department for our generosity toward the disaster victims. We would be paying for disaster relief by pulling down the American flag abroad, by forgoing opportunities to secure democracy in Eastern Europe, and by not meeting our obligations in the world. I do not think this was the intent of Senators when they voted to meet the genuine needs of victims of the natural disasters.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays. I guess you have to have, under the rule, 60 to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is correct, 60 votes. Is there further debate?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me make it crystal clear. No one is contesting the fact that the funds used for disaster relief were used for a noble purpose. Most of the funds in this supplemental appropriations bill that is before this body, are being used for a noble purpose. They are being used for emergency aid for Panama, emergency aid for Nicaragua, funds for various and sundry worthwhile domestic projects such as Head Start. No one is questioning the fact that the funds used for disaster relief were used for a noble purpose.

What we are saying is that every other item in this supplemental appropriations bill was subject to an offset. Every expenditure was offset in some way. And comes now $257 million for the State Department and there is no offset for it. We are simply presented with a check, saying go out there and borrow $257 million additional to honor this check.

Why did we not do that for the Panamanian emergency aid or for the Nicaraguan aid or for the aid to Head Start? Those are all noble things. But we did not do it with them. We said they have to be offset.

Before we start weeping all of these crocodile tears for the State Department, let me make a few points. The first is that the State Department has been one of the fastest growing areas of the Federal budget. Since 1980, the total State Department operating budget has grown by 148 percent. That is right, in one decade, 148 percent—64 percent real growth above inflation for the State Department during the decade of the 1980's.

Some of my colleagues will argue, well, of course, we needed this increase for security for our diplomats and for our facilities overseas.

I do not deny that. I do not disagree with it. I agree we ought to spend money for the security of our diplomats and for the security of our embassies. But even when you exclude the security costs, in the past decade the State Department's budget has grown by 40 percent in real terms—$4.3 billion to the State Department in the past decade in real growth.

We could go down the list of some of the things that have occurred if we are going to start weeping crocodile tears for the State Department. Remember the Moscow Embassy? How many buildings do you know that are built 400 percent over budget and 12 years behind schedule?

The State Department inspector general recently reported that the Department has paid out at least $40 million in excessive overseas allowances and benefits—$40 million—that is twice as much as the State Department will receive under this amendment.

I remember a couple of years ago when hundreds of thousands of dollars in unsigned traveler's checks were found lying around in unlocked rooms in Foggy Bottom. We have never managed to get an accurate account of how large a loss the taxpayers took on that one.

The $2 million in new silverware the State Department just had to have. They just had to have $2 million worth of new silverware while they were telling the Congress that they had to close embassies down because we did not give them enough.

I do not want to stand up here and flog the State Department. I have been a defender of them since the time I came to the Senate. I think by and large I am willing to give our diplomats whatever they need. I think they do a good job under difficult circumstances. But there is no question that there is an inordinate amount of waste in the State Department operations. There is no doubt there has been a colossal growth in the State Department budget over the last decade.

All I am saying is why does everybody else have to have an offset here but not the Department of State? That is the only question I am asking. That is why I am raising this point of order. Why should we go to the bank and borrow $257 million from the Japanese to finance the State Department operations when we do not do it for emergency aid to Panama, to Nicaragua, or funds for Head Start that are in this supplemental appropriations bill, or other things?

It is just that simple. Do we treat them differently from everybody else? That is the only reason I am raising this point of order here this evening on the Budget Act. Do we want to save money or not? Do we want to find an offset or not? It is just that simple. We do not want to open up a floodgate here. If so, let us open it up right down the line and abandon the process.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana may go ahead, and I will follow him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON. In the Appropriations Committee we set a rule that was very clear, understood by anyone, and that is any amendment in addition to that which we started out with that added money had to be offset. That was the rule, Mr. President.

So everybody went to work looking for offsets. The Byrd amendment this morning which would have funded WIC, and Indian health, agricultural disasters, environmental cleanup, found an offset. It so happened that this body did not think the offset was proper because that offset had to do with Panama. This body looked at Panama, and said Panama today under these circumstances is more important than WIC, Indian health, agricultural disaster, and environmental cleanup.

It was a good debate. We all understood it. But, Mr. President, now the State Department is asking for some special treatment under the Budget Act. They are asking that they be allowed to break the budget by $363 million in budget authority, by $257 million in outlays because they say it was spent on something else. A worthy cause to be sure—disaster relief. Keeping in mind that this body said no to disaster relief, to other Americans, but now we are going to say we are being asked to say break the budget, and we were not being asked to break the budget this morning. But we are being asked to break the budget not a little bit, but a lot—$363 million for the State Department. Mr. President, if we do that, Senators mark this well, we open up the floodgates.

I have here the so-called master list of amendments. It is very difficult to tell precisely what these amendments do. But here is one that says $25 million, school dropout. That to me says it is a bust-the-budget amendment for $25 million.

Here is one that says DOD impacted schools. DOD impacted schools has to do with money. Frankly, that is one I wish we would fund because they are funded at $11 million less than last year. They are hurting, and it is a good purpose. But do you want to bust the budget for them as well?

Here is one on GSA public buildings. I do not know whether that involves money or not.

Here is one for $17 million, National Crime Information Center. Mr. President, if we are going to open the gate for this amendment are we going to say no to a National Crime Information Center?

Here is one, $5 million for food safety inspections. That is a great purpose, Mr. President. And it looks to me like we ought to fund it.

That is just the front page. That is only the first page of the master list of amendments. I do not know what else is in here. There are only some 20-something amendments here on the front page. You just heard those that involve money. I guess there are about three pages of these things.

Mr. President, the question is, Is the State Department a worthy enough cause for you to break the budget to the tune of $363 million in budget authority, and $257 million in outlays?

The House of Representatives considered this very matter, and the House said no. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate ought to say no as well. If we say yes, you immediately bust this budget by this fact alone, and you create a precedent for everybody else's pony to get under the tent. I hope we will not do that.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, right to the point being made, if we really needed an offset, I think I could have easily put in a third of a B-2 Stealth bomber and picked up $250 million easily out of the Federal budget. No attempt was made because it was not necessary. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana mentioned a raft of prospective amendments involving new spending, but what is really sad, listening to the Senator from Tennessee, is that their real objection has less to do with the budget than with their ax to grind with State. So it is not a budget point of order. It is a policy and fiscal point of order they are trying to make. They say we are spending too much money in the State Department.

We are privileged on this subcommittee to have the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee as a member of the subcommittee. If he ever expressed this view in that subcommittee, in the full committee, on the floor when we passed it, or when we had the conference report, I will jump off the Capitol dome.

We never heard these objections before. We had the hearings. We just had the Secretary of State yesterday. Yes, I can tell you about the Moscow Embassy. Everybody knows about that fiasco. I have been trying my best. We have been through several administrations trying to straighten it out. It is a penetrated building, and we will have to tear it down. We do not need a GAO report or whatever they are talking about.

But there is another matter that this budget chairman and this budget member certainly know about, and that is the depreciation of the dollar because of our fiscal mess, because we have not paid our bills. Every time I pick up that State Department appropriation, I feel just like the Senator from Tennessee.

Egads, where is all this money going? Because I cannot explain it to the good people of South Carolina. I know that they are not for a Department of State. As the former Senator from Georgia used to say, we have an Asian desk at State, a European desk, a South American desk, and what we need is an American desk to stand up for the United States of America.

So I know the political nuances that are at work here. But what happens is that foreign currencies go up, up, up and away as our dollar goes down, down, down. So automatically that results in a 30-percent increase each year. I am really surprised to hear that there is only a 170-percent increase because you can add it up over a 10-year period.

Yes. We had terrorist activities. We had the Bobby Inman report. They recommended $4 billion for security. The next thing you know, we in the committee saw they were tearing down good buildings and losing good properties. It was absolutely ridiculous. It took us about 3 or 4 years of hearings and debates on this floor, Senator RUDMAN, myself and several others to stop that nonsense.

We have been holding the line on the State Department budget. But let me get to the real point to the effect that all the other measures had an offset.

I want to remind the Senator from Louisiana that this is a committee amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. That is the action we took on this particular amendment, and conducted it as a committed amendment.

I can tell you, if you really want to go through this bill, and we will, before we get through with these amendments, I will show the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana what "shooting the moon" really means. We are truly going to have to shoot the moon in section 320. We are talking about $258 million here. But they put in one provision costing $31 billion this year, and $33 billion next year, and they did it without any discussion. The provision says, amend the Budget Act and use the working capital to bailout all those rascals in the savings and loan industry.

And I am trying to get more money in the FBI. They appeared this morning, and they are cutting the budget for combating white-collar crime, and I am trying to grab them in the savings and loans. The committee cut $64 billion. Look at the back page of this blooming bill if you want to know where money goes, if you are fiscally responsible. And we got together and agreed everything is going to be offset. You have a "shoot-the-moon" amendment in here, as old Senator Long would have said. Now they're telling us, "64 billion bucks, just put it off budget. Do not offset, just off budget." You have to learn how to talk to get along up here. And really balanced budgets, to be fiscally responsible, not offset, but off budget.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if I might ask the distinguished manager on this side two questions before I make my remarks. Will the Senator engage me in a couple of questions?

Mr. RUDMAN. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Somewhere in the back of my mind I recall the issue of the diaster relief bill, which you alluded to in your previous. At that time, it was generally understood that we were going to break the budget targets and that some of the money was in fact coming out of the Subcommittee on Appropriations that funds the State Department. I also recall that something happened on the floor after we did that, with reference to that fact that we had, in fact, busted the budget without any point of order, and it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire was involved in asking the Senate to do something to rectify that situation. Do you recall what that was?

Mr. RUDMAN. I do recall. I offered a sense-of-the-Senate resolution that the committee should find an offset sometime soon after that action. I believe that action was either late in the evening on a Thursday or Friday. I said we ought to find an offset. I believe it passed unanimously, as the record will show, and I have not seen anybody do anything about it until tonight.

Mr. DOMENICI. I had one other question. Somebody said—I do not remember which Senator—that the U.S. House did not accomplish the same thing that the waiver tonight offered by Senator HOLLINGS is going to accomplish; does the Senator have information on that? I thought a majority of the House agreed with this.

Mr. RUDMAN. The House was operating under the suspension of the rules. The vote was 276 to 149 in favor of this proposition, but, of course, it failed to gain two-thirds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I am going to be very brief. I think all of the arguments have been made. Since I am not going to agree with the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee—he has a tough job, and I greatly admire and respect him—I am going to vote for the waiver.

FIrst of all, everybody ought to know that we have a Budget Act, and we have a specific provisions in it that says it is not easy, but in the event you find a circumstance that truly justifies it, then you may waive.

So it is not as if we are doing anything that is illegal. In fact, the law itself contemplated events such as this one tonight, and if you agree with the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire and others, then you should vote that this is a very untoward and different circumstance, and I believe it is.

I do not accept any of the arguments that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana made with reference to further waivers for new amendments on the floor to this supplemental bill. Amendments for brand new programs, as meritorious as they are, are not like this issue. I want to take a couple minutes to tell you how I see it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to finish my arguments, and I will be glad to yield at that time.

Mr. President, last Halloween the Appropriations subcommittee that handles some of our foreign programs, as well as the Commerce and Justice Departments, which is the subject matter before us tonight, came to the floor of the U.S. Senate with a conference report. That bill, after weeks of hearings, clearly laid out the level at which we should fund the USIA and the State Department and all of its activities. Incidentally, it included a rather substantial increase for the State Department inspector general, who is involved and engaged right now in badly needed overseas audits and management reviews which we are hearing about tonight. He and his staff are not going to be able to finish those.

The U.S. Information Service, which includes valuable activities that encouraged freedom's movement ahead. They are not going to be able to do their job in these emerging democracies. The appropriators said to the U.S. Congress, here is what we ought to spend on the State Department and the USIA.

Well, what happened was a very interesting situation on the floor. The authorization bill for the State Department, including those programs, was caught up in some kind of dispute, and it did not make it to the President's signature by the time that appropriation bill with the 1990 budget was here.

So what happened? In an effort to accommodate this dispute about not having an authorization bill, the appropriations conferees provided at the end of the bill, that no matter what is provided in the main text of the bill for the USIA and the State Department, we are going to spend at last year's levels. Most Members were expecting the authorization bill to come along shortly, which would release the fence. It did come along shortly but not in time. The fence could have been released. But what happened was that Hurricane Hugo and the California earthquake intervened.

Nobody expected it. We want to take care of emergencies, and so we did. And we spent money from various places, and indeed we spent some for programs from this particular subcommittee and its budget allocation. Then, the distinguished Senator, Senator RUDMAN said, "Where is the offset for these disasters?" Why was he asking? Of course, he is a budgeteer and worried about budgets. But he was asking because we had taken money out of the annual appropriation for the State Department, and he is wondering when are you going to offset that disaster spending so this State Department can operate in a very complicated and rapidly changing world?

The response of the U.S. Senate, unanimously, was we will find some setoff someday. They did not find them, then, or since.

So here we are tonight with the State Department well into its fiscal year. What would you expect if you were Secretary of State, and required to operate under last year's budget—to run the State Department under the appropriation for the prior year? I believe you would assume that the U.S. Congress would do what was right and take that fence off and fund the full appropriated account.

That is all this waiver does. That is all this proposal by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina does. It restores the annual appropriation to its level that we voted for last October, because we knew it was what they needed.

Is it the responsibility of the State Department of the United States to come over here tonight and provide an offset that we did not find for so long? Is it their responsibility to come over here and say: "We expect our annual appropriation. The reason for the fence is gone because you passed your authorization bill which was the reason for the fence." Or is it our responsibility, rarely as it may be, for 60 of us at least to do the right thing. Let us fund the State Department at the level that we agreed it needed for this year and not at the previous year's level. We agreed to the higher levels about all of the dramatic activity in Europe and Central America that demands the State Department of the United States be involved not less but more.

Without this budget waiver, the Department, with its inspector general, with its new relationship with Mexico and other new demands, is apt to close down activities we need more than ever in the new international environment.

So I conclude that this is exactly the kind of thing we had in mind when we wrote the waiver into the Budget Act.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I said this matter had been defeated in the House of Representatives. It was so stated in my notes, and my notes are what I always rely upon. I am then since advised by the same person who wrote the notes that the matter was brought up in the House only on a Suspension Calendar and it failed to get the necessary two-thirds vote and so, therefore, was killed.

In other words, the notes and, therefore, I, were both correct.

Am I stating it correctly?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. The Senator stated it correctly. Senator RUDMAN'S response to the Senator from New Mexico was that because the House measure to repeal section 614 needed a two-thirds vote, it failed, but he informed me of the actual vote. He did not say it passed, but it was close to 2 to 1 in favor. The Senator is correct; under the two-thirds suspension requirement, the House measure failed. The Senator from New Hampshire merely reported the House bill had far more than the simple majority, more than 60, but legal approval required a two-thirds vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It failed, but it got a moral victory.

Mr. DOMENICI. It failed, but got a gigantic majority.

Mr. MACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. MACK. Again this is for the purpose of a question.

The Senator mentioned that the failure to provide a waiver would cut off funds necessary to continue the audits that would in fact impact USIA. I heard an earlier Senator refer to the fact that Radio Free Europe, Radio Liberty, Voice of America would be affected.

I wonder if this would have impact on Radio Marti and TV Marti, two areas that I think are important in the sense of continuing to deliver that message of freedom which many of us have talked about earlier, an important message that had an impact in Eastern Europe, that clearly could have impact in Cuba as well. I wonder if someone would indicate that to me.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think it might be better if the manager on my side responded specifically. I am not aware it affects Marti or any others.

Mr. RUDMAN. To be specific, certain broadcast activities not affected, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty. All USIA broadcasts, an overwhemling number, Radio Marti, I assume, TV Marti, all of those would be affected and are being affected.

Mr. MACK. I say in response, I hope those who have been supportive in the past of Radio Marti and TV Marti will certainly take that in consideration and support a waiver of the provision.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me just say the reason that we are discussing this later here this evening and the reason it is being raised as a separate amendment is that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee did not want to include it in the supplemental appropriations bill because there was no offset and he knew it would be subject to a point of order. That is the reason the amendment of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina is not included in the supplemental appropriations bill here this evening.

Now, this issue is raised simply to call our colleagues attention to the fact that if this issue passes they will be voting to increase the budget deficit for fiscal year 1990 by $257 million. There is just no getting around that. I think everybody ought to understand that.

I do not raise this point of order because I have a vendetta against the State Department. Quite the contrary. We do not raise this point of order to cause any of our colleagues any undue difficulty. I find it frankly a little abusive that there is some breast-beating going on on this floor, "We are going to do the right thing; we are going to support the State Department.

Go right ahead and support the State Department, but I would say this poor "Joe Six Pack" that I hear my distinguished friend from Texas refer to quite often, or the folks who get out there and pull the wagon while we are doing the right thing, those are the folks who are going to have to reach in their back pocket and pay this $257 million that we are going to go out and borrow.

I am simply saying to my distinguished friend from South Carolina, who I hold in the highest esteem, let us do not take a couple big shots of barleycorn here tonight. Let us find an offset. He has a great idea. Let us find us a couple B-2 bombers. I think that is the way to do it. There is no need to increase the deficit; just get a wing on one of those B-2 bombers. That is all we have to do. And then the State Department can have their money and our colleague from Florida can listen to Radio Marti and maybe even go down to Havana and tune in or see the first test pattern from TV Marti, and we will not have to have to increase this deficit.

That is the reason that I as the chairman of the Budget Committee raise this point of order. I would love to see the State Department get the money. But I simply say that if we are going to do it with the State Department, we ought to do it for everybody else. We are simply asking here for offset. If one is not forthcoming, then we are going to increase the deficit. It is subject to a point of order and I would urge my colleagues not to vote tonight to increase the budget deficit for fiscal year 1990 by $257 million because that is exactly what you are going to be doing if you vote to waive this point of order this evening.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator from South Carolina seek recognition?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to waive section 311(a) of the Budget Act and ask for for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think there may be people who are a little shocked to find that GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS are here apparently voting to bust the budget and all these people who so righteously talk about protecting the budget have been known from time to time to vote to waive the Budget Act not on technicalities but on new spending programs.

Mr. President, for one final time I would like to just outline the sequence of events we are talking about here.

First of all, last year we adopted a budget and the budget was a bipartisan compromise. Part of that budget was agreement on the level of spending for the 150 function which is the function that includes the funding that is under debate here. We set that out. We voted on it. We set a ceiling and a floor in that budget. Then the Appropriations Committee divided up the money within its subcommittees, again staying within that 150 function spending limit which was within the budget targets and within the budget guidelines, which had been adopted.

The subcommittee that now has the amendment before us kept its appropriation within the budget figure set out by that budget and within the requirements of our budget laws.

That appropriation bill was adopted by the Senate.

So far we have written a budget and we have written an appropriation bill within the budget.

Next there occurred a jurisdictional dispute, not a dispute about money, but a dispute about the political power of two committees, an authorizing committee and an appropriations subcommittee.

And, as a result of that dispute, a dispute not about whether this money is within the budget, not whether we have agreed to it in the budget—nobody disputes that that is a fact—but whether or not the authorizing committee must authorize the appropriations contained within the appropriations bill.

As a result of that dispute, a fence was placed around part of the State Department budget. It would be removed when the authorizing bill was enacted—a dispute about jurisdiction; not a dispute about money.

Now that fence must be removed because the authorizing legislation has been signed into law. We are having a great debate tonight, and I am sure everybody is having great fun, and it would have been a wonderful debate had it been on a relevant subject.

In fact, if our dear chairman of the Budget Committee had gotten up and made this point on the Hugo disaster assistance package, it would have been relevant and every word he said tonight would have been relevant. I wonder where he was that evening.

Where he was that evening was the same place everybody else was that evening. Nobody wanted to oppose the spending of a billion dollars on disaster relief assistance, so we sat here and that money was spent and nobody complained about it.

Now we reach the point after money was budgeted, appropriated, authorized, and now all of a sudden, to make some big political point, there is a point of order raised here and in an attempt to make the case that somehow this is a budget debate. That debate would have been a great debate about funding Hugo disaster aid, but it is a totally irrelevant and false debate about whether or not now we should release the money that we have already appropriated to fund the State Department.

If this were new funding, if this were an addition above the budget we adopted, above the appropriation that we adopted within that budget, there is no possibility that I would vote to waive the Budget Act to allow this money to be spent. But the truth is, this money was budgeted, was appropriated, and now the fence must be lifted and the question is on a technicality; are we going to prevent the money from being spent?

So the question we are voting on here is not busting the Budget Act, it is about a technicality. The busting of the budget occurred because of a hurricane and an earthquake. This would have been a relevant debate that night and it should have occurred, and we should have come up with an offset. We did not.

But it is not relevant to the debate here, and that is why I intend to vote for this waiver. A waiver, as the distinguished Senator from New Mexico pointed out, was clearly contemplated in the law and intended to be used exactly for this kind of purpose.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if I may just make one final statement. Mr. President, this is a historic evening in the history of the U.S. Senate. Tonight, Mr. President, we have seen that tight-fisted, frugal trio of GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS all support a waiver of the Budget Act that, if it succeeds, will increase the indebtedness of the U.S. Government by $257 million.

I rest my case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] to waive section 311(a) of the Budget Act for the consideration of amendment No. 1534 to H.R. 4404.

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 30, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 65 Leg.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question, the yeas are 62, the nays are 30. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RUDMAN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Can we pass the amendment by voice vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1534) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LOW-INCOME HOME ENERGY ASSISTANCE

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the pending legislation, H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. I particularly support the additional funds for programs under the jurisdiction of the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education subcommittee. While I will not take the Senate's time by itemizing all of the subcommittee's provisions, I do want to highlight one item of vital importance to Pennsylvania, the provision of $50 million in additional funds for the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program.

Mr. President, like many other States, Pennsylvania experienced one of the coldest Decembers in history with exceptionally severe temperatures and skyrocketing heating oil prices. In the Commonwealth, heating oil prices increased from 85.2 cents per gallon in November 1989, to a high of $1.284 cents per gallon in early January. Although prices leveled off after that, they were still 99.6 cents per gallon in February. In the Philadelphia area, heating oil prices increased over 60 percent, from approximately 85 cents a gallon in the beginning of December 10 approximatley $1.40 by month's end.

In Pennsylvania, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program provides an average basic grant of $225 to between 300,000 and 400,000 households, and a supplemental "crises" grant of up to $300 for households facing the shutoff of heating services. Due to the cold weather and sustained increases in the cost of heating oil this year, more families in Pennsylvania applied for Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program crisis assistance than last year. This year, after 24 weeks into the program, the total number of Pennsylvania households that applied for crisis assistance was 92,318, as compared to 80,774 at the same time last year. As a result, Pennsylvania has spent 18.5 percent more than last year for crises benefits for all families. All of Pennsylvania's LIHEAP Program funds were expended by March 31, 1990. The State is currently using oil overcharge funds available through the Energy Conservation and Assistance Act to meet its LIHEAP payment obligations and keep the program funded through the winter.

Mr. President, the high costs of home heating seriously threatens the poor and elderly on fixed incomes. It has been repeatedly observed that the typical low-income household must devote 15 percent of its income to cover heat and energy bills, four times the percentage the typical middle income family must pay. Those on low and fixed incomes must often choose between maintaining a livable home environment, and other basic necessities such as, food, medicine, clothing and transportation. Without home heating assistance, it is not surprising that given such difficult choices, families often must sacrifice a livable home environment.

During December and January 1990, many tragedies occurred in households around the Nation due to this sacrifice. There were several incidents in which persons froze to death in their own homes or died in fires resulting from hazardous alternatives to oil heat such as candles, space heaters and illegal connections to the electric service of neighboring property.

Three such incidents occurred in Philadelphia over a period of just a few weeks and involved the deaths of three adults and five young children. Two senior citizens froze to death in their home which used oil heat. Apparently, their oil tank was empty and they had no telephone to call for help. In the two other cases, young children died in accidental fires as a result of a loss of home heating.

Mr. President, Pennsylvania and other States affected by the bitterly cold December weather, particularly States in the Northeast, have run short of funds. I long have supported this program, and respectfully urge my colleagues to provide the $50 million in supplemental funds for States in financial need due to the unforseen high cost of home heating during the 1989-90 heating season.

CORRECTIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the pending legislation, H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. This legislation includes necessary funding for many important Government programs, such as disaster assistance, food stamps, and unemployment compensation, in addition to providing for the transfer of funds among various Government programs as needed.

I also take this opportunity to call to the attention of my colleagues an important issue addressed by the pending bill's committee report; namely, correctional education.

The Department of Education serves as the principal source of Federal funding for correctional education. There are several offices within the Department which administer the funds that support these programs. The Office of Vocational and Adult Education allocates a portion of its grants to States to support corrections education, and chapter 1 programs for neglected and delinquent children in State-run institutions and for juveniles in adult facilities.

I long have been concerned regarding the attention accorded to these programs and the coordination among their activities. It is imperative that the Department monitor, provide information and technical assistance to State and local education agencies and ensure that funds are being spent as intended by Congress.

I believe it is necessary to develop and expand programs to provide training in literacy and marketable job skills for inmates. Therefore, language has been included, at my request, in the committee report accompanying the supplemental appropriations bill. This report language directs the Department of Education to designate a senior level official within the Office of Vocational and Adult Education to serve as the central focus for correctional education programs. This official will coordinate all programs within the Department, provide technical support to State and local educational agencies, and advise the Secretary on matters concerning correctional education policy.

In addition, the language specifies that the official must have experience in the corrections education field. This expertise is essential if we are to better address the special rehabilitation needs of the criminal offender. Finally, I have requested that the Department of Education report to the Committee on Appropriations by September 1, 1990, on steps being taken to develop a coordinated program to address correctional education needs in this country.

Mr. President, the committee report language is based on my work with Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos. I also am working with Bureau of Prisons Director Michael Quinlan to develop and expand correctional education programs. I have raised this issue personally with Director Quinlan in a number of recent meetings and with Secretary Cavazos during hearings on April 4, 1989, and February 21, 1990, before the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, on which I serve as ranking minority member. Director Quinlan and Secretary Cavazos have expressed interest in this area and are personally committed to expanding the Government's role in correctional education. Through the Judiciary and Appropriations Committees, on which I serve, I look forward to continuing working them toward this end.

This approach is based on the growing prison crisis facing our country on the Federal, State, county, and local levels. I long have worked to address crime on many fronts, including providing tough, mandatory sentences for career criminals, and working for additional funding to build more cells to house the expanding inmate population. Yet, we also must provide realistic rehabilitation for youthful, first and some second offenders.

During my tenure as district attorney of Philadelphia and during tours of jails as Senator, I learned first hand that many prisoners are routinely released as functional illiterates without a skill or trade. Therefore, it is not surprising that many of these inmates return to the streets and a life of crime. Approximately 20 years ago, on October 20, 1971, the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, on which I served, was appointed "to formulate for the first time national criminal justice standards and goals for crime reduction and prevention at the State and local levels." On January 23, 1973, the Commission released its "National Strategy to Reduce Crime," which set forth national goals and priorities for many aspects of the criminal justice system, including police, courts, corrections, community crime prevention, and criminal code revisions. At that time, the commission in its comprehensive report noted the significant role of education as a component of crime reduction and the importance of correctional facilities operating industrial programs that aid an inmate's reentry into society.

Noting that rehabilitation is essential to reducing the rate of recidivism among the inmate population, I introduced legislation in the 97th, 98th, 99th, 100th, and 101st Congresses—S. 1690, S. 59, S. 1190, S. 413, and S. 181, respectively—to encourage States to provide certain prisoners with training in a marketable job skill and basic literacy. In 1981, the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Juvenile Justice, of which I served as chairman, held hearings on a series of crime bills, including S. 1690, regarding State efforts in this area. At that time, witnesses testified in support of the bill's goals and purposes. In addition, on April 11, 1989, I introduced S. 746, the Crime Control Act of 1989, which includes an authorization for additional funding for the Federal and State correctional systems to develop and expand prisoner education and vocational training programs.

Mindful of the pressing need to address prisoner illiteracy, Congress also approved $40 million between fiscal years 1984 and 1986, which I advocated as the former chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on the District of Columbia, to expand education and vocational training programs at the District's Lorton Prison to establish a model rehabilitation program. Based on testimony provided by city officials, preliminary results of this program are impressive and encouraging. On June 28, 1988, the former Director of the D.C. Department of Corrections, Hallen Williams, testified before the District of Columbia Subcommittee that by December 1987, 6,000 inmates had completed the academic programs at Lorton, which include courses in Adult Basic Education, General Educational Development, Special Education, Life Skills and Job Readiness, and Employment Techniques, Awareness and Preparation. In the vocational area, 3,000 inmates had completed programs in accounting, automotive body repair, plumbing, landscape/gardening, and computer repair.

Such programs have enormous potential to provide former inmates with job opportunities. A related benefit is that inmates who participate in the programs are more likely to avoid reincarceration than those who do not. In 1988, Director Williams also reported that 73 percent of participating former inmates remained in the community, as compared with 52 percent of those who did not participate in the vocational programs.

In light of Mrs. Bush's long-standing interest in promoting literacy, together we toured the Lorton facility in 1986 to explore first hand the initial implementation phase of the model vocational initiative. It is clear, therefore, that we must take advantage of what has been learned in the District's program and work to replicate it nationally.

Illiteracy is a serious problem facing our Nation. A generally used definition of literacy is the ability to read, write, and perform computation at a minimum of an 8th grade level. Reports indicate, however, that at least 23 million Americans can be considered illiterate. Of this total, an estimated 4 million individuals cannot read at all; 45 million adults read with only minimal comprehension.

The cost of illiteracy to society is staggering. Reports estimate that illiteracy costs between $200 and $237 billion annually in lost productivity, crime, accidents, employee errors, extra training programs, and lost tax revenue. In addition, the American Society for Training and Development estimates that American businesses spend $1 billion a year on basic education in addition to the billions they spend on specific occupational skills.

The problem of illiteracy among the inmate population is especially serious and complex. The Correctional Education Association reports that more than 3 million individuals are seriously invoilved with the criminal justice system each year, and currently there are more than 1 million inmates in our nation's prisons, jails, and juvenile detention facilities. The statistics provided by the association regarding inmate illiteracy are staggering: 8 out of 10 adult inmates lack high school diplomas; 20 to 40 percent have educational disabilities limiting educational development; more than 75 percent are functionally illiterate; and most have no or poor employment histories, with 40 percent being unemployed and 12 percent employed only part-time when arrested.

In light of the progress made in the past decade to address illiteracy, however, there are grounds for optimism. In May 1981, then Chief Justice Warren Burger recommended that all inmates released from prison should be literate and have a marketable skill. Shortly thereafter in November 1981, the Federal Bureau of Prisons Education Task Force recommended a mandatory literacy standard at the 6th grade level, which was established throughout the prison system in May 1982. The literacy standard was raised to the 8th grade level on July 1, 1986.

As reflected in materials provided by the Bureau of Prisons, all inmates are tested with the Adult Basic Level Examination [ABLE] to measure education achievement. If an inmate is below the 8th grade level, he or she must enroll in the education program for a mandatory 90-day period. Based on representations made to me, I am hopeful that the Bureau of Prisons will expand this education program to meet the increasing inmate population and lengthen the amount of time an inmate participates in the program.

While much more remains to be done, significant efforts are underway to expand correctional education. A recent report, "Learning Behind Bars: Selected Educational Programs for Juvenile, Jail and Prison Facilities," published by the Correctional Education Association and produced by WQED/Pittsburgh for the National Media Outreach Center, highlights a number of successful correctional education programs nationwide. I am pleased to note that of the 30 programs discussed in this notable report, the following are in my State of Pennsylvania: the Philadelphia Prisons, the Prison Literacy Project in Ardmore, and the Huntingdon Prison Literacy Project.

In addition, on February 24 through 27, 1990, a Correctional Education Leadership Forum was held in Washington, hosted by the International Correctional Education Association [CEA] in cooperation with the Association of State and Federal Directors of Correctional Education [ASFDCE] and the National Juvenile Detention Association. The American Correctional Association also has provided strong leadership in this field for approximately 30 years. Such activities provide valuable information and strong impetus for advancing the development of correctional education.

The issue of illiteracy generally and prisoner illiteracy specifically have far reaching and debilitating consequences for our nation. It is therefore incumbent upon us to press forward in developing correctional education as a national priority. Thus, the language in the committee report accompanying the bill we consider today represents a significant step toward this goal, and I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this initiative.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I am pleased to present various recommendations for the 1990 Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act. These recommendations were approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee in its markup session on April 24, 1990.

The bill provides emergency watershed protection and conservation assistance through programs of the Department of Agriculture's Soil Conservation Service. In the aftermath of Hurricane Hugo, as well as other flood and storm disasters of last year, watershed damage to the countryside was extensive. Emergency funds of $42,000,000 will assure that necessary watershed and flood prevention technical assistance is available to help South Carolina and other States recover from the devastation of these disasters.

In addition, $10,000,000 is provided for the Emergency Conservation Program of the Agricultural Stabilization and Soil Conservation Service to help in meeting requests for assistance following various disasters, such as the earthquake, tornados, floods, drought, and hurricanes, experienced in 21 States.

The bill also contains provisions for immediate funding of top-priority programs underway at the Department of Agriculture [USDA], the Commodity Futures Trading Commission [CFTC], and the Food and Drug Administration [FDA]. The committee rejected the administration's proposed rescissions totaling $45,083,000 for USDA facilities of the Agricultural Research Service and the Cooperative State Research Service.

Two major areas of concern are reflected in the committee report under the $8,000,000 recommended for USDA's Animal Plant Health Inspection Service [APHIS].

First, the continuing threat of severe grasshopper infestations requires an emergency response by Congress. Immediate grasshopper control programs must be implemented in order to protect North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota from serious economic losses. Especially on Conservation Reserve Program lands, where infestations are most critical, control efforts must get underway by mid-May. The committee has recommended $6,800,000 for APHIS to cooperate with States and producers in meeting this emergency.

Second, the committee has recommended $1,200,000 so that APHIS can join forces with industry in control and eradication of pseudorabies. Enhancing this cooperative effort will ensure that the 10-year pseudorabies eradication plan can be realized.

Noting that participation in the Federal Crop Insurance Program for the 1990 crop year is larger than initial estimates, supplemental funds of $15,000,000 are necessary to pay administrative and operating expenses. The administration proposed a change in authorization to allow for payment of these expenses out of the Federal Crop Insurance Fund. Instead, the committee has recommended a direct appropriation of the amount necessary to the administrative and operating expenses account from which these expenses have traditionally been paid.

For the Rural Electrification Administration, the administration proposed the reduction of insured loan levels of $23,500,000 for the electric program and $105,900,000 for the telephone program. The committee rejected both of these proposals and further directs that the maximum amounts of loan funds be made available for obligation in 1990.

For the Food and Nutrition Service, the committee approved $4,700,000 for the Commodity Supplemental Food Program [CSFP]. Although Congress provided ample funds for expansion of the Commodity Supplemental Food Program in 1990, these funds were used by the agency instead to purchase replacement commodities when a shortage of nonfat dry milk supplies occurred early in the fiscal year. For the remainder of 1990, the funds recomended will ensure, at minimum, total actual monthly participation of 176,000 mothers, infants, and children and 111,000 seniors in CSFP.

Based on current estimates, the committee approved $705,000,000 in supplemental appropriations for the Food Stamp Program of the Food and Nutrition Service. Of this amount, $135,000,000 will be held in reserve to be used only if necessary to pay benefits to eligible households.

For the Food and Drug Administration, the committee agreed with the House in providing $13,900,000 for generic drug program activities. User fees, proposed by the administration, were rejected.

Finally, $3,655,000 in supplemental funds are recommended to enable the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to meet the increasing demand for oversight of trading on various commodity and futures index exchanges. These funds will allow the agency to employ 25 additional staff who will be responsible for surveilliance and investigation of commodity trading practices.

I am pleased to provide the foregoing summary of the provisions recommended by the Agriculture subcommittee to the 1990 dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. These are immediate, worthwhle requirements that I believe deserve adoption by the Senate.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the committee reported version of this dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill.

The chairman of our full committee, Senator ROBERT BYRD, has done an outstanding job in bringing together the diverse elements of this bill.

As chair of the VA, HUD and Independent Agencies Subcommittee, there are a number of important programs I would like to mention.

I. DISASTER RELIEF

In title I of the bill, $50 million is provided to the Federal Emergency Management Agency for disaster relief payments to victims of recent storms, floods and tornadoes in the southeastern United States.

II. VETERANS PROGRAMS

For America's veterans, the bill provides new appropriations totaling $529 million; $435 million of this amount is for mandatory programs. These are in areas like VA pensions and the VA loan guaranty revolving fund, which have experienced greater than anticipated need since action on the regular 1990 VA appropriations bill.

In addition, the bill provides $94 million for VA medical care. These funds are needed to bring yearend medical care staffing to 194,638 full-time equivalents. This will allow for the restoration of cuts in staffing at all 172 of VA's hospitals.

These medical care dollars will also go to partially reduce the VA's $600 million medical care equipment backlog. At many VA facilities, equipment like CAT scans and dialysis machines are in short supply, and this will help alleviate the worst situations confronting the VA in this area.

III. HOUSING PROGRAMS

The bill contains a number of provisions related to the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Most important among these is $72 million to meet a shortfall in the operating subsidy account for the Nation's 3,000 public housing authorities.

HUD has now admitted that there is a shortfall of $122 million in the operating subsidy as a result of higher than expected heating and insurance costs over the past year.

While less than the full amount needed to meet this shortfall, the funds in the bill will go a long way to guarantee that the public housing stock will not deteriorate from lack of routine maintenance and security.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

Finally, the bill contains several provisions important to key Federal independent agencies.

American Battle Monuments Commission: $500,000 so they can rebuild their headquarters' office which was recently destroyed by fire.

NASA: $45 million for additional funds in salaries and expenses so they can meet important personnel needs in the shuttle program and as they prepare for beginning the Mission to Planet Earth initiative in 1991.

Housing commissions: $2.5 million is included to fund two independent commissions authorized by the HUD Reform Act of 1989. One commission deals with Native American housing and the other with severely distressed public housing. Both are to take up their tasks promptly upon receiving startup funds and develop plans of action for the Secretary of Housing within 12 months of their creation.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill. Once again, the chairman has brought to the floor responsible legislation, worthy of his strong leadership, that meets critical national and international needs.

I am particularly pleased that the committee provided $300 million for Nicaragua because the aid package is the result of strategic planning. In 1987, the International Commission on Central American Recovery and Development set out to draw a blueprint for economic development in Central America. The Commission was unique because it consisted primarily of Central Americans, with help from representatives of other donor countries and international organizations. There were four Nicaraguan members, two with ties to the Sandanista government and two affiliated with what was then the opposition. One of those commissioners, Francisco Mayorga, is now the chief economic advisor to President Chamorro as well as president of the Central Bank. Another, Enrique Dreyfus, is the new Foreign Minister.

The Nicaraguan aid package is based largely upon, and is entirely consistent with, the Commission's report. It provides urgently needed assistance for refugees, including the internally displaced. It provides support for agricultural products, petroleum, and equipment needed to plant crops for this year's season. It provides debt relief and money for schools, medical care, and roads. It anticipates the future, and is a more regional approach to Central America's economic development. The aid package is a solid, thoughtful program, and one that deserves our support.

Many of us have taken the position that the root causes of the problems in Central America are economic and social, rather than military, in nature. I for one, believe that is true. In order to break the vicious cycle of conflict we must strive to eliminate its causes—poverty and inequality. Of course we cannot fix all of Nicaragua's problems with this aid package, but it's a start, and a good one.

A similar comment can be made about the $166 million provided for Head Start. This appropriation will not fix all the problems with our educational system, but it's a start, and a good one.

Since 1980, Federal spending for education has decreased by 4.7 percent in real terms, despite public outrage over the decline of the American educational system. The low priority of education within the Reagan and Bush administrations has been particularly harmful to disadvantaged children who would benefit from the Head Start Act. At this time less than 20 percent of the eligible population for Head Start can be served by the program due to budget shortfalls.

The absence of funding for Head Start is inexcusable when put in the context of the extreme poverty faced by children throughout this Nation. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 1 in every 5 children in America—some 12.6 million youngsters under the age of 18—live beneath the poverty line. Children now constitute the poorest age group in the Nation.

While there is no easy answer to the problem of ingrained poverty, study after study has shown that early childhood education programs for disadvantaged children offer the best opportunity for breaking the cycle of poverty. Research indicates that disadvantaged children who participate in Head Start are more likely to graduate from high school and to attend a postsecondary educational institution than similar nonparticipants. Likewise, children enrolled in Head Start are less likely to receive welfare payments or be involved in delinquent activity, than similar nonparticipants. Head Start can significantly reduce the rate of teenage pregnancy, the rate of future criminal activity, and the need for future special education services. One dollar spent on Head Start today will return $6 in future expenses on these problems.

To expand the obvious benefits of Head Start, I introduced legislation earlier this year to increase funding for the program by $1 billion in fiscal year 1990. As a member of the Budget Committee, I have also made Head Start one of my top priorities in the fiscal year 1991 budget.

I am extremely pleased that the committee has recognized both the dire need for Head Start funding and the effectiveness of the Head Start Program in improving the educational potential of disadvantaged children. The $166 million appropriation for Head Start in this bill would allow 60,000 new disadvantaged children to enroll in the program and increase enrollment to 22 percent of the eligible population.

I thank the chairman for his leadership on this matter, and I hope that this appropriation signals a renewed commitment on behalf of the Federal Government toward funding for early education. Clearly, much more needs to be done, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to fully fund Head Start in the near future.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, as the Senate today begins consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill, I want to call your attention to an article written by our colleague in the House, Representative WILLIAM BROOMFIELD. Representative BROOMFIELD points to the urgent need for the Congress to act now to provide aid and assistance to Nicaragua and Panama. I support this call to action, and urge my colleagues to pass this appropriations measure as quickly as possible.

Yesterday, I was privileged to attend the inauguration of President Violeta Chamoro. It was an exciting moment to witness this historic event. This experience further solidified my belief that United States assistance to Nicaragua and Panama is essential to begin consolidating the remarkable democratic gains in Central America.

I urge my colleagues to read and consider Representative BROOMFIELD's article. I further urge my colleagues to resist further delays in approving this vital appropriations measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Representative BROOMFIELD's article be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SLOW TO SUPPORT DEMOCRACY

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 24, 1990]

(By William S. Broomfield)

For years, congressional Democrats have argued that we should "give peace a chance" in Central America, that U.S. aid should support peaceful democratic change, not continued warfare. Now, with the birth of democracy in Panama and Nicaragua, congressional Democrats are suddenly timid about being the midwives for political liberty and free enterprise.

One year ago, Nicaragua and Panama were firmly in the grip of dictators determined to maintain their power. The prospects for democracy were bleak. Twelve months later, a freshly elected government is in power in Panama and one will take office tomorrow in Nicaragua. But the victories for freedom in Nicaragua and Panama will be lasting only if we now act boldly to "give democracy a chance."

Central America was the focus of the most divisive foreign policy debate in the United States since the Vietnam War. The last decade saw vicious partisan struggle in the United States and bitter civil war in Nicaragua. Thousands of Nicaraguans died fighting for their freedom. Ultimately, the heroic efforts of Nicaragua's democrats—with strong international support—decisively repudiated the Sandinista dictatorship.

In Panama, after years of narco-militarism and dictatorial rule, Operation Just Cause—with strong support of the Panamanian people—achieved the liberation of that country. In the process, 23 young Americans paid the ultimate price for freedom in Panama. The prospects for peace and democracy in Nicaragua and Panama have never been greater.

What has the U.S. response been? At a time when some are accusing President Bush of all sorts of timidity, lack of vision and poll watching, he developed a comprehensive answer to events in Central America. Mr. Bush lifted economic sanctions on Panama and Nicaragua. In January, the president requested a $542 million aid package designed to jump start the once-vigorous Panamanian economy. Immediately after the election of Violeta Chamorro, Mr. Bush requested $300 million for U.S. assistance to help rebuild Nicaragua and set a target date of April 5 for action by Congress on the aid package. Unfortunately, the rapid response of the president was not matched by Congress.

While Congress quickly approved $42 million in emergency aid for Panama, the majority of assistance to strengthen these emerging democracies in our hemisphere languishes. Despite all the political—and human—blood spilling over Central America in the last decade, congressional Democrats cannot bring themselves to work for the kinds of policies they claim to support; instead, they have resorted to neo-isolationism and inaction.

The president's aid request is fully funded by the transfer of existing resources from the Department of Defense. The president's package addresses long-term U.S. interests in Central America by laying the foundation for the institutionalization of democracy—if Congress will act. But aid for Panama and Nicaragua has not been approved because Congress is playing "politics as usual"—and in so doing is placing the future of democracy in our hemisphere at risk.

Action in the House was delayed, first by jurisdictional disputes and then by Democrats sensing an opportunity to fight yesterday's battle by restricting U.S. aid to El Salvador. Finally, on April 3 the House overwhelmingly passed the supplemental appropriations bill—but only after adding more than $1.2 billion in domestic goodies.

The Senate passed authorizing legislation but took no action on appropriating funds before the Easter recess—and evidently does not plan to act soon. The Senate chairman of a key subcommittee recently said that Panama and Nicaragua are of "slight economic, security and foreign policy importance to U.S. national interests." One wonders if he has heard of the Panama Canal.

A number of Senate Democrats have said assistance to Eastern Europe should have a higher priority than aid to Panama and Nicaragua—despite the more than $700 million Congress has already approved for Eastern Europe, despite the $1 billion or more in aid that is currently under consideration and despite the uncertain and unsettled conditions in many Eastern European states.

One powerful senator reportedly wants to divert funds to help workers dislocated by clean air legislation. And most disturbing, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell has announced that he wants to delay Senate action until the administration submits a "meaningful long-term foreign aid plan."

Aid for Eastern Europe, human rights in El Salvador, displaced workers and foreign aid strategy all deserve serious attention by Congress. However, they do not deserve to be used as roadblocks in the way of democratization in Panama and Nicaragua. Let's quit playing political games with the future of the Panamanian and Nicaraguan people. Let's see a real and immediate "peace dividend" by financing the democratization of Panama and Nicaragua from savings in the defense budget.

Thousands of Nicaraguan freedom fighters want to lay down their guns permanently. The planting season approaches in Nicaragua with the country desperately short of seeds, fertilizer and agricultural equipment. In Panama, hopes for self-sufficiency grow dimmer by the day as economic recovery remains on hold. Continued inaction by Congress only guarantees an anti-American backlash.

Nicaragua has seen an opportunity for freedom stolen by the Sandinistas in 1979. Panama has seen a bright future hijacked by Manuel Noriega and narcotics traffickers. These nations need our help and deserve our help. The longer Congress vacillates, the more certain it becomes that historic opportunities will again be lost.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to commend my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee for recognizing the emergency fire conditions in the West in the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill.

In recent weeks we have all seen a Washington spring. On Saturday Washington had rain—rain which I am sure most complained about. That rain was followed by a perfect Sunday. A day of freshly watered trees giving a bright green glow to the 20th anniversay of Earth Day. So people tell me.

I was in Nevada over the weekend, celebrating the 20th birthday of Earth Day; 20 years old. That is young—fresh. Earth Day has many more birthdays ahead of it.

Nevada's forest and California forests—both share Lake Tahoe—on the other hand, look old and wizened. The conditions in the Sierra Nevada are not at all like the fresh, green spring of Washington. It is the height of summer for Nevada and California forests. Current fire conditions in the Toiyabe National Forest are equal to those usually experienced in July. With 3 months to go until we actually reach July, and little rainfall likely, the summer of 1990 threatens to be one of devastating fires for the Sierra Nevada forests.

The Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management have a tremendous responsibility. the Sierra Nevada is turning from a bundle of kindling to a box of matches. The emergency fire fighting funds provided in the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill will restore BLM emergency firefighting accounts to reasonable levels. Also provided in the supplemental bill is $256 million for repayment of Knutson-Vandenberg trust fund dollars borrowed by the Forest Service for firefighting. K-V dollars are essential to reforesting and other custodial forest work, and are also an important resource in the time of fire emergency, such as that present and growing in the West. Full replacement of those dollars borrowed means renewed forests and a renewal of a fire emergency resource.

Again, I thank my colleagues for looking past spring on Capitol Hill to summer in the West.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to present to the Senate the defense appropriations chapter of the fiscal year 1990 supplemental appropriations bill.

Our chapter does three things. First, it provides necessary reductions to offset supplemental appropriations for several governmental activities, the largest being support of foreign assistance to Panama and Nicaragua. We do this by rescinding $1.5 billion of appropriations for various defense programs. Second, the committee proposes resolving the shortfall in military personnel appropriations by transferring $780 million to the military pay accounts by sequestering approximately 1.6 percent of the DOD's unobligated balances. Third, the committee appropriates $24 million for two high priority defense programs.

RESCISSIONS

First, let me quickly review the major reductions—the rescissions—in defense spending that we have proposed.

The committee recommends rescission of a number of programs which were identified by the Defense Department. However, the administration's proposal did not fully offset the outlay impact of the proposed Panama/Nicaragua supplemental. Therefore, the committee was required to provide alternative sources. In that regard, the committee has recommended several reductions.

The committee recommends rescission of $436.6 million to reflect savings resulting from the civilian hiring freeze instituted by the Secretary of Defense. This freeze was not assumed in either the 1990 budget request or the fiscal year 1990 Defense Appropriations Act, and, therefore, when we acted on the fiscal year 1990 bill, we appropriated funds in excess of what is now needed.

The committee recommends rescission of $52 million for major real property maintenance projects in Europe. Implementation of the Conventional Forces Europe [CFE] Treaty will result in the closure of many Army and Air Force bases in Europe. The recommendation does not affect recurring maintenance.

The committee recommends rescission of $18 million for excess flying hours. These flying hours were determined to be excess by the General Accounting Office.

The committee recommends rescission of $171 million based on the administration's decision to terminate the SR-71 airborne reconnaissance system. The fiscal year 1990 defense appropriations bill included an increase of $175 million to Operation and Maintenance, Air Force specifically for continued operation of the SR-71 aircraft. With the termination of SR-71 operations these funds are no longer required. Of the original appropriation, $4 million is retained to finish the partially completed overhaul of the SR-71 trainer aircraft.

The committee recommends rescission of $60 million in unobligated stock fund appropriations, one-half the amount currently available. If we did not rescind these funds, they could be used to build inventories in excess of the requirements of our declining force structure.

The committee recommends rescission of $60 million in Army ammunition procurement for the production of M-483 artillery rounds. We have retained $30 million to meet the costs needed to layaway the Mississippi Army Ammunition Plant.

The committee recommends rescission of $19 million in unobligated research and development funds appropriated for fiscal year 1990 for the Army to develop a new, nuclear-armed, surface-to-surface missile to replace the Lance missile in Europe. The action effectively terminates the program. Members will recall that, prior to the historic changes in Europe which are clearly leading to German reunification, NATO had endorsed R&D on the Follow-On-To-Lance [FOTL] missile in its short range nuclear forces modernization program. The committee believes these changes make deployment highly unlikely, and that any unobligated program funds should be saved.

The committee recommends rescission of $26 million from the Army's armored system modernization program recognizing delays in the defense acquisition process.

MILITARY PERSONNEL SHORTFALLS

Second, the committee has included bill language to resolve the shortfall in military personnel funding in fiscal year 1990. Mr. President, I think all Senators are familiar with this issue. The administration had the opportunity to exempt military personnel accounts from sequestration last summer. The President failed to do so in order to minimize the impact of sequestration on other defense programs, assuming that the DOD would be able to reprogram—to use transfer authority—to cover any shortfalls.

The Department has proposed these reprogrammings. Unfortunately, the four Defense Committees have not approved the sources proposed by the Defense Department for these transfers because they will increase the deficit. We are at an impasse. The Defense Department has not taken any action to reduce military personnel levels, and costs are being incurred at a rate that exceeds the amount of funding in the budget. Thus, funding would run out before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. President, we are facing a train wreck if we do not take action to resolve this issue. This Senator, and I think all Senators, do not believe that our men and women in uniform should suffer because of our inability to resolve disagreements between Congress and the administration, over deficit reduction measures.

The solution that the committee has recommended to the Senate is fair. It is timely, in that it prevents furloughs, involuntary separations, early outs, slow-down in promotions and other extraordinary actions. It resolves the problem in a deficit neutral manner by reducing departmental nonpersonnel program by an equal percentage.

I believe the Senate would be remiss if we were to pass a supplemental that uses defense resources to provide for other Federal agencies, but left the fate of our military personnel undetermined.

NEW APPROPRIATIONS

Finally, we have appropriated $6 million for the bone marrow registry to increase the number of bone marrow donors and $18 million to recover from delays in Army National Guard and Reserve military construction projects caused by the DOD imposed construction freeze.

CONCLUSION

The committee has included several miscellaneous provisions which address various defense programs. One such proposal provides the authority for DOD to transfer funding to cover the costs of the Just Cause operation in Panama. Two provisions strengthen language adopted by the Congress in fiscal year 1990 regarding allocation and notification on NATO R&D programs. Another proposal relates to the payment of claims. In addition, the committee amends existing legislation to allow DOD to dispose of unserviceable firearms. Finally, the committee includes bill language to extend the availability of 1988 appropriations for construction of the RDX explosives plant at Louisiana Army Ammunition Plant.

Mr. President, before concluding, I would like to acknowledge the debt of gratitude I owe to my vice chairman, Senator STEVENS. His efforts in putting together this supplemental bill, and his indepth knowledge of national security programs, are greatly appreciated by myself as well as all committee members.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. The Senate will return to session and consideration of this bill at 9 in the morning. There will be a rollcall vote at 9:20 tomorrow morning. There will be rollcall votes throughout the day and possibly into the evening as we attempt to make progress with as many amendments pending on the bill. I thank my colleagues.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, earlier this evening a unanimous-consent agreement was reached regarding further consideration of the pending bill. It now appears that there was a misunderstanding among some of the parties to that agreement, and lengthy discussions have made clear that it is not possible to correct the agreement in a manner which accommodates the concerns of all of the interested parties.

Accordingly, I ask unanimous consent that the previous unanimous-consent agreement with respect to this bill be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE INAUGURATION OF VIOLETA CHAMORRO AS PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the inauguration of Violeta Chamorro in Nicaragua is a dramatic tribute to the irresistible desire for democracy of the human spirit and to the effectiveness of peaceful, negotiated solutions.

In voting the Sandinistas out and the UNO coalition in, Nicaraguans have done peacefully what United States-supported Contras could not do violently. Hundreds of millions of dollars in lethal weapons over a decade could not achieve what the Nicaraguan people did in 1 day at the ballot box.

All friends of freedom welcome the inauguration of Violeta Chamorro. Over the years, her unwavering commitment to a just and democratic Nicaragua has been a beacon of hope to her fellow citizens and to people everywhere who seek a better life.

The $300 million in funds to the new Government in Nicaragua will help jump start that failed economy and foster a spirit of reconciliation and renewal of Nicaraguan society. Wracked for a decade by a United States trade embargo, a United States-financed Contra war, and failed Sandinista policy, the Nicaraguan economy fell last year to the lowest level in the hemisphere. The aid contained in this bill is critical, and I urge the Senate to provide it.

Peace has at last come to Nicaragua but reconciliation remains a dream. That goal will require compromise on all sides and astute leadership from the new Government. I share a concern with many of my colleagues here in the United States and with the people of Nicaragua over the continued control of the Sandinistas over the military. Clearly, the transition will take time. But let us hope the new Government will move swiftly to bring about the depoliticization of the Armed Forces. We should give our strong support to President Chamorro in her effort to do so.

We are on the verge of a new era in Nicaragua—and perhaps all of Central America. The end of the cold war and the opening of the Berlin Wall have had a profound impact on the threats we perceive.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the root cause of the violence in Central America—and indeed most of the world today—is not the threat of a Communist takeover of our hemisphere but rather the evils of poverty, injustice, and a disproportionate distribution of power and wealth. Overcoming these crises is the true challenge before us.

Let us use the occasion of the democratic victory in Nicaragua to reflect on the mistakes of the past decade. And let us work to ensure that we learn from those mistakes.

Time and again over the last decade, I joined my colleagues on the Senate floor to debate United States assistance to Nicaragua. We debated U.S. mining of that nation's harbors by the CIA, U.S. covert efforts to overthrow the Sandinista government, and U.S. military aid to the Contras—and nothing worked.

Our trade embargo failed to topple Ortega; instead, it undercut the moderate elements of Nicaraguan society that America should have supported. The Reagan administration's policy on Nicaragua proved to be one of the most failed and ill-conceived United States foreign policies of the decade.

If we have learned anything over the last decade, it is that our military efforts in Nicaragua—overt and covert—have been an utter failure. We damaged the credibility of the United States and set back the hope for peace in the region.

Upon taking office, President Bush recognized the failure of our policy and wisely negotiated with Congress for a new bipartisan approach. Military aid to the Contras was abandoned in favor of a negotiated settlement in the context of the Central American peace process—a settlement that led to the democratic election of Violeta Chamorro.

The end of U.S. military aid to the Contras enabled one of the most important processes in the region to move forward—the peace efforts by the nations of Central America. The many efforts over the years—from Contadora to the Group of Eight to the Esquipulas Accords—laid a solid foundation for an end to the violence and bloodshed in Nicaragua.

Our experience in Nicaragua underscores the importance of working with the nations of the region in meeting challenges. Go it alone and we are destined for failure. Work together and you will succeed.

Finally, our experience in Nicaragua has lessons for El Salvador. The people of that nation, too, have suffered greatly over the last decade. More than 70,000 have died in that bloody conflict and Salvadoran society is increasingly polarized—economically and politically.

The time for a negotiated solution has come. Even the United States commander for the region, General Thurmond, has recognized that there is no military solution to the war in El Salvador. The current efforts to bring about a negotiated solution have breathed new life into that goal, and all of us hope that the efforts of the U.N. Secretary General to resolve the crisis will be successful.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING FISHERIES AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 113

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which, pursuant to Public Law 94-265, was referred jointly to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-265; 16 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.), I transmit herewith an agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the People's Republic of China amending and extending the 1985 Agreement Concerning Fisheries off the Coasts of the United States, which was effected by exchange of notes at Washington, March 14 and 22, 1990. This agreement extends the 1985 agreement for an additional 2 years until July 1, 1992, and amends the port access procedures contained in the 1985 agreement. The exchange of notes, together with the present agreement, constitute a governing international fishery agreement within the meaning of section 201(c) of the act.

Because of the importance of our fisheries relations with the People's Republic of China, I urge that the Congress give favorable consideration to this agreement.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 26, 1990.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 1:09 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled joint resolution:

S.J. Res. 258. Joint resolution to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1990, as "National Arbor Day".

The enrolled joint resolution was subsequently signed by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

At 5:29 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of it reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 3848. An act to require Federal despository institutions regulatory agencies to take additional enforcement actions against depository institutions engaging in money laundering, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to the provisions of title 22, United States Code, section 276(h), to Speaker appoints as members of the United States delegation of the Mexico-United States Interparliamentary Group for the second session of the One Hundred First Congress the following Members on the part of the House: Mr. DE LA GARZA, Chairman, Mr. YATRON, Vice Chairman, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. GEJDENSON, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. DELAY, Mr. GILMAN, and Mr. GOODLING.

At 5:39 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker makes the following supplemental appointments in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1465) entitled "An act to establish limitations on liability for damages resulting from oil pollution, to establish a fund for the payment of compensation for such damages, and for other purposes":

From the Committee on Ways and Means, for consideration of title VII and section 1001(10), 1006(f), 1006(g)(4), 4302, 8102(f) of the House bill and so much of section 8202 of the House bill as would add a new section 210(c)(5) to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and sections 103(b), 103(c), 356, 401(b), and 512 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Mr. GIBBONS, Mr. PICKLE, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. STARK, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. VANDER JAGT, and Mr. CRANE.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 3848. An act to require Federal depository institutions regulatory agencies to take additional enforcement actions against depository institutions engaging in money laundering, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, April 26, 1990, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled joint resolution:

S.J. Res. 258. Joint resolution to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day".

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-2877. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Installations, Logistics, and Environment), transmitting, pursuant to law, notification of the discovery of a 4.2 inch suspected mustard filled projectile on Dugway Proving Ground on April 4, 1990; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2878. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Installations, Logistics, and Environment), transmitting, pursuant to law, notification of the discovery of two 4.2 inch and one Stokes mortar suspected mustard filled projectiles on Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Maryland, on April 9, 10, and 11, 1990; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2879. A communication from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Air Force (Logistics), transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a study with respect to converting the commissary resale of a warehouse function at David-Monthan Air Force Base, Arizona, to performance by contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2880. A communication from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on the State Energy Conservation Program for calendar year 1988; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-2881. A communication from the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, Executive Office of the President, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1991 and 1992, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-2882. A communication from the General Counsel of the Department of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to further amend section 553 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to permit transportation through the United States of lottery materials produced in Canada; to the Committee on Finance.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. BURNS (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 2524. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide funds for the repair and enlargement of the Tongue River Dam for the purposes of settlement of water rights claims of the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, for fish and wildlife enhancement, and for other purposes, to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. MACK (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. WILSON, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. MCCONNELL, and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 2525. A bill to recognize the importance of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry in United States farm policy, and to require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, and Mr. LOTT):

S. 2526. A bill to establish a program to improve access by small and large private businesses to technical information and expertise within the Federal Government and selected States; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 2527. A bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study to determine the need for a National Forest Information Center and an expended environmental education program in New Mexico; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2528. A bill to authorize the development of an interactive highway vehicle system pursuant to the Federal-Aid Highway Program; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. GORE):

S. 2529. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to exclude aliens who unlawfully withhold custody of children outside the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 2530. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to return the "Peace Dividend" to the taxpayers of the United States in the form of individual rate reductions; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 2531. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Navajo Academy, Inc; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CRANSTON (by request):

S. 2532. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to enter into enhanced-use agreements with respect to designated VA facilities and to direct the disposal of such designated facilities by special disposition; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

By Mr. FORD (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. MCCAIN):

S. 2533. A bill to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to extend the civil penalty assessment demonstration program, and for other purposes; considered and passed.

By Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. DODD, Mr. COATS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MACK, and Mr. THURMOND):

S.J. Res. 301. Joint resolution designating October 1990 as "National Breast Cancer Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. MITCHELL (for Mr. BOREN):

S. Res. 275. Resolution to permit the cast of the musical "SARAFINA!" to perform in the Hart Senate Office Building; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. REIGLE (for himself, Mr. GORTON, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. Res. 276. Resolution expressing the sense of the Senate regarding the actions of the Soviet Union toward Lithuania; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. Con. Res. 124. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding human rights violations against the Albanian ethnic minority in southern Yugoslavia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BURNS (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 2524. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide funds for the repair and enlargement of the Tongue River Dam for the purposes of settlement of water right claims of the northern Cheyenne Tribe, for fish and wildlife enhancement, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

TONGUE RIVER DAM AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, this morning I rise to introduce legislation that is cosponsored by my colleague, Senator BAUCUS, to correct a dangerous and difficult situation that we have with one of the main rivers in Montana, the Tongue River.

The Tongue River runs through the southern part of Montana. It enters from Wyoming, entering along our southern border and empties into the Yellowstone River at Miles City, MT. It flows along the eastern boundary of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation.

It is an earthen dam built back in the thirties by the State of Montana to create a reservoir down there essentially for irrigators. Water from this reservoir is really essential. In fact, it is the heart of the irrigators for both the tribe, the folks who live on the reservation, and the non-Indian irrigators growing crops along that river. The dam needs to be raised and strengthened to meet safety records and specifications. It is basically an unsafe dam at this time.

This project not only eliminates a potential catastrophe if the existing structure fails, but renovation of this dam would mean added economic benefits for southeastern Montana. The jobs created by this $185 million project could mean up to $½ billion of added economic activities to the area's economy now—a half billion dollars in economic activity.

It might not sound like a lot to some States, but it has a definite impact to the State of Montana.

In addition, the irrigation portion of this project will give local irrigators a more reliable supply of water well into the 21st century.

Mr. President, in my State, water is more important than land itself. We live in a semiarid climate. The water that comes down the Tongue River is very important to us. In fact, it has been said in eastern Montana that when the good Lord let it rain 40 days and 40 nights, we only got a quarter of an inch.

The Tongue River Dam rehabilitation program is the No. 1 project for the State of Montana. This effort is supported by the State and by the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, the Water Compact Commission, by the State Fish and Wildlife Service, by residents who live along the Tongue River. The costs of rehabilitation will be borne in part by the State of Montana on a matching basis with the Federal Government.

In addition to strengthening the dam, the bill Senator BAUCUS and I are introducing today will help to settle water rights claims between the State of Montana and the Northern Cheyenne Indian Tribe for water on the Tongue River.

The settlement of water rights in our State is a very, very delicate matter. This bill meets with the approval of the Northern Cheyenne and the Reserve Water Rights Compact Commission. More will have to be done to settle all of the water rights differences, but this legislation gives us a good start and a step in the right direction.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of our bill be printed in the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that copies of the letters of support from Gov. Stan Stephens, the Compact Commission, and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2524

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Tongue River Dam Authorization Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE

The purpose of this Act is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide funds for the repair and enlargement of the Tongue River Dam, to settle water right claims of the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, and to enhance habitats of fish and wildlife.

SEC. 3. TONGUE RIVER PROJECT.

(a) IMPROVEMENT OF DAM.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting pursuant to the Act of June 17, 1902, and Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto (32 Stat. 388, chapter 1093; 43 U.S.C. 371 et seq.) (commonly known as the "Federal Reclamation Law"), may plan, design, and construct improvements to Tongue River Dam, a State of Montana project (referred to as the "project"), and provide for the operation and maintenance of the project. The State of Montana shall provide a share of funds for the planning, design, construction, operation, and maintenance of the project. A portion of any increased capacity of the Tongue River Dam shall be provided to the Northern Cheyenne Tribe as part of any water rights settlement reached between the Northern Cheyenne Tribe and the State of Montana.

(b) AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES.—The Secretary of the Interior may assist the Northern Cheyenne Tribe in developing acreage for agricultural purposes under the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin Program under section 8 of the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved December 22, 1944 (43 U.S.C. 390) (commonly known as the "Flood Control Act of 1944"), and other available programs. The act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust reimbursable debts of Indians and tribes of Indians", approved July 1, 1932 (25 U.S.C. 386(a) (commonly known as the "Leavitt Act"), shall be applied to all irrigation investment costs, including project land acquisition, power supply systems, and on-farm costs. Lands developed pursuant to this subsection shall be located within the boundaries of the Northern Cheyenne Reservation.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to subject private irrigation districts to acreage limitation provisions of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982.

SEC. 4. FISH AND WILDLIFE ENHANCEMENT.

The United States Fish and Wildlife Service, the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation, and the Bureau of Reclamation shall identify project features for the enhancement of fish and wildlife habitats for development by the Secretary of the Interior.

Notwithstanding provisions of the Federal Water Project Recreation Act, P.L. 89-72, The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to develop the mitigation and enhancement features provided for hereunder and to provide for the operation and maintenance thereof. The development of mitigation and enhancement features shall proceed on a pro-rated basis with other developments under this Act.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated for the Tongue River Project—

(1) $183,000,000 for planning, design, and construction of improvements, plus or minus such amounts as may be required by reason of ordinary fluctuations in construction costs after January 1990 as indicated by engineering cost indexes applicable to the type of construction involved; and

(2) such sums as may be required for operation, maintenance, and replacement of the works of such improvements.

STATE OF MONTANA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Helena, MT, April 25, 1990.

Hon. CONRAD BURNS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BURNS: I appreciate and commend your efforts in securing congressional authorization to rehabilitate the Tongue River Project. I have identified this project as my highest priority water development effort in Montana because it would rehabilitate an unsafe dam, resolve the Northern Cheyenne Tribe water rights dispute, and enhance fish and wildlife habitat. I support this legislation as a means to attain this goal.

The project, located approximately ten miles north of the Montana-Wyoming border, was constructed by the State of Montana during the late 1930s with financial assistance from the Public Works Administration. The project is critical to the economic viability of the local area and supplies water to numerous small towns, local industrial activities, and several thousand acres of irrigated land along the Tongue River, including those in the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation. The project has also provided for considerable multistate recreational use, including a world-class walleye fishery.

The introduction of this authorizing language comes at a crucial time for the Tongue River Project. As you know, the Tongue River Dam, found to be a high-hazard, unsafe dam as a result of the Corps of Engineers' dam safety inspection program, would likely fail during even a moderately large flood. The potential exists for loss of life and destruction of considerable property if the dam should fail, with economic losses estimated at $300 to $500 million. Land and property at risk along the Tongue River valley would include portions of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation that border the Tongue River, and communities between the dam and Miles City. In view of the high risk, the facility is being operated very conservatively at a reduced reservoir pool level. However, this year's snowpack above the Tongue River Reservoir is 125 percent of normal, and it is not unusual for spring rainstorms to add significant runoff to the Tongue River. Such storms, combined with the above-normal snowpack, could severely strain the dam. While even under the most optimistic schedule it will be several years before the construction could begin, it is imperative that we act expeditiously to secure authorization and funding for the project.

The proposed rehabilitation project would ensure that the dam conforms to contemporary federal and state dam safety standards. This approach would also minimally increase storage capacity, which would provide water to satisfy reserved water rights claimed by the Northern Cheyenne Tribe without displacing existing irrigation, municipal, and industrial uses. The additional storage would also provide water for enhanced fish and wildlife purposes.

I fully realize that state support will be a key element in rehabilitation of the Tongue River Project; however, there are a number of reasons that federal funding assistance is also appropriate.

1. In its "Implementation Plan . . . A New Direction for the Bureau of Reclamation," the Bureau of Reclamation recognizes that dam safety is a high priority and that ensuring the safety of dams is "in the national interest." The existing Tongue River Dam is unsafe and could fail during a moderately large flood. It is essential that we bring the dam into compliance with contemporary dam safety standards.

2. The need for the efficient management of existing resources and facilities, rehabilitation and betterment of existing projects, and additions to projects for system optimization, water quality, and environmental protection are recognized important federal objectives, particularly in the contemporary U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's programs. The Tongue River Dam rehabilitation project is fully consistent with these policies.

3. The rehabilitated project will strive to enhance fish and wildlife habitat associated with the reservoir and downstream areas.

4. As trustee for the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, the federal government must be a participant in this project, first, because the tribe's existing water contract from Tongue River Reservoir is jeopardized by the dam's condition. Second, the rehabilitated project can serve as a vehicle for resolving federal reserved water right claims of the Northern Cheyenne Tribe. Third, if the dam were to fail, significant property damage would occur to Northern Cheyenne property.

I am encouraged by our commitment to the rehabilitation of the Tongue River Project. The issues involved with the project are many and complex, but I am confident that continued efforts such as yours will be key to remedying this hazardous situation.

Sincerely,

STAN STEPHENS,
Governor.

RESERVED WATER RIGHTS COMPACT COMMISSION,
Helena, MT, April 24, 1990.

Senator CONRAD BURNS,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Senator MAX BAUCUS,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BURNS: The Reserved Water Rights Compact Commission wishes to express its strong support for Congressional legislation authorizing the repair and enlargement of the Tongue River Dam. As you know, the Compact Commission was created by the Montana Legislature for the purpose of settling Indian and federal claims of reserved water rights in the State. We believe that this project can provide a physical solution to the difficult water rights issues involving the Northern Cheyenne Tribe and local water users. For this reason the Tongue River Dam rehabilitation is a critical component of Montana's negotiations with the Tribe.

Thank you for sponsoring the federal legislation concerning the Tongue River Dam.

We pledge our continued cooperation as this authorization moves forward.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH P. MAZUREK,
Chairman, Northern Cheyenne Negotiating Team.

MONTANA DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE AND PARKS,
Helena, MT, April 24, 1990.

Senator CONRAD BURNS,
Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BURNS: The Department of Fish, Wildlife & Parks supports your efforts in obtaining congressional authorization for the Tongue River project and appreciates the initiative you have taken to draft such legislation. As a member of the Tongue River Dam steering committee, we have reviewed your proposed legislation drafted as S. 2350 for the rehabilitation of the Tongue River Dam and settlement of the Northern Cheyenne reserved water rights. The department realizes the importance of rehabilitation the Tongue River Dam to bring it up to safety standards, and we appreciate the fact that rehabilitation and enlargement of the project are important considerations in the possible settlement of the Northern Cheyenne reserved water rights.

Although the wildlife mitigation and enhancement features as well as the operation of the reservoir to provide instream flows must still be defined in detail, the department is confident that rehabilitation and enlargement of the Tongue River Dam will provide new opportunities for fishing and hunting. We are currently reviewing several alternatives for environmental enhancement and mitigation so that we can select proposals for final design consideration. There is also a strong possibility that better streamflows in the Tongue River can be achieved through planned operation of the new project. The Tongue River has a popular resident fishery and is also an important spawning stream for several fish species that reside in the Yellowstone River.

If we can be of further assistance to you or your staff in this regard, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Sincerely,

K.L. COOL,
Director.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise in support of this bill to rehabilitate the Tongue River Dam in southeastern Montana. This dam must be repaired, and quickly.

Built in the 1930's as a WPA project, the dam has been in the first stages of failure since 1978. A catastrophic failure of this dam would result in a wall of water sweeping 100 miles north, all the way to Miles City, MT.

Mr. President, if the Tongue River Dam were to fail, the towns of Birney and Ashland, MT, would likely cease to exist. Reliable estimates of damage have been placed at between $100 and $300 million dollars. Significant portions of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation would be under water.

Mr. President, while this dam has not yet been breached, this is only a matter of luck. That luck cannot be expected to hold. Federal and State estimates show that the dam's spillway could be subjected to flows of 382,000 cubic feet per second, in times of heavy rains and snow pack melt. State officials believe that flows beyond 16,000 feet per second could breach the dam. These rates have been approached twice recently. Time is running out.

The bill introduced today is recognition that a grave danger exists. I will work together with Senator BURNS and any other Senator to see that this dam is stabilized. And quickly.

By Mr. MACK (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. WILSON, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. MCCONNELL, and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 2525. A bill to recognize the importance of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry in U.S. farm policy, and require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

DOMESTIC FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INDUSTRY

● Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today with my colleague, Senator GRAHAM, which is intended to draw needed attention to the state of the U.S. fruit and vegetable industry. Americans are becoming increasingly aware of the importance of fresh fruits and vegetables to a healthy diet. Numerous organizations, including the National Institutes of Health, the National Cancer Institute, and the American Heart Association have recommended fruits and vegetables as an essential part of a nutritious diet.

The fruit and vegetable industry has continued to supply our Nation with an abundance of fresh produce despite a host of challenges to its survival, including periodic freezes, labor shortages, lack of available crop insurance, and a diminishing supply of safe and effective food chemicals. Despite the importance of this industry, it is not mentioned in the Food Security Act of 1985.

Our legislation directs USDA to conduct a study on the current state of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry, so that we may heighten the awareness of the importance of this industry. It is our intention to incorporate this legislation into the farm bill so that we create a separate title for fruits and vegetables. I am grateful for the cosponsorship of my colleagues Senators WILSON, COCHRAN, HELMS, D'AMATO, MCCONNELL, HOLLINGS, and from my late colleague, Senator Matsunaga who agreed to cosponsor this legislation before his untimely death. I hope that the other Members of the Senate will support this bill.●

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I spent the early morning hours of Friday, July 27, 1989, in the fields of north Florida picking pinkeye and whiteacre peas. By 9 a.m. that same morning we were on our way to sell the fresh vegetables we harvested at the local farmers' market.

I heard firsthand during this farm workday about the problems Florida growers face: Floods, drought, freezes, insects, environmental concerns, and, of course, the market. What was reconfirmed during the day is the fact, that one of the largest and most important industries in America—the fruit and vegetable industry—functions largely without the benefit of Federal price support programs. And most Florida growers like it that way.

Florida farmers are independent and proud of their ability to make a living without the Federal assistance. That's why I was surprised when the fruit and vegetable industry of Florida requested that Senator MACK and I introduce the legislation before us. Their reasons, though, were extremely sound.

Fruits and vegetables are nonprogram crops and therefore rarely figure into the Federal Government's overall farm policy. Because of this, the industry is not normally taken into account when Congress and the administration set agricultural priorities, for example, in research and development, or trade policy. In order to combat anonymity and promote the importance of the fruit and vegetable industry, we developed this bill.

First, the bill establishes that fruits and vegetables play an essential role in a healthy, nutritious diet—as the Surgeon General, National Academy of Science, and the National Institutes of Health have well documented. The bill declares that the domestic production of fruits and vegetables is a vital part of U.S. farm policy, and requests the Secretary of Agriculture to perform a survey of the current state of the fruit and vegetable industry.

The information gathered by this study will provide a solid data base for future farm policy decisions, particularly those that affect fruit and vegetable production, to be based. The data will also be a valuable snapshot of the needs and practices of today's fruit and vegetable industry. Finally, it is our intention to offer this legislation as an amendment to this year's farm bill; very similar language is already part of the House version. I encourage my colleagues, most of whom come from States where fruit and vegetables are a significant cash crop, to support the bill as part of the 1990 farm bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2525

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) fruits, vegetables, and specialty crops are a vital and important source of nutrition for the general health and welfare of the people of the United States; and

(2) fruits and vegetables are recommended as an essential part of a healthy, nutritious diet by numerous health organizations including the Surgeon General of the United States, the National Institutes of Health, the National Cancer Institute, the American Heart Association, the National Academy of Sciences, Committee on Diet, Nutrition and Cancer, the Department of Agriculture; and the Department of Health and Human Services.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) improve the Nation's dietary and nutritional standards by promoting domestically produced wholesome and nutritious fruit and vegetable products;

(2) increase the public awareness as to the difficulties domestic producers experience regarding the production, harvesting, and marketing of these products; and;

(3) aid in the development of new technology and techniques that will assist domestic producers in meeting the challenges of increased demands for fruit and vegetable production in the future.

SEC. 3. DECLARATION.

It is declared that the domestic production of fruits and vegetables is a keystone of the farm policy of the United States.

SEC. 4. STUDY OF THE FRUIT AND VEGETABLE INDUSTRY.

(a) STUDY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study to determine the current state of the domestic fruit and vegetable industry. In conducting such study, the Secretary of Agriculture shall consult with such agencies or departments, as determined necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Education.

(2) CONTENTS.—The study conducted under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) a review of the availability of an adequate labor supply for maintaining and harvesting of fruits and vegetables;

(B) a review of the availability of crop insurance or disaster assistance for fruit and vegetable producers;

(C) a review of scientific and technological advances in the areas of genetics, biotechnology, integrated pest management, post harvest protection, or other scientific developments related to the production and marketing of fruits and vegetables;

(D) an examination of the availability of safe and effective chemicals for use in the production of fruits and vegetables;

(E) a review of the requirements and cost of labeling of fruits and vegetables in the industry, and the benefit of labeling of these products to consumers; and

(F) a review of Federal educational programs that teach the importance of fruits and vegetables to a proper diet.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, the results of the study described in paragraph (a)●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself and Mr. LOTT):

S. 2526. A bill to establish a program to improve access by small and large private businesses to technical information and expertise within the Federal Government and selected States; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL TECHNICAL RESOURCE SERVICE ACT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the National Technical Resource Service Act of 1990. Companion legislation is being introduced today on the House side by JOHN LAFALCE, chairman of the House Small Business Committee, and RON WYDEN, chairman of the Small Business Subcommittee on Regulation, Business Opportunities and Energy. I want to thank them and the members of their staff for working with me and my staff to develop this very important legislation.

Technology transfer is a competitiveness issue. The goal of the Federal Technology Transfer Program is to improve the competitiveness of U.S. companies. But the current system is not working as it should. There are several hundred Federal laboratories in this country which spend more than $60 billion per year on research. Unfortunately, a very small percentage of Federal research is being commercialized. What is transferred tends to be intellectual property rather than specific know-how or technical information, which can be equally valuable. And the vast majority of businesses do not understand the Federal technology transfer system as it currently exists.

There appear to be many obstacles to the commercialization of technology from Federal laboratories. Large and small American businesses find it extremely difficult to identify, acquire, and properly use new technologies developed by Federal labs.

On the other hand, some say the Federal labs do not understand the priorities and pressures of the business world. This contention, along with the frustrations that come with dealing with the Federal bureaucracy, cause small businesses to lose interest in working with Federal labs.

The Federal Technology Transfer Act [FTTA] of 1986, was designed to provide a bridge between research performed at Federal labs and the private sector. FTTA authorized Federal lab directors to enter into cooperative research and development agreements [CRADA] with private firms. It also permits Federal inventors to be rewarded with at least 15 percent of any royalties received by the lab from the invention. The FTTA and CRADA's have certainly helped improve the technology transfer system, and I know there have been success stories; however, we still have a long way to go to perfect the system.

Public Law 100-418, the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act, established the National Institute of Standards and Technology [NIST]—formerly the National Bureau of Standards. The law mandates that NIST establish regional centers for the transfer of manufacturing technology. There are currently three centers operational—Cleveland, OH; Troy, NY, and Columbia, SC. These centers provide for the transfer of technology developed by NIST to small- and medium-sized firms.

As I understand it, there are some legal and regulatory issues—such as legal liability, ownership of intellectual property rights, and access to facilities—which could cause a director of a Federal lab to ignore technology transfer. These directors must be made aware that technology transfer is a priority.

I believe one agency needs to be chosen to coordinate the transfer of Federal technology to the private sector. Perhaps it should be commerce—perhaps SBA. There needs to be an advocate in the administration to provide oversight for Federal technology transfer policy. That agency must also conduct a formal inventory of Federal laboratory resources. At this point Federal technology transfer efforts appear to be understaffed and poorly focused.

My legislation builds on the existing technology transfer programs. Title I authorizes NIST to create a Technology Resource Program comprised of experts, technologies, and ongoing research projects being conducted in Federal labs and agencies. Information about the program, including copies of studies and reports, could be accessed directly on a personal computer. Overnight, we would bring a tremendous library of Federal technical literature to the doorstep of every company in the United States.

Title II would authorize the U.S. Small Business Administration to subsidize access by small businesses to the Technical Resource Program, through the Small Business Development Center Program. With—centers nationwide, counseling on average—small business owners and managers each year, the SBDCS could be an important network for expanding access to Federal technical information.

Credit for the legislation I am introducing today properly goes to a Minnesotan, Joe Shuster. He has designed a model for gaining access to technical information and expert assistance which is practical and cost-effective. An informal survey of 25 companies, both large and small, using Shuster's model yields remarkable results. All described it as valuable and as having contributed substantially to improved profitability. It is a model that we need to establish at the Federal level in order to make more efficient and effective the existing programs we have authorized.

I urge my colleagues to consider carefully the legislation I am offering here today. I welcome your cosponsorship. I am convinced the National Technical Resource Program will make a significant difference in the competitiveness of American small businesses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2526

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Technical Resource Service Act of 1990."

SEC. 1. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF TECHNOLOGY RESOURCE SERVICEPILOT PROGRAM.—In addition to such other technology resource and technical information activities of the Department of Commerce's Technology Administration, the Secretary of Commerce (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary"), acting through the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Director"), is authorized and directed to create a Technology Research Service Pilot Program (hereafter in this act referred to as the "Program"). The Program shall run for five years from the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the Program shall be to provide private businesses, in States selected under subsection (e) of this section to participate in the Program, with improved access to Federal and federally-funded technology and expertise, as well as to equivalent technology and expertise from States and other sources, in order to accelerate the transfer of government-supported technology and expertise to businesses and to improve the productivity and economic competitiveness of these businesses.

(c) ACTIVITIES.—The program shall consist, to the extent the Secretary and Director deem appropriate, of the following—

(1) A database, accessible by computer to private businesses in participating States, which contains information on—

(A) research projects in federal laboratories;

(B) other federally-supported research projects, including research in universities;

(C) reports and other documents available from the National Technical Information Service;

(D) patents available for licensing from Federal laboratories and from federally-funded research projects;

(E) other technology resource services available from the Federal government and participating State governments; and

(F) technology transfer personnel and services available at Federal laboratories and the Federal Laboratory Consortium for Technology Transfer.

(2) Direct access to experts in Federal laboratories and elsewhere who are available, under terms to be set by the Secretary, to answer technical questions by telephone.

(3) Interactive access to databases of technical and business information in print.

(d) DATABASE CONTRACTOR.—The Secretary, acting through the Director and using a competitive selection process, shall select a non-Federal database contractor to create the Program's federal databases and network of experts and to manage them for the duration of the Program. The contractor must be able to provide access to experts other than, and complementary to, State and Federal experts. The contractor will further be required to provide a staff of information searching professionals to facilitate interactive accessing of technical and business information in print, as well as Federal and State databases.

(e) PARTICIPATING STATES.—Within twelve months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, acting through the Director and using a competitive selection process, shall select up to 5 States for participation in the Program. To be eligible for selection, a State shall provide such matching funds as the Secretary shall deem appropriate and shall establish a database of State research projects, licensable technologies and State services, as well as a network of experts available within the State.

(f) FEES CHARGED TO BUSINESSES.—Private businesses within participating States that wish to take advantage of the information and other services provided by the Program shall be charged as follows—

(1) for businesses with gross annual sales of $5 million or less, no charge;

(2) for businesses with gross annual sales greater than $5 million but less than $15 million, no charge during the first year after States are selected, 25 percent of cost of providing that information and services to the business during the next year, 50 percent during the year after that, and 100 percent thereafter;

(g) COOPERATION.—The heads of Federal departments and agencies shall provide the Secretary with such information and assistance as the Secretary may request in order to carry out the requirements of this Act.

(h) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—After three years of Program operation, and again after the end of the Program, the secretary shall evaluate Program operations and business use of the Program and shall report findings to the appropriate committees of Congress.

(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out the Program established under section 1 of this Act, there is hereby authorized to the secretary the following amounts—

(1) for fiscal year 1991, $2,000,000; and

(2) for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995, $3,000,000.

SEC. 2. (a) SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648) is amended by adding the following new section: "SECTION 24.—Any applicant which is funded by the Administration as a Small Business Development Center may apply for an additional grant to be used solely to increase access by small businesses in its service area to on-line databases for the purposes of facilitating technology transfer, such as that created by Section 1 of this Act or other privately or publicly-funded databases. The Small Business Development Center may seek to increase small business access by:

(1) defraying part or all of the cost of access to the databases for a limited period of time;

(2) training small businesses in use of the databases;

(3) demonstrating to small businesses the benefits of accessing the databases."

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administration for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 the sum of $5,000,000 to carry out the provisions of section 2(a) of this Act.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 2527. A bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study to determine the need for a National Forest Information Center and an expanded environmental education program in New Mexico; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ENCHANTED NATIONAL FORESTS INFORMATION AND EDUCATION STUDY ACT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study to determine the need for a National Forest Information Center and expanded environmental education program in New Mexico. I am pleased that my colleague from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, is joining me as a cosponsor of this legislation.

As a nation we continue to increase our awareness of the environment and the need to conserve its resources. The Forest Service can play an important role in this education process.

New Mexico is known as the land of enchantment. Much of that enchantment is included within its spectacular national forests. There are over 9 million acres of national forests in New Mexico. These lands not only provide open space and vistas unique to the Southwest, they also play an important role in the economy of New Mexico. An understanding and appreciation of the environment is the key for the public to participate in determining how their natural resources will be managed.

The Forest Service has an environmental education program; however, I am concerned that, in order to reach the public at large, this program needs a centralized focal point from which to provide educational and interpretation programs. This education center should probably be located near the major population centers of the State.

For example, the Sandia Mountains are managed by the Cibola National Forest and are considered the backyard to many who live there. The location of New Mexico's largest city next to a national forest presents an ideal situation for the Forest Service to develop a "living" classroom to help in the education of many of New Mexico's students. This bill would have the Forest Service develop alternatives to tap this "living" classroom.

New Mexico attracts many visitors each year; in fact, tourism is now the No. 1 industry in New Mexico. Many of these visitors come and leave the State without knowledge of what opportunities their national forests provide. I believe it is critical for the Forest Service to reach out and inform people of what national forests offer. This legislation would also direct the Forest Service to study what options are available to inform visitors of the opportunities available in the national forests.

Mr. President, New Mexico is the Land of Enchantment and national forests are the lands of many uses. I believe the residents and visitors should be aware of the national forests in the Land of Enchantment and one of those uses should be the environmental education of our youth.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2527

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Enchanted National Forests Information and Education Study Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) environmental education is fundamental to expending our understanding of the environment;

(2) the natural resources found on national forests in New Mexico, the Land of Enchantment, can contribute to environmental education programs;

(3) the Forest Service plays a vital role in the environmental education of all Americans;

(4) a center provide information on the national forests in New Mexico would increase public awareness of their national forests, increase participation in management decisions, and improve the public's appreciation of their national forests;

(5) there is not a central facility dedicated to providing information on the national forests in New Mexico to residents and out-of-State visitors; and

(6) in light of the opportunities provided by national forests and the importance of environmental education, it is necessary to identify, through a comprehensive study, the opportunities that are available to provide information to the public on the national forests of New Mexico and to expand the environmental education program for those forests.

SEC. 3. STUDY AND REPORT BY THE FOREST SERVICE.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Chief of the Forest Service, shall conduct a study of the opportunities to establish a center to provide information on the national forests in New Mexico and to expand the environmental education program for those forests.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date that funds are made available for the study referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary of Agriculture shall transmit the study to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives.

(c) CONTENTS OF STUDY.—The study referred to in subsection (a) shall develop alternative means for the national forests in New Mexico to provide information that improves public awareness and participation in management of their national forests and to expand the environmental education program for those forests. Alternatives shall include an information and education center located in or near Albuquerque, New Mexico, and an expanded education outreach program.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this Act.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2528. A bill to authorize the development of an interactive highway vehicle system pursuant to the Federal-aid highway program; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

INTERACTIVE HIGHWAY VEHICLE SYSTEM ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Interactive Highway Vehicle System Act of 1990. This proposed legislation, if enacted, will direct the Federal Highway Administrator to develop a national program for the use of new and innovative technologies developed to ease congestion on our roads. Dubbed "smart cars and smart highways," the technology allows a flow of information concerning traffic speed, alternative routes, location, and another helpful data to the driver through computer and sensors. With this information drivers can make informed decisions which will reduce unnecessary stops and delays. By reducing congestion, interactive highway vehicle systems will reduce fuel consumption and emissions thus reducing urban air pollution.

Since 1956, U.S. road travel has more than tripled and the number of vehicles miles traveled in increasing 5 percent per year. Already, two-thirds of peak hour travel on urban interstates is moving at less than 35 miles per hour. Estimates in 1987 put the cost of congestion at $42 billion for the 25 largest U.S. cities.

New highways must continue to be built. Expanding areas of development must be provided adequate transportation corridors. However, America must make better use of existing roads. The Nation's ability to compete in the world marketplace depends upon the ability to move people and products quickly, safely, and at a reasonable cost. Thes new technologies can help to do just that.

Mr. President, "smart cars and smart highways" are under development in Europe and the Pacific Rim. Unfortunately, America once again finds itself in the uneviable positon of playing innovative catch up. It is not too late. But we must begin now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD, along with two recent New York Times articles, at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2528

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This act may be cited as the "The Interactive Highway Vehicle System Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration shall develop a plan for the implementation of a comprehensive, interactive highway vehicle system on the Federal-aid highway system.

(b) EVALUATION—As part of the plan pursuant to subsection (a), the Administrator shall undertake an evaluation of existing and proposed interactive highway vehicle systems and their application to the Federal-aid highway system.

(c) DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—Within two years of the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall identify one or more interactive highway vehicle projects for the Federal-aid highway system which will demonstrate the development of innovative and effective interactive highway vehicle systems.

(1) The Administrator shall assure that the interactive highway vehicle demonstration project identified pursuant to this subsection shall be—

(A) in an area in which heavy commercial traffic adds to congestion, and

(B) in an area in which commuter traffic causes significant congestion during peak hours.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall report to the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works and the House Committee on Public Works on the plan pursuant to subsection (a), and the evaluation pursuant to subsection (b). The report shall contain recommendations on the opportunities of existing interactive highway vehicle systems for use on the Federal-aid Highway System, and shall make recommendations on what further developments would be appropriate.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION AND APPROPRIATION.

(a) NATIONAL INTERSTATE INTERACTIVE HIGHWAY VEHICLE PLAN.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration $10,000,000 to carry out the plan pursuant to subsection (a) of section 2 of this Act.

(b) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1992 to carry out the purpose of subsection (c)(1) of section 2 of this Act.

COMPUTERS TO HELP DRIVERS FIND THEIR WAY

(By Paul C. Judge)

Detroit, April 24—This summer the General Motors Corporation will begin a yearlong experiment on a 12-mile stretch of Los Angeles freeway to examine how 12 cars equipped with electronic navigation systems can elude congested highways by turning on to local streets shown on a computerized map. In Japan, the Honda Motor Company announced last month that it plans to offer the first electronic navigation system as an option on some larger models, although it is tight-lipped about when the feature will be introduced.

A CAR WITH A SMART BUILT-IN ROAD MAP

By combining a "speed sensor," a gas-rate sensor, a compact disk drive and computer technology, Honda has developed a navigation system that can display a car's location on a dashboard-mounted screen.

To determine distance, a speed sensor measures the rotation of the transmission drive gear. A screen in the dashboard shows where the car is and the route it has traveled. The driver can adjust the map's size.

An inertial navigation unit calculates movement using data from the speed sensor and the gas-rate sensor. This information and the appropriate map, which is stored on 12-centimeter compact disks, are processed and sent to the screen.

A gas-rate sensor acts as a gyroscope for the system. It contains two heated wires, helium gas and a thermostat. When the car is moving straight, the helium is distributed symmetrically and the wires have the same temperature. When the car turns to the left, however, the helium shifts to the right, cooling the right wire. The temperature changes are translated into electronic data, which is used to locate the car on the map.

These and a half-dozen other car makers and electronics companies are coming closer to realizing a long-held goal: capitalizing on the increasing sophistication of computers to develop systems that help drivers find their way and, more important, may someday suggest alternatives to congested highways.

The systems would allow a driver to punch in a starting point and destination, and then view a map of the route recommended by a tiny computer. Eventually, it is hoped, the computer will be alerted by radio signal with up-to-the-minute traffic conditions, enabling the system to suggest local streets that might serve the driver better than the jammed highway. Such systems could be particularly popular in Japan, where drivers ply some of the most congested freeways, and in certain American cities.

Two other Japanese car makers, the Mazda Motor Corporation and the Mitsubishi Motors Corporation, both introduced prototype navigation systems at the Tokyo auto show last fall.

And in the United States, besides G.M., the Chrysler Corporation has a system less far along.

Motorola Inc. is working on a system that it says will be available to luxury car buyers by 1993. And Rockwell International hopes to market a receiver that could be incorporated into vehicle navigation systems.

But industry analysts say car navigation systems are still six to eight years away from being available at prices most car buyers will be willing to pay.

And some note that the real potential of car navigation systems will not be tapped until they can alert commuters to traffic snarls and provide alternative routes on the dashboard map displays. That would require public-private partnerships on a grand scale, to install the necessary systems, including road sensors that would measure the speed of traffic, a central computer to monitor conditions in the entire metropolitan area, and radio equipment that would broadcast the information to cars. Even optimistic industry experts say this could take a decade.

Federal highway officials are promoting a range of government and business initiatives. Two weeks ago, Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner announced an $8 million project to test the traffic avoidance capabilities of various computerized navigation systems in Orlando, Fla.

"It's great to have a map in your car, but the point of having a system like that is as much traffic avoidance as navigation," said Andrew J. Kessler, a research analyst with Morgan Stanley. "If it can do that for $300, most commuters will buy it."

Two types of electronic-navigation systems are emerging.

The first combines measurements of distance and direction made by devices within the car—a technique known as dead reckoning—while the second relies on radio signals from navigation satellites to fix the car's location.

Both systems plot the car's position on a map displayed on a small screen in the dashboard. Compact disks are the medium of choice for storing digital road-map data, because of their large storage capacities and the ease of updating maps by issuing new CD's.

Both navigation systems also require sophisticated computer software, contained in logic chips, that constantly compares movements of the vehicle with the road data in the digital map, and makes adjustments to show the location of the car on the map (in addition to a dotted line that shows the recommended route).

These systems are still new, however, and errors do occur. The dead-reckoning system may be thrown off, for instance, when the car pulls into a parking lot, then turns back on to the main street. Steel beams in bridges, highway overpasses and railroad tracks create magnetic fields that can throw a compass off course. And the satellite-based systems come within 100 feet or so of pinpointing a car's location—which might not be accurate enough for an electronic map of, say, Manhattan. The satellite signal can also fade when a car drives through a tunnel or into an area dense with high buildings.

Some dead-reckoning systems rely on compasses and wheel sensors built into the antilock braking system to determine a car's location. When a car turns, the outside wheel travels slightly farther than the inside wheel. The sensors read this difference and thus can track direction. They also provide the navigation computer with precise measurements of the distance traveled.

A separate microprocessor compares this data with compass headings; by figuring the distance traveled, the system can approximate the path the car has taken. The next step is using algorithms to match the data from the sensors and compass to the roads displayed on a digital map.

General Motors appears to be farthest along among American auto makers pursing navigation systems. In 1985, G.M. bought the exclusive rights to a system developed by Etak Inc., which employs the compass and wheel-sensor combination.

Honda, instead of using a compass and wheel sensors for tracking a vehicle's movements, uses a device known as a gas-rate sensor mounted in the car's trunk. The sensor acts as a gyroscope, marking changes in a vehicle's direction.

Honda has not said when the system might be available in the United States or how much it would cost. A Honda spokesman declined to comment on published reports that Japanese buyers will pay $1,900 for the system.

A SATELLITE SYSTEM

A second approach to car navigation uses radio waves transmitted by satellites. A receiver in the car takes regular readings from at least three navigational satellites orbiting the earth and a computer plots the car's position using triangulation.

The system under development would obtain their navigational fix from a civilian frequency on a satellite network being assembled by the Department of Defense and called the Global Positioning System. The Pentagon expects the system to be complete in 1992.

The receivers required for tuning in to the Global Positioning System's civilian frequency are expensive, however. And some experts view the reliance on military satellites as another potential drawback.

"The Pentagon could shut G.P.S. down any time it wants, to recalibrate the system for some new military reason," said Robert D. Ervin, an engineer at the University of Michigan Transportation Research Institute.

The uncertainty surrounding G.P.S. has not deterred companies from pressing ahead with navigation systems that rely on the satellites. Chrysler's Acustar subsidiary has a system in the works. Rockwell International, the Government's prime contractor for the G.P.S. system, also hopes to market a receiver that could be incorporated into vehicle navigation systems.

Motorola is pursuing a system that combines radio telemetry from satellites and dead reckoning to locate a vehicle's position. Motorola hopes to deliver its navigation system by 1993, priced at around $3,000 and aimed at luxury-car buyers, said Randolph M. Doi, director of intelligent vehicle/highway systems research.

"SMART" CARS AND HIGHWAYS TO HELP UNSNARL GRIDLOCK

(By John H. Cushman, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Predicting a doubling of traffic in the next three decades, Federal highway officials are actively promoting a major program of computerization and automation that would fundamentally alter the designs of vehicles and highways.

In the latest move to assist researchers, Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner announced an $8 million project today to equip 100 cars in Orlando, Fla., with computerized displays that will receive instantaneous traffic updates and detour instructions from a traffic management center.

Last month, in a report to Congress, the Department of Transportation called for a national research program, supported by Federal, state and local governments and by businesses and private groups, to foster the new technologies. At the same time, an increase in Federal research was endorsed in the new national transportation policy paper issued by the White House.

Neither the report nor the policy statement estimated the cost, but recent studies by Federal, state and industry specialists have found that tens of billions of dollars will have to be spent to stave off a paralysis on the nation's highways.

Researchers are focusing on three broad technologies: computerized dashboard maps to track the location of vehicles, roadside sensors and signals to manage the flow of traffic, and sophisticated steering and speed controls that might someday even let cars drive themselves on specially instrumented highways.

ALMOST HUMAN CHARACTERISTICS

Describing the Orlando project in a speech this afternoon to the American Automobile Association in Los Angeles, Mr. Skinner said he looked forward to new devices that would give "the car and the highway certain almost human characteristics to lift some of the load off the driver."

"This array of advanced electronics and communications technology will contribute a great deal toward reducing vehicle delay, increasing highway capacity and improving highway safety," the Secretary said. A text of the speech was provided by Mr. Skinner's office here.

The project is being sponsored by the automobile association along with the General Motors Corporation, state and local governments and the Department of Transportation. The Federal share of the project cost is $2.5 million.

"It's not a question of whether it is going to happen," said Mark R. Norman, director of policy development for the Highway Users Federation, a lobbying organization. "The real question is how fast it is going to happen, and how well are we going to do it."

California's transportation agency, a leading backer of the new research, is already beginning tests of a project similar to the Orlando project. The California project, called Pathfinder, provides traffic advice to 28 cars operating on a twelve-mile stretch of freeway and several parallel arteries in the corridor between Santa Monica and Los Angeles.

The project cost $40 million; to install such a system throughout Los Angeles, with its 4,750 miles of freeway lanes, could cost $2 billion.

The Orlando experiment improves on the California project, using nearly four times as many vehicles and providing a broader range of information on better displays covering an entire metropolitan area. The displays will suggest the best route to take to destinations selected by the drivers and will update the information quickly in response to accidents or traffic congestion. It is expected to go into operation in January 1992, and will be evaluated for a year.

CARS WITH COMPUTERIZED MAPS

John R. Wallace, director of electronic systems research at the Ford Motor Company, said the appearance of the new technology in cars would lag behind the installation of computerized traffic control systems like road signs whose messages vary with traffic conditions.

But in the next five years or so, he said, luxury rental cars will have computerized maps to help drivers find their way around unfamiliar streets. How fast the expensive systems catch on depends more on consumers' enthusiasm than anything else, he said.

Mr. Wallace said researchers had yet to resolve major obstacles to automotive equipment, not all of them technological.

"We don't want to have people plowing into people because they are looking down at their navigation systems," he said. "But there could be very simple displays, an arrow that would come on, very simple alphanumerics or even voice systems. The car will, in its very flat toneless voice, tell you to turn left at the next intersection."

Equipping cars wtih devices that will actually help control the vehicle's movements presents far more difficult legal problems, he said. For that reason, he added, the ultimate "smart" car "is the subject of incredible paranoia inside the industry."

For example, while cruise-control mechanisms that maintain a car's constant speed could easily be adapted to prevent tailgating, auto makers believe that installing such devices would leave them open to lawsuits in the event of collisions.

With a handful of limited demonstrations already in progress, experts say the technology is in hand for computerized roadside signals to smooth the flow of traffic and identification devices to automatically charge tolls so that traffic need not slow down at bridges and tunnels.

More complex systems are years away from being widely installed. "You'll see little steps before you see big steps," said Robert D. Ervin, head of engineering research at the University of Michigan's Transportation Research Institute in Ann Arbor. He predicted that the earliest systems would be geared toward the needs of businesses that have the most to gain financially by avoiding traffic delays.

THE HIGH COST OF CONGESTION

State and local governments are eager to expand such systems, especially around big cities where traffic congestion is most severe.

A study by the Texas Transportation Institute has found that congestion costs Los Angeles motorists $8 billion a year in delays, and that the cost of congestion in 11 other cities, including New York, exceeds $1 billion a year.

Estimates published in technical reviews say the installation of computerized traffic signal controls in Los Angeles, which has one of the most advanced systems in the nation, has led to reductions of 13.2 percent in travel time, 12.5 percent in fuel consumption and 10 percent in pollution.

With the nation's highway traffic expected to double over the next 30 years, the increasing use of such technologies seems inevitable.

FOREIGN RESEARCH EFFORTS CITED

Proponents of aggressive research on smart cars and roads point to major projects already being conducted by consortiums in Japan and Europe, and say that if the United States does not follow suit it will end up buying the technology from overseas.

The Highway Users Federation, a Washington lobbying group, has called for devoting $100 million a year for 10 years to such research. The Bush Administration has requested $13 million for such purposes in the fiscal year 1991, which begins next Oct. 1.

Mobility 2000, a group of government, industry and academic experts, has published staggering estimates of the costs involved in a full commitment to smart roads and vehicles.

A nationwide system of traffic management devices could cost $18 billion to build and $4 billion a year to operate and maintain, the group said. About $1 billion should be spent on research and development of driver information aids, such as computerized maps. And $2.5 billion would be spent on vehicle control devices.

But advocates say the rewards would be well worth the price.

"A doubling or tripling of lane capacity and a dramatic increase in safety is well within reach of the technology," Mobility 2000 said in a report last month.

Such technology, the report added "offers the only hope of really solving transportation problems instead of merely managing worsening conditions over time."●

S. 2529. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to exclude aliens who unlawfully withhold custody of children outside the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNATIONAL CHILD PROTECTION AND RECOVERY ACT

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, the problem of international parental child abduction is growing. Since 1975 over 3,000 cases have been reported to the Department of State, the governmental agency under whose auspices this issue falls. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children estimates that 300 to 350 cases may be reported this year alone. It is uncertain how many more will go unreported. The vast majority will not be resolved by simple communication between the abductor and aggrieved parent. The time has come to put into place a vehicle which will act as a deterrent to those individuals who are contemplating inflicting emotional and, all too often, physical trauma upon innocent children.

Today, I am introducing the International Child Protection and Recovery Act of 1990. The act would amend the Immigration and Nationality Act's grounds for exclusion to include any alien—including any permanent resident alien—who violates the human rights of a child with a lawful claim to U.S. citizenship by withholding the child outside the United States from the U.S. citizen parent.

As the number of international marriages increases, so do the incidents of abduction. Though circumstances vary, most of the abductions occur when difficulties arise within marriages, which have produced children, between a U.S. citizen and spouse with strong ties to a foreign country. U.S. courts generally award unsupervised visitation privileges to the parent with foreign ties—an action which provides ample opportunity for a parent, so inclined, to violate a child's trust as well as court order. But, in a large number of cases, the abductions occur with no warning of trouble in the relationship. The aggrieved parent is completely ignorant of any plan—or even the possibility—of abduction. They are so unaware of the cruel intentions of their child's "alien" parent, that no formal custody decree exists.

Regardless of whether one is the parent of a child with a valid claim to U.S. citizenship, the ability to reside in or visit the United States is a privilege, not a right. An individual should not be allowed to take full advantage of what the United States has to offer—sometimes more valuable to them than their child—when they have disrupted the life of a child of a U.S. citizen by depositing the child outside the United States, away from the love and protection of the U.S. citizen parent.

Many times their claim of concern for the child's welfare is invalidated by their abandonment of the child with relatives in their home country, and their own return to the United States. The act will serve as a deterrent to individuals contemplating such action.

Speaking off the record, officials at the Department of State have said that in especially difficult cases, the only alternative left to get a child back is to attempt reabduction—a potentially dangerous maneuver which is definitely not sanctioned by the Department.

But why? Why should a parent risk imprisonment, financial ruin—for these ventures are costly—or even, in extreme cases, death, because they trusted their spouses to treat their children in a humane fashion?

Adoption of a policy with backbone toward the aliens who disrupt the lives of U.S. citizen children must be undertaken immediately. We cannot continue to reward their actions with entry into the United States. To alleviate the childrens' confusion and suffering and for the sake of family reunification, we must act now. This issue is indeed one of human rights violation, not just domestic disagreement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2529

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "International Child Protection and Recovery Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. Section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (33) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(34) Any alien (including any permanent resident alien) who—

"(A) after the entry of a court order granting primary or joint custody to a United States citizen of a child having a lawful claim to United States citizenship, detains, retains, or withholds custody of such child outside the United States from the United States citizen granted such custody, or

"(B) in the absence of a court order respecting custody, detains, retains, or withholds custody of a child, having a lawful claim to United States citizenship, outside the United States without the consent of the child's United States citizen parent, except that such alien shall no longer be excludable upon the surrender of the child to the United States citizen granted such custody, or the United States citizen parent, whichever is applicable.".●

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 2530. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to return the "Peace Dividend" to the taxpayers of the United States in the form of individual rate reductions; to the Committee on Finance.

DEFENSE TAX REBATE ACT

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, yesterday I came to this floor to outline my proposal to match the defense budget with changing defense needs. It's clear that the reduced Soviet threat will result in substantial savings to the Government—or what many are calling a peace dividend. Now the question arises—who should receive the dividend.

Some see this as a difficult question. I do not.

Since the end of World War II, the American taxpayer has been called upon to finance the cold war. Valiantly, they have accepted the burden of our country's and our allies' defense—often paying increased taxes in order to insure our Nation's safety. And, quite frankly, this expense has at times been made by sacrificing our country's ability to compete with the allies whose defense burden is relatively low by comparison.

With this in mind, Mr. President, the answer is clear: The taxpayers have paid their dues to the defense of the Nation and if a portion of those funds are no longer needed for that purpose, then they should be returned to the taxpayers. And this is my objective today—to introduce a plan that will return to the taxpayers the money that is rightfully theirs.

My plan would lower income taxes for modest- and middle-income taxpayers by reducing their rates. For high-income taxpayers, the rates would remain the same. Today there is bipartisan agreement that lower and middle income working class Americans are taxed too much—largely because of higher Social Security payroll taxes. Many have advocated a payroll tax pay cut as a result. But Americans do not want Congress to mess around with Social Security, because if it does then our children and children's children will be carrying the burden, and Americans want to carry their own weight. This is exactly what my proposal would do.

The bottom bracket, currently set at 15 percent, would be reduced to 12 percent. This amounts to 20-percent income tax reduction for lower and modest income Americans. For a working couple with taxable income of $20,000, this would be a 20-percent cut equal to $600, while a couple earning $30,000 would save $900 in Federal income tax—reducing their burden from $4,500 to $3,600. This rate reduction would more than offset the 1977 Social Security tax increase and their acceleration in 1983.

The next bracket, the 28-percent bracket, would be cut to 25 percent. This would amount to a 10.7-percent rate reduction—coupled with the benefit of the bottom bracket reduction—this would amount to a 14- to 18-percent tax cut for middle-income taxpayers—or a tax bill savings of about $1,500 for a couple earning $50,000.

For those above the so-called bubble, their taxes would not change. Thus, for the wealthiest taxpayers there would be no tax cut.

This tax plan would reduce the tax burden on middle-income taxpayers—across the board—no special interests and no spending proposals to benefit a particular constituency. These are taxpayers already pressed by property tax, State income taxes, Federal income taxes, payroll taxes. These are taxpayers who are faced with a variety of penalties built into the Tax Code—like the marriage penalty, the earnings test, taxes on Social Security benefits, loss of the benefits of the personal exemption because of inflation, and high payroll taxes without any tax deduction.

However, the largest tax benefit would go to those in the lowest tax bracket.

Now, some inside the beltway may think the idea of giving taxpayers back their hard-earned money may seem nothing short of outrageous. They may say, "Surely, Congress in its wisdom, can find some worthy cause to spend this money on." Frankly, I believe the projected budget of $1.5 trillion in the mid-1990's will be sufficient to meet our national needs. Within this enormous level of Federal resources we can do a much better job at setting priorities in keeping with the changing nature of our society. Congressional spending is limited only by the level of tax revenues and the maximum politically acceptable deficit. If the revenues are available, the money will be spent—some have already spent this so-called peace dividend 10 or 15 times already.

I believe that if Congress is going to undertake new spending, or even target money for deficit reduction, then it should be required to prioritize needs rather than slide by on the windfall of peace.

I have long maintained that the problem in America is not that Americans are undertaxed, but that Congress spends too much. Through most of the last half of this century, taxes and spending have been approximately equal to 18 or 19 percent of gross national product. However, in recent decades Federal spending, as a percent of GNP, has increased and now stands at its current level of 22 percent. This spending spree has got to stop, and I am proposing a plan to return these resources back to the taxpayers, from which they came.

A tax cut would allow taxpayers to spend their money as they see fit, not how Congress see fit. Workers would see their payroll tax increase more than offset by the personal tax cut, reducing the tax penalty on work.

Middle income taxpayers and especially spouses would also have enhanced work incentives, as well as relief from other taxes. Small unincorporated businesses and farmers would have more capital to save and invest. More productive resources would be devoted to production, leading to a larger economy and a higher standard of living.

Many will argue that this savings should be dedicated to the deficit, but we all know what Congress does with a windfall. I instituted a study in the Joint Economic Committee which found that for every dollar of tax increases during the 1980's, Congress spent $1.58. This would suggest that using the windfall for deficit reduction would most likely increase rather than reduce the deficit as the spending spirit it induces runs unchecked by the dividend's limitations. We'd find Congressmen spending two and three times what the defense savings would allow.

I would like to stress that my bill does nothing to change the deficit reduction schedule under Gramm-Rudman. This plan complies with Gramm-Rudman and is deficit neutral. When the law was passed, no one expected the benefit that results from restructuring our Armed Forces during this time change. Thus the tax refund is appropriate as a result of the restructuring, and we should continue on the course of reducing the deficit under Gramm-Rudman. I'm simply saying that rather than allow Congress and the special interest groups to get their hands on this money, we should give it back to those who paid it. And my bill benefits all but the top 5 percent of the wage earners in this country—with the low-income workers benefiting the most.

As far as the Social Security surplus is concerned—I agree that it should be taken off of the budget for Gramm-Rudman purposes. But I do not believe we should delay these tax cuts because of this problem. They are separate, and I am paying for the tax cut through dollars that relate to general spending. What my plan does is completely outside the issue of the Social Security system.

In short, the burden of government on the economy will be lightened by cutting both defense spending and personal tax rates. The overtaxed low- and middle-income families will be better off keeping more of their own money for their own purposes. If Congress wants new programs, then Congress will have to find a way independent of the defense budget to pay for them. I believe no one is in a better position than the American family to determine for themselves their own destiny and how to pay for education, housing, health costs, and other important family goals.

S. 2531. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Navajo Academy, Inc.; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

NAVAJO ACADEMY

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that will help ensure the future stability of the Navajo Academy, a unique college preparatory school for gifted Native American youngsters in New Mexico, Arizona, and throughout the country.

This is a very simple bill, but it could be a very important one. This measure will enable the academy to amend its Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act contract with the Department of the Interior to allow for long-term facility lease payments, subject to annual congressional appropriations. Such a contract amendment is necessary because despite a fine record of excellence over its 14-year history, the Navajo Academy faces closure next year if a new school facility is not found or constructed soon. To help finance a new school facility, the existing contract must be amended.

The academy currently leases a facility in Farmington, NM, but is under court order to vacate this space by mid-1991. At this time, the academy's board of trustees believes that no suitable facility exists for relocating the school. Accordingly, the board has turned to the private sector, the Navajo Tribe, the Department of the Interior, and the New Mexico congressional delegation for assistance in securing funding to construct a new school.

For some time, the board has been working with the Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs to amend the academy's existing Public Law 93-638 contract. Although we all are hopeful that the contract will be amended without legislative action, the board has requested that this measure be introduced in the event that administrative negotiations break down. I am pleased to assist the board in this way because I believe Navajo Academy is an institution worthy of our utmost support.

As I mentioned earlier, the Navajo Academy is a unique college preparatory, residential school for Native American youngsters. The academy was established in 1976 to help deal with the extremely high dropout rate, the low education attainment level, and the low college attendance rate among Navajos and other Native Americans. The academy's mission has been to enroll some of the Southwest's most gifted Native American high school students in a rigorous education program that will help them become productive, competitive leaders of their tribes, States, and country. It is clear that the academy has succeeded in carrying out this mission. Last year, more than 90 percent of its graduates received scholarships to prestigious colleges and universities, including a science career scholarship from NASA.

The academy and its students certainly are justifiable sources of pride for the Navajo people, and I understand that the academy board has worked closely with the Navajo Nation's tribal government over the past few years to ensure the best educational opportunities possible for Navajo youngsters. Indeed, I am told that the tribe has demonstrated a firm commitment to the students of the academy. With the approval of appropriate tribal officials and entities, the Navajo Academy last year obtained a $700,000 private loan so that preliminary developmental work on a new school facility could proceed. In addition, the Navajo Nation has made available 640 acres of land for a new facility and has created a $1 million trust fund, the interest of which is to be used for the benefit of the Navajo Academy. Further, I have been told that the Education Committee of the Navajo Nation's tribal council is taking a leadership role in obtaining tribal endorsement of the project, as a priority for Native American children.

Mr. President, I am hopeful that all the interested parties—the academy's board of trustees, parents, students, the Department of the Interior, and the Congress—will continue to work together over the next few months to resolve the academy's facility problems as quickly as possible. As we proceed, however, I believe we must bear in mind that current facility plans and cost projections may not necessarily be the proper ones; those determinations must be made carefully, with input from all parties. I am confident that the academy's board and administration will work closely with the Department of the Interior and others as current and future needs, costs, and plans are developed and analyzed. I pledge to do all that I can to facilitate these deliberations.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (by request):

S. 2532. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to enter into enhanced-use agreements with respect to designated VA facilities and to direct the disposal of such designated facilities by special designation; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

USE AND DISPOSITION OF DESIGNATED VA FACILITIES

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I have today introduced, by request, S 2532, the proposed "Act for the Use and Disposition of Designated VA Facilities". The Secretary of Veterans Affairs submitted this legislation by letter dated April 26, 1990, to the President of the Senate.

My introduction of this measure is in keeping with the policy which I have adopted of generally introducing—so that there will be specific bills to which my colleagues and others may direct their attention and comments—all administration-proposed draft legislation referred to the Veterans' Affairs Committee. Thus, I reserve the right to support or oppose the provisions of, as well as any amendment to, this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with the April 26, 1990, transmittal letter and enclosed section-by-section analysis.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2532

Be it enacted by the Senate and House Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as "Act for the Use and Disposition of Designated VA Facilities."

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 5022 of title 38 United States Code, sections 303b, 483 and 484 of title 40 United States Code, and any other provision of law inconsistent with this section (except Federal environmental and historical laws and regulations and the Davis Bacon Act), the Secretary of the Department of Veterans Affairs (the "Secretary") may enter into enhanced-use agreements with respect to designated facilities and may direct the disposal of such facilities, by special disposition. Any designated property shall not be considered unutilized or underutilized for purposes of section 11411 of title 42 United States Code.

(b)(1) For purposes of this section:

(A) The term "enhanced-use agreements" means a written agreement, consistent with existing appropriation laws of title 31, United States Code, that may be entered into by the Secretary, pursuant to competitive procedures, with any person (whether an individual, trust, estate, partnership, association, company, corporation, Federal, state or local government unit, agency, authority or other entity) for a term not in excess of 35 years (20 years where construction of new buildings or substantial rehabilitation of existing buildings is not involved), either in whole or in part, or shared, of one or more designated facilities or parts thereof, for a use consistent with the Department's mission in return for the payment of consideration to the Department of Veterans Affairs (the "Department"), in cash or in kind (e.g., construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement extension, maintenance, space, services or other benefit to the Department); provided that any consideration received shall reflect the government's contribution to the agreement. Any cash received under this paragraph shall be deposited in a special fund, to be known as the Enhanced-Use Fund. The Enhanced-Use Fund shall be available to the Department when so provided in appropriation acts, without fiscal year limitation.

(B) The term "designated facilities" means those facilities or parts thereof, including unimproved land, identified by the Secretary in a notice of designation.

(C) The term "notice of designation" means a two-part written notice by the Secretary to the Committees identifying one or more designated facilities with respect to which the Secretary proposes to enter into one or more enhanced-use agreements.

(D) The term "Committees" means the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

(E) The term "special disposition" means a disposition by the Administrator of General Services of a designated facility (or the Department's interest therein) that is, or has been , utilized for an enhanced-use agreement.

(b)(2) Notice of designation shall be provided to the Committees not less than thirty (30) days prior to entering into the enhanced-use agreement, and shall (i) identify the facilities, (ii) explain the background, rationale, and economic factors (including a "cost-benefit" analysis) in support of the proposed enhanced-use agreement, (iii) specify the date on which a public hearing was held addressing the enhanced-use agreement's impact on local commerce, and (iv) outline such proposed agreement in general terms. Not less than ten (10) days prior to entering into the enhanced-use agreement, the Secretary shall advise the Committees of any changes or modifications of the information previously submitted, and provide a copy of the draft enhanced-use agreement.

(b)(3) At the end of, or during, the term of the enhanced-use agreement, the Secretary may direct the disposal of the designated facilities, or of the Department's interest therein, by requesting the Administrator of General Services to perform a special disposition of the facilities as authorized by this paragraph. Such special disposition may be for cash or such other consideration as the Secretary and the Administrator determine is in the best interest of the United States, may be accomplished by negotiating directly with the parties to the enhanced-use agreement or by competitive bid of negotiated sale, upon such terms and conditions as the Administrator deems appropriate; provided, however, that the Secretary shall provide, not less than sixty (60) days prior to such disposition, written notice to the Committees of the government's intent to take such action setting forth in such notice the background, rationale and economic evaluation of the special disposition, as well as the intended consideration, and the mode, terms and conditions of the action. Upon disposition, any cash proceeds, less that portion to reimburse the costs incurred for such disposition shall be deposited into the nursing home revolving funds, as prescribed by section 5016 of title 38 United States Code, or the Enhanced-Use Fund, as appropriate.

(b)(4) Except as deemed appropriate by the Secretary, any construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement or extension carried out under this Act shall meet all standards applicable to construction of a Federal building and shall not be subject to any state or local law relating to building codes, permits, or inspections. When Federal standards are used, the Department shall conduct periodic inspections of such construction for the purpose of ensuring that such standards are being met.

(b)(5) The Department's interest in any enhanced-use agreement and in any facility subject to such an agreement shall not be subject, directly or indirectly, to any state or local laws relative to taxation, fees, assessments, or special assessments, except sales taxes associated with the construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement or extension carried out under this Act.

(b)(6) Unless otherwise authorized, the authority to enter into enhanced-use agreements shall expire on September 30, 1993.

(b)(7) The total number of agreements authorized under this section shall not exceed 30.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 states that the short title of this bill is the "Act for the Use and Disposition of Designated VA Facilities."

Section 2 adds a new section 5026 to title 38, United States Code at Chapter 81, Subchapter II, "Use and Disposition of Designated Facilities".

Subsection (a) provides that notwithstanding the provisions of section 5022 of title 38, United States Code, sections 303b, 483 and 484 of title 40, United States Code, and any other provision of law inconsistent with this section, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs is authorized to enter into enhanced use agreements with respect to facilities designated by the Secretary and further authorizes the Secretary to direct the disposal of these facilities by special disposition. Any facility designated under this Act will not be considered unutilized or underutilized for the purposes of the McKinney Act, section 11411 of title 42, United States Code. However, the VA will be required to comply with all Federal environmental and historic preservation laws and regulations and the Davis Bacon Act.

Subsection (b)(1)(A) defines "enhanced use agreements" as a written agreement, consistent with existing appropriation laws of title 31, United States Code, entered into by the Secretary pursuant to competitive procedures with any person, company, corporation, or Federal, State, or local governmental unit, for a term not exceeding thirty-five years (twenty years where construction of new buildings or substantial rehabilitation of existing buildings is not involved), for the use of one or more designated VA facilities, or parts thereof; provided such use is consistent with the Department's mission. The consideration for the use of the designated facility may be in cash or in kind, e.g., the requirement to construct, alter, repair, remodel, improve, or extend and maintain or otherwise benefit one or more Department facilities, or provide space, services, or other benefits to the Department. The total consideration received by the Department should reflect the Government's contribution to the agreement. Cash or in-kind payments received as (or in lieu of) rent for the use of designated facilities will reflect the market value of renting such facilities, thus maintaining fair competition with the private sector. If cash is received, it will be deposited in a special fund, to be known as the Enhanced-Use Fund, which will be available for use by the Department as provided for in appropriation acts, without fiscal year limitation.

Subsection (b)(1)(B) defines "designated facilities" as those VA facilities or parts thereof including unimproved land identified by the Secretary in a notice of designation.

Subsection (b)(1)(C) defines "notice of designation" as a two-part written notice to the VA Committees by the Secretary which identifies one or more facilities for which the Secretary proposes to enter into one or more enhanced use agreements.

Subsection (b)(1)(D) defines "committees" as the Committees on Veterans Affairs of the House of Representatives and Senate.

Subsection (b)(1)(E) defines "special disposition" as a disposition by the Administrator of General Services of a designated facility or the Department's interest therein that is or has been utilized for an enhanced use agreement.

Subsection (b)(2) requires the Secretary to provide the respective VA Committees with a notice of designation not less than 30 days prior to entering into an enhanced use agreement, which identifies the subject facility, explains the background of the proposed use agreement, its rationale, the economic evaluation, including a cost-benefit analysis, for the proposed use agreement, specifies that the Department has held public hearings in the local community addressing the economic impact of such agreement on local commerce, and outlines the terms of the agreement. The Secretary is further required to advise the respective VA Committee at least 10 days prior to entering into such a agreement of any changes or modifications from the previously identified facilities, explain any changes in the agreement's rationale, economic evaluation, or terms, and to provide a copy of the draft agreement.

Subsection (b)(3) provides that the Secretary may direct the disposal of the designated facility or the Department's interest therein at the end or during the term of the enhanced use agreement, by requesting the Administrator of General Services to perform a special disposition. The special disposition of facilities may be negotiated directly with the parties to the enhanced use agreement. The disposition may be for cash or such other consideration as the Secretary and Administrator determine is in the United States' best interest, and may be accomplished by competitive bid or negotiated sale, the terms and conditions of which will be as determined by the Administrator. The Secretary further is required to provide the VA Committee with prior written notice, at least 60 days before effectuating such special disposition, setting forth the background, rationale, and economic evaluation, and the consideration, mode, and terms and conditions of the proposed disposition. Any cash proceeds from the disposition. Any cash proceeds from the disposition will be deposited in the nursing home revolving fund as presently called for by 38 U.S.C. § 5016, or in the Enhanced-Use Fund.

Subsection (b)(4) requires that, except as deemed appropriate by the Secretary, any enhanced construction (construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement, or extension) must meet all standards applicable to the construction of a Federal building and will not be subject to any state or local building codes, permits, or inspections. When Federal standards are used the VA will conduct periodic inspections to ensure the Federal standards are met.

Subsection (b)(5) provides that the Department's interest in any enhanced use agreement and in any facility subject to such an agreement shall not be subject, directly or indirectly, to any state or local laws relative to taxation, fees, assessments, or special assessment, except sales taxes associated with the construction, alternation, repair, remodeling, improvement, or extension carried out under the Act.

Subsection (b)(6) states that the authority to enter enhanced use agreements will expire on September 30, 1993.

Subsection (b)(7) limits the total number of enhanced use agreements to thirty.

THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, April 26, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is transmitted herewith a draft bill, entitled an "Act for the Use and Disposition of Designated VA Facilities." It is requested that this bill be referred to the appropriate committee and favorably considered for enactment.

The proposed bill would authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to enter into enhanced use agreements for VA facilities or parts of VA facilities, as designated by the Secretary.

The legislation would free VA from the constraints of present law which effectively limit arrangements with the private sector to three years, thus discouraging efficient management of VA assets. In contrast, this proposal, if enacted, would permit VA, with prior congressional notice, to enter into competitive and highly advantageous arrangements whereby VA property is improved or managed in a more cost effective manner. In addition, it would enable VA to acquire services without direct Federal capital expenditure. Examples could include parking space, conversion of medical center space to nursing home care or day care facilities, and reconstruction of historic properties.

The proposal would not require new appropriations to VA nor would it be applicable to VA properties generally, but only to those properties specifically designated. In addition, detailed justification would be required on all designated properties and draft agreements. The proposed legislation is consistent with legislative authority already available to other land-holding departments and agencies including Defense and Interior.

If enacted, the Secretary could enter into enhanced use agreements with any person, company, corporation, or Federal, State, or local unit of government, for a term up to thirty-five years (twenty years where new construction or substantial rehabilitation is not involved), under which the designated facilities or parts thereof may be leased or shared for a use consistent with the Department's mission, with payment for such use, in cash or in kind, which could include (1) the responsibility to maintain, repair, construct, alter, remodel, improve, or extend the facilities, or (2) the provision of space, services, or other benefit to the Department. Any cash payments from public or private partners to the Department will be deposited in a special fund to be known as the Enhanced-Use Fund. The Enhanced-Use Fund would be available for use by the Department as provided for in appropriation Acts. The total consideration received would reflect the Government's contribution to the agreement. The Secretary would also be authorized to direct the disposal of any or all of the designated faciliites, or the Department's interest therein, that are or were utilized under an enhanced use agreement, by special disposition, provided the House and Senate Committees on Veterans Affairs are first given notice of the disposition. The agreements would be subject to Federal environmental and historic preservation laws and regulations as well as the Davis Bacon Act.

For the purposes of this bill, designated facilities are those identified by the Secretary in a Notice of Designation, which are deemed approved for an enhanced use agreement. Designated facilities can also include unimproved VA land. The Notice would be submitted to the respective VA Committees by the Secretary, identifying one or more VA facilities, or parts thereof, for which the Secretary proposes to enter into one or more enhanced use agreements. The VA Committees would be provided notice at least 30 days prior to entering into the use agreement(s), which will identify the facilities, or parts thereof, explain the background, rationale, and economic factors (including a cost-benefit analysis) in support of the use agreement, specify that the Department has held public hearings in the local community addressing the economic impact of such agreements on local commerce, and provide a general outline of the proposed agreement. A subsequent Notice will be submitted not less than 10 days prior to entering into the agreement, which will note any deviations from the agreement previously submitted to the VA Committees, providing a copy of the draft use agreement. Because such designation constitutes a determination of a continued Departmental requirements for the designated facilities, such facilities will not be considered unutilized or under-utilized for the purposes of section 11411 of title 42, United States Code.

Except as deemed appropriate by the Secretary, any construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement, or extension carried out under this Act will meet all standards applicable to construction of a Federal building, but will not be subject to any state or local laws relating to building codes, permits, or inspections. When Federal standards are involved, the Department, however, will conduct periodic inspections to ensure that the applicable Federal standards are met. The Department's interest in any enhanced use agreement and in any facility subject to such an agreement will not be subject, directly or indirectly, to any state or local laws relative to taxation, fees, assessments, or special assessments, except sales taxes associated with the construction, alteration, repair, remodeling, improvement, or extension carried out under this legislation.

Finally, the proposed legislation would authorize the special disposition by the Secretary, acting by or through the Administrator of General Services, of a designated facility, or part thereof, or the Department's interest therein, at the end of or during the term of the agreement, that is or previously was, utilized for an enhanced use agreement. The dispositon would be for cash, or such other consideration as determined by the Secretary to be in the Department's best interest, and may be accomplished by negotiating directly with the parties to the agreement, or by competitive bid or negotiated sale, under terms and conditions which the Secretary deems appropriate. Any cash proceeds, less the cost of disposition, would be deposited into the nursing home revolving fund, or the Enhanced-Use Fund. Before any special disposition can occur, the Secretary must provide at least 60-days written notice to the respective VA Committees, in which the background, rationale, economic evaluation of the disposition, as well as the intended consideration, mode, and terms and conditions of the action are fully described.

No additional costs would result from enactment of this proposal.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this legislative proposal to the Congress and that its enactment would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD J. DERWINSKI.

By Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. DODD, Mr. COATS, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MACK, and Mr. THURMOND):

S.J. Res. 301. Joint resolution designating October 1990 as "National Breast Cancer Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL BREAST CANCER AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am today introducing a joint resolution which can make a difference in the lives and health of millions of American women.

Breast cancer. Two terribly frightening words. It will strike an estimated 150,000 women in 1990, and kill about 44,000 women. It is the second leading cause of cancer death among women, and the risk of developing breast cancer increases as a woman ages.

In my own State of Rhode Island, breast cancer will strike about 900 women in 1990. This year alone, almost 300 Rhode Island women will die of the disease.

Mr. President, many people don't realize that breast cancer also strikes men. In 1990, an estimated 900 men will develop breast cancer. Last year, 300 men across this Nation died from the disease.

That is bad news. But there is good news, too. Breast cancer is a life-threatening disease that we can do something about. We may not yet know how to prevent it. But we do know how to detect it early, and we do know that early detection saves lives.

Early detection, through self-examination and screening mammography, can significantly reduce breast cancer mortality. Fifty years ago, the 5-year survival rate for localized breast cancer was 78 percent. Now it is over 90 percent. The American Cancer Society estimates that a combination of early detection procedures can boost the survival rate of localized breast cancer to almost 100 percent. That is, indeed, a number we can live with.

Mr. President, most women detect breast cancer themselves. Yet many do not know how to self-examine, and many are afraid to try. The same is true with screening mammography. Fear, lack of access, cost, and lack of information, prevent many women from seeking a screening mammography. This is more than unwise; it is a prescription for disease and death.

We can do something about this, Mr. President. We can support the efforts of health care organizations, providers, and advocates who work each day to educate people about breast cancer and to teach that—while breast cancer can kill—it can also be conquered. The resolution I am introducing today can help send this message of hope to all by establishing the month of October 1990 as National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined in introducing this important joint resolution by Senators SIMON, MIKULSKI, JEFFORDS, DODD, COATS, METZENBAUM, BRADLEY, MACK, and THURMOND, and I look forward to working with them and with my other colleagues in the Senate to ensure its speedy consideration and passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 301

Whereas breast cancer will strike an estimated 150,000 women and 900 men in the United States in 1990;

Whereas one out of every ten women will develop breast cancer at some point in her life;

Whereas the risk of developing breast cancer increases as a woman grows older;

Whereas breast cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death in women, killing an estimated 43,000 women and 300 men in 1989;

Whereas the 5-year survival rate for localized breast cancer has risen from 78 percent in the 1940s to over 90 percent today;

Whereas most breast cancers are detected by the woman herself;

Whereas educating both the public and physicians about the importance of early detection will result in reducing breast cancer mortality;

Whereas appropriate use of screening mammography, in conjunction with clinical examination and breast self-examination, can result in the detection of many breast cancers early in their development and increase the survival rate to nearly 100 percent;

Whereas data from controlled trials clearly demonstrate that deaths from breast cancer are significantly reduced in women over the age of 40 by using mammography as a screening tool;

Whereas women do not have mammograms for a variety of reasons, such as the cost of testing, lack of information, and fear;

Whereas access to screening mammography is directly related to socioeconomic status;

Whereas increased awareness about the importance of screening mammography will result in the procedure being regularly requested by the patient and recommended by the health care provider; and

Whereas it is projected that more women will use this lifesaving test as it becomes increasingly available and affordable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That October 1990 is designated as "National Breast Cancer Awareness Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate programs and activities.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 96

At the request of Mr. FORD, the name of the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 96, a concurrent resolution to urge the administration in the strongest possible terms not to propose civil air transport services for inclusion under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT], or the proposed General Agreement on Trade in Services [GATS], and to actively oppose any proposal that would consider civil air transport services as a negotiation item.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 124—RELATING TO HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS AGAINST THE ALBANIAN MINORITY IN YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. PRESSLER) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 124

Whereas recent events in Eastern Europe underscore the need for a strong United States role in the promotion of human rights and democracy throughout that region;

Whereas the human rights situation in certain areas of Yugoslvaia, particularly in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosova, has deteriorated while other countries in Eastern Europe are embracing democratic freedoms and fundamental rights;

Whereas the Department of State's Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1989 cites many human rights practices in Yugoslavia that violate internationally accepted human rights standards, including infringement upon and abrogation of the rights of assembly and fair trial, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press;

Whereas the Country Reports also document that these ethnic groups and regions, particularly against the ethnic Ablanian population of the Province of Kosova and to a lesser extent the ethnic Albanian population of the Republic of Macedonia;

Whereas the Government of the Yugoslav Republic of Serbia abrogated the autonomous status of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosova in March 1989 against the clear wishes of the ethnic Albanian population of that Province, which comprise the overwhelming majority of the population of that Province;

Whereas these serious and continuing human rights violations, in addition to the continued denial of autonomous status to the Province of Kosova, have precipitated a severe and continuing ethnic crisis in southern Yugoslavia;

Whereas the Albanian majority of Kosova have been denied the right to free trial and other civil rights;

Whereas the democratic movements in Kosova have attracted large numbers of Albanian supporters despite the severe restrictions on human rights and the democratic process;

Whereas the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia have responded through the use of force to suppress Albanian dissent which has arisen in opposition to these intolerable conditions;

Whereas the use of force by the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia has led to indiscriminate killing and brutal treatment of peaceful Albanian demonstrators by the police, mass arbitrary arrest and detention of Albanians, summary trial and imprisonment of Albanian peasants and workers, the banning of Albanian demonstrations and strikes, and the silencing of Albanian journalists and broadcasters; and

Whereas these human rights abuses and the abridgment of the civil rights of ethnic Albanians violate the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the political obligations undertaken by the Government of Yugoslavia as a signatory to the Helsinki Final Act: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) expresses grave concern about the human rights abuses by the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia;

(2) urges the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia to cease the use of force in the Province of Kosova and to protect basic human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(3) urges the Government of Yugoslavia to investigate the indiscriminate killing of civilians by police forces;

(4) welcomes the decision of the Presidency of Yugoslavia to lift the state of emergency in the Province of Kosova and the decision of the Yugoslav courts to acquit Azam Vlasi and 13 other ethnic Albanian defendants of all charges against them;

(5) urges the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia to ensure that the lifting of the state of emergency results in the full restoration of freedoms curtailed under the state of emergency;

(6) urges the Government of Yugoslavia and the Government of the Republic of Serbia to restore full autonomous status to the Province of Kosova;

(7) urges the Government of the Republic of Serbia to begin a genuine dialogue with the recently formed Democratic Alliance Movement and other democratic forces in the Province of Kosova in the interest of resolving the political and economic crisis in that Province;

(8) urges the Government of Yugoslavia to observe fully its obligations under the Helsinki Final Act to assure full protection of the human and civil rights of the Albanian nationality and all other national groups in Yugoslavia;

(9) requests the Department of State to monitor more closely and on-site the human rights conditions in Yugoslavia;

(10) requests the President to express the concerns of the Congress about the situation in the Province of Kosova and the increase in human rights violations in other areas of Yugoslavia to the highest levels of the Government of Yugoslavia;

(11) requests the President to prohibit Export-Import Bank loans or credit guarantees to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, where these are intended to finance projects within the Republic of Serbia, until there is a substantial improvement in the human rights situation and until all citizens of Yugoslavia are afforded equal rights.

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators DOLE, PRESSLER, and myself, I am submitting a concurrent resolution regarding human rights violations against ethinc Albanians in southern Yugoslavia, particularly in the Province of Kosova. Congressmen TOM LANTOS and JOHN PORTER, cochairmen of the congressional human rights caucus, are introducing identical legislation today in the House of Representatives.

During the last 18 months the Yugoslav province of Kosova has been wracked by ethnic unrest and violence. At the root of this situation is the repressive campaign being waged by the Government of the Republic of Serbia, with substantial support from the Yugoslav National Government, against Albanians, who comprise 90 percent of the population of Kosova. In February 1989, a repressive state of emergency was imposed throughout Kosova and in the following month the province's autonomous status was revoked. Mass arrests and detentions have taken place, killings and beatings have occurred, and many other harsh and restrictive measures have been imposed on Kosova's Albanian majority.

This week the Presidency of Yugoslavia lifted the state of emergency in the Province of Kosova. The immediate impact of this action is to remove the ban on demonstrations and other forms of peaceful protest. It is imperative that the Serbian and Yugoslav Governments allow demonstrations to take place and fully restore other rights that were curtailed under the state of emergency. Otherwise, lifting the state of emergency will be a meaningless gesture.

Mr. President, as a signatory to the Helsinki Final Act, the Government of Yugoslavia has an obligation to promote and protect basic human rights and fundamental freedoms. It must be held accountable for violating these obligations with respect to its Albanian population. I believe that the resolution that we are introducing today does that.

It makes it clear that the American people will not tolerate continued repression in Kosova. It urges the Governments of Yugoslavia and Serbia to cease the use of force in Kosova, to restore Kosova's autonomous status, and to begin a genuine dialogue with democratic forces in Kosova, including the recently formed Democratic Alliance Movement. It also requests the President to monitor the human rights situation in Yugoslavia more closely, to raise Congress' concern about the situation in Kosova at the highest levels of the Yugoslav Government, and to prohibit Export-Import Bank loans to Yugoslavia in those cases where loans would go to the Serbian Republic until there is substantial improvement in the human rights situation in Kosova.

As a Nation committed to human rights and fundamental freedoms, we must do all that we can to see that Yugoslavia fulfills its obligations under the Helsinki Final Act. The winds of freedom and democracy which are sweeping across the rest of Eastern Europe must not die out in Yugoslavia's province of Kosova.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 275—RELATING TO A PERFORMANCE IN THE HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. MITCHELL (for Mr. BOREN) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 275

Resolved, That in honor of the opening of the acclaimed musical "SARAFINA," members of the cast will be allowed to sing in the Senate Hart Building on Tuesday, May 1 at noon, to share the music of a moving story about the black schoolchildren who suffer under apartheid.

SENATE RESOLUTION 276—REGARDING THE ACTIONS OF THE SOVIET UNION TOWARD LITHUANIA

Mr. RIEGLE (for himself, Mr. GORTON, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. D'AMATO) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 276

Whereas on March 11, 1990, the Lithuanian Republic exercised its lawful right of self-determination by declaring the restoration of its independence from the Soviet Union;

Whereas the Lithuanian parliament has repeatedly called for peaceful negotiations with Soviet officials to work out mutually acceptable terms for Lithuania's exit from the Soviet Union;

Whereas Lithuanian parliament and the Lithuanian people have taken no actions to threaten Soviet property or the safety of Lithuanian residents;

Whereas the Estonian and Latvian Republics have also declared their intentions to restore independence and free and democratic governments;

Whereas the Government of the Soviet Union, however, has refused to negotiate and, instead, has taken provocative and intimidating actions, such as arresting Lithuanian citizens, swelling the Soviet military presence in Lithuania, occupying government buildings, obstructing freedom of the press, and expelling foreign diplomats and journalists; and

Whereas the Government of the Soviet Union has halted supplies of oil and natural gas to Lithuania in an effort to cripple the independence drive through economic sanctions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the conflicting interests of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Lithuanian Republic should be resolved peacefully through negotiations between the Soviet leadership and the newly elected leaders of Lithuania, and not through force, intimidation, or economic blackmail;

(2) the United States should not continue "business as usual" with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as long as the Soviet Union maintains economic sanctions against Lithuania and refuses to enter into good-faith negotiations; and

(3) until the Government of the Soviet Union ends its policy of economic coercion against Lithuania, the United States Government—

(A) should not proceed with planned United States-Soviet negotiations on trade, civil aviation, maritime transportation, and investment and tax treaties;

(B) should not consider the granting of most-favored-nation trade treatment to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

(C) should not support the granting of observer status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

(D) should consult with our Allies to encourage similar, coordinated responses to Soviet actions in Lithuania; and

(E) should be prepared to take similar actions should the Soviet government extend its coercive practices against the republics of Estonia and Latvia.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, the Lithuanian people have once again captivated the world's attention in recent weeks as they bravely stand behind their declaration of independence from the U.S.S.R., unswayed by the Soviet Government's ever-increasing tactics of intimidation. The Soviet leadership, however, has done a great disservice to democracy and to the Lithuanian people, by moving beyond intimidation to economic blackmail, cutting off vital supplies of oil and gas to Lithuania last week. The Lithuanian people now face perhaps the most vulnerable moment in their 3-year struggle to end the illegal Soviet occupation of their nation.

It is therefore vitally important that the people and Government of the United States now decisively demonstrate our support of Lithuanian self-determination. This support is dictated by our 50-year policy of not recognizing the illegal Soviet annexation of the Baltic States. But, more importantly, it is dictated by our commitment to freedom and democracy throughout the world.

The Soviets often argue that the three small Baltic States should not be allowed to influence the fate of the vast Soviet empire. But the standoff in Lithuania is significant not for these three small nations alone; rather, it is an historical turning point for the world.

Will the Soviet leadership, in spite of its rhetoric about "openness" and "democratization," continue to frustrate the will of the Lithuanian people, or will it take a step backward to the old style, coercive Soviet approach to international relations?

And will the United States give carte blanche to the Soviet's unacceptable behavior? Or will we do our best to convince them to do the right thing—to choose negotiation over economic and psychological warfare?

Now is the time—as a Nation—to take a stand; to let Soviet leaders know that there is a limit to United States acquiescence. The United States must send a strong signal to the Kremlin that we consider their economic, military and psychological harassment of Lithuania unacceptable, and that we consider bilateral negotiations the only responsible way to resolve this standoff.

That is why I am introducing a resolution today expressing the sense of the Senate that the United States must not continue "business as usual" with the Soviets, as long as they maintain their economic blockade of Lithuania and refuse to negotiate. The resolution calls for the United States Government not to proceed with the planned United States-Soviet trade agreement, consideration of Soviet most-favored-nation trading status or Soviet observer status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; and to consult with out allies in an effort to encourage similar, coordinated responses; until the Soviet Government ends its hostile actions against Lithuania.

The time has come for the Bush administration to transcend its mere expression of support for Lithuanian self-determination and to back up its words with actions. I urge my colleagues to join me in sending this critical message to the White House, to Moscow, and to the people of Lithuania.

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. KASTEN) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4404, supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following new title:

TITLE IV—IRAQ SANCTIONS

SECTION 1. This title may be referred to as the "Iraq Sanctions Act of 1990".

GENERAL PROHIBITION ON SUPPORT FOR IRAQ

SEC. 101. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds, credits, guarantees or insurance appropriated or otherwise made available by any Act for Fiscal Year 1990 or thereafter, shall be used to support or administer any financial or commercial operation, of any United States Government department, agency, entity or persons subject to United States jurisdiction, involving the Government of Iraq, its agencies, institutions or persons working on its behalf, including the processing of any "validated" or "general" export licenses or any documentation related to the importation of Iraqi-origin products into the United States or its territories, or possessions thereof.

(b) The Department of Commerce is instructed to include Iraq within Country Group S within supplement Number 1 to section 770 of the Export Administration Regulations ("EAR").

(c) This section shall become effective immediately upon the enactment of this Act, except for the performance of a contract or agreement entered into before the enactment of this Act.

(d) The penalties for violation of this general prohibition by exporters, exporting agents and entities under the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be the same as those contained in section 11 of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as amended, Public Law 96-72 (93 Stat. 529, as amended).

IRAQ TO BE CONSIDERED A TERRORIST NATION

SEC. 201. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the purpose of the application of prohibitions, limitations, restrictions, and other requirements of the provisions of law contained in subsection (b), Iraq shall be considered a country which grants sanctuary from prosecution to any individual or group which has committed an act of international terrorism, has repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism, or otherwise supports international terrorism.

(b) The provisions of law referred to in subsection (a)

(1) Section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended;

(2) Sections 563 and 564 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990;

(3) Section 555 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985; and

(4) similar provisions of law.

(c) The President may not use any waiver authority provided under statutes referred to in subsection (b) of this section, or statutes made applicable by virtue of subsection (b)(4), or under section 40(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, with respect to Iraq, except as provided in section 301(a)(2) of this Act.

PROHIBITION ON TRANSACTIONS WITH IRAQ

SEC. 301. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the following are prohibited—

(1) the import into the United States of any goods or services of Iraqi origin, other than publications and materials imported for news publications or news broadcast dissemination;

(2) the export to Iraq of any goods, technology (including technical data or other information), or services from the United States, except publications and donations of articles intended to relieve human suffering, such as food, clothing, medicine and medical supplies intended strictly for humanitarian medical purposes;

(3) any transaction by a United States person relating to transportation to or from Iraq; the provision of transportation to or from the United States by any Iraqi person or any vessel or aircraft of Iraqi registration; or the sale in the United States by any person holding authority under the Federal Aviation Act of any transportation by air which includes any stop in Iraq;

(4) the purchase by any United States person of goods for export from Iraq to any country;

(5) the performance by any United States person of any contract in support of an industrial or other commercial or governmental project in Iraq;

(6) the grant or extension of credits, loans or loan guarantees, by any United States person to the Government of Iraq, its instrumentalities and controlled entities;

(7) any transaction by a United States person relating to travel by any United States citizen or permanent resident alien to Iraq, or to activities by any such person within Iraq, after the date of the enactment of this Act, other than transactions necessary to effect such person's departure from Iraq, to perform acts permitted until the date of enactment of this Act, by paragraph (3) of this subsection, or travel for journalistic activity by persons regularly employed in such capacity by a news gathering organization;

(8) the acceptance, receipt, or holding by a United States depository institution of a deposit account from the Government of Iraq or from any agency or entity owned or controlled by the Government of Iraq except for such accounts which may be authorized by the President for diplomatic or consular purposes. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "depository institution" has the same meaning as in section 19(b)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act. The prohibition contained in this paragraph shall take effect 45 days after the enactment of this Act; and

(9) any transaction by any United States person which evades or avoids, or has the purpose of evading or avoiding any of the prohibitions set forth in this Act.

(b) In light of the prohibition in Section 1(a) of this Act, section 251 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1881), and section 126 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended (19 U.S.C. 2136) will have no effect with respect to Iraq.

(c) A civil penalty of not to exceed $250,000 may be imposed on any person who violates any license, order, or regulation issued under this Act.

(d) Whoever, other than an individual, willfully violates any license, order, or regulation issued under this title shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000,000 or, if an individual, shall be fined not more than $500,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both; and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation may be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both.

(e) This section shall become effective immediately upon the enactment of this Act, except for the performance of a contract or agreement entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of State, is hereby authorized to take such actions, including the promulgation of rules and regulations, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section. Such actions may include prohibitions or regulating payments or transfers of any property or any transactions involving the transfer or anything of economic value by any United States person to the Government of Iraq, its instrumentalities and controlled entities, or to any Iraqi national or entity owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by Iraq or Iraqi national. The Secretary may redelegate any of these functions to other officers and agencies of the Federal government. All agencies of the United States government are directed to take appropriate measures within their authority to carry out the provisions of this section, including the suspension or termination of licenses or other authorizations in effect as of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g) For purposes of this Act, the terms "person", "United States person", "good", "technology", "export", and "United States", shall be the same as those contained in section 16 or the Export Administration Act of 1979, as amended, Public Law 96–72 (93 Stat. 529, as amended), except that the term "controlled country" shall mean Iraq.

PROHIBITION ON EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ASSISTANCE TO IRAQ

SEC. 401. (a) Section 512 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1990, is amended in the last proviso of that section by inserting ", except with regard to Iraq," after "That".

PROHIBITION ON IMPORTS OF CRUDE OIL AND PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FROM IRAQ

SEC. 501. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no crude oil or refined petroleum products of Iraqi origin may be imported into the United States.

(b) Subsection (a) does not apply to any import pursuant to a contract entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) A civil penalty of not to exceed $250,000 may be imposed on any person who violates any license, order, or regulation issued under this Act.

(d) Whoever, other than an individual, willfully imports crude oil or refined petroleum products into the United States, directly or indirectly from Iraq, or who willfully violates any license, order, or regulation issued under this section shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000,000, or, if an individual, shall be fined no more than $500,000 or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both; and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation may be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both.

(e) For purposes of this Act, the term "indirect" refers to the importation into the United States, either in whole or in part, from or through, any third party, country or entity. Crude oil and refined petroleum products of Iraqi origin shall include any crude oil and refined petroleum products that are commingled in any percentage amount with that from any other country or territory of origin.

STUDY AND REPORT ON THE INTERNATIONAL EXPORT TO IRAQ OF NUCLEAR, BIOLOGICAL, CHEMICAL AND BALLISTIC MISSILE TECHNOLOGY

SEC. 601. (a) The President shall conduct a study on the sale, export and third party transfer or development of nuclear, biological, chemical and ballistic missile technology to or with Iraq including—

(1) an identification of specific countries, as well as companies and individuals, both foreign and domestic, engaged in such sale or export of, nuclear, biological and ballistic missile technology;

(2) a detailed description and analysis of the international supply, information, support and co-production network, individual, corporate and state, responsible for Iraq's current capability in the area of nuclear, biological, chemical and ballistic missile technology;

(3) A recommendation of standards and procedures against which to measure and verify a decision of the Government of Iraq to terminate the development, production, co-production and deployment of nuclear, biological, chemical and offensive ballistic missile technology as well as the destruction of all existing facilities associated with such technologies.

(b) The President shall include in the study specific recommendations on new mechanisms, to include legal, political, economic and regulatory, whereby the United States might contribute, in conjunction with its friends, allies, and the international community, to the management, control or elimination of the threat of nuclear, biological, chemical and ballistic missile proliferation.

(c) Not later than December 1, 1990, the President shall submit to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a report, in both classified and unclassified form, setting forth the findings of the study required by subsection (a).

STUDY AND REPORT ON IRAQ'S OFFENSIVE MILITARY CAPABILITY

SEC. 701. (a) The President shall conduct a study on Iraq's offensive military capability and its effect on the Middle East balance of power including an assessment of Iraq's power projection capability, the prospects for another sustained conflict with Iran, joint Iraqi-Jordanian military cooperation, the threat Iraq's arms transfer activities pose to U.S. allies in the Middle East, and the extension of Iraq's political-military influence into Africa and Latin America.

(b) Not later than December 1, 1990, the President shall submit to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a report, in both classified and unclassified form, setting forth the findings of the study required by subsection (a).

REPORT ON SANCTIONS TAKEN BY OTHER NATIONS AGAINST IRAQ

SEC. 801. (a) The President shall prepare a report on the steps taken by other nations against to curtail the export of goods, services and technologies to Iraq which might contribute to, or enhance, Iraq's nuclear, biological, chemical and ballistic missile capability.

(b) The President shall make every effort to encourage other nations, in whatever forum or context, to adopt sanctions toward Iraq similar to those contained in this Act.

(c) Not later than every six months from the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a report in both classified and unclassified form, setting forth the findings of the study required by subsection (a).

KOHL (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1537

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. KOHL (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. MCCONNELL) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 4404, supra, as follows:

On page 37, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

SCHOOL DROPOUT PREVENTION

The Secretary shall transfer—

$2.867 million of amounts made available in fiscal year 1990 from the Department of Education, Departmental Management, to carry out the provisions of the School Dropout Demonstration Assistance Act of 1988, for expenses necessary to extend current grants authorized under title VI, part A of Public Law 100-297 for one additional year, $19,945,000, to remain available through September 30, 1991.

● Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, today I am filing an amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. PELL, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. MCCONNELL to the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill and I ask unanimous consent that the text of that amendment, and the list of States affected by the loss of funding of this appropriation follow these remarks.

What this amendment seeks to do is to provide emergency funding for a program that supports school dropout assistance in 31 States throughout this Nation. Last year, when we considered the Labor, Health and Human Services Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, we did not have an authorization for this program. Since that time, the Senate has voted unanimously to reauthorize the program and the President has signed that legislation. But unfortunately, the funds needed to continue this needed program will cease to be available this summer. $19,945,000 is needed to carry the program through the next academic year.

Without a Federal commitment to continue the funding, without a strong signal from us, these programs will not be in operation when the academic year begins in September. It is that simple, and I believe it is critical that we respond now.

The problem, of course, is not a lack of support for the School Dropout Assistance Program. This, in fact, is the year of the dropout. The dilemma is finding an appropriate way to pay for it. So I have been searching for an offset. Now I would like in a perfect world, to have the luxury of financing this program through some other subcommittee's allocation—no offense to my distinguished colleagues who appropriate for defense, or foreign operations. In this Senator's mind, the Labor, HHS and Education funds are pretty lean, picked to the bone if you will, in contrast to spending in other areas.

But I anticipate those types of offsets won't be tolerated for the purpose of floor debate, and I'm trying to play by the rules.

So I have searched high and low within these accounts to find an offeset, perhaps to the amusement of those members who serve on the Labor, HHS and Education subcommittee, who have already scratched through what little was there to begin with. The choices aren't pretty. After exhaustive efforts, we have decided to file the amendment with the least of the evils as an offset.

The offset, which has been cleared by CBO as sufficient, would cut 0.8 percent—eight-tenths of 1 percent, or $2.8 million—from the Department of Education departmental management budget of $331 million. Last year the account received a 10-percent increase after $1 million had lapsed, unobligated. Approximately 60 percent of the program administration money is used for salary, consultants and benefits. I do not seek to displace workers. But somewhere in that 40 percent, I think there must be some room to find $2.8 million without causing excessing havoc.

But I am not locked into this particular offset. I have spoken with the Under Secretary of Education and I believe there is a mutual interest in getting funds to these dropout prevention programs this year—it is a matter of how to do it.

I want to alert my colleagues to my deep commitment to getting this job done, as well as my willingness to work within the confines of the rules to do it in the least detrimental manner. I thank those colleagues who are joining me in this effort and I welcome the support of all others whose cities and States would be negatively affected if we fail in this endeavor.

I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the list mentioned earlier was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, NATIONAL PARKS AND FORESTS

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on May 10, 1990, beginning at 2 p.m. in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on three measures currently pending before the subcommittee. The measures to be heard are:

S. 1767, to reimburse Montana and individuals for expenses incurred to test cattle for brucellosis organisms carried outside Yellowstone National Park by elk and bison, and for other purposes;

S. 2343, to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by designating a segment of the Clarks Fork River in the State of Wyoming as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; and

H.R. 2809, to provide for the transfer of certain lands to the State of California, and for other purposes.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, anyone wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record is welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit written testimony should send two copies to the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests, SD-364, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information regarding the hearing, please contact Beth Norcross of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-7933.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Thursday, April 26, 1990, at 3:15 p.m. in open session to receive a report from Secretary of Defense Cheney on the results of the major aircraft review by the Department of Defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON STRATEGIC FORCES AND NUCLEAR DETERRENCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence of the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet in open session on Thursday, April 26, 1990, at 2:30 p.m. to receive testimony on ICBM modernization in review of S. 2171, the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate, Thursday, April 26, 1990, at 10 a.m. to hold hearings on financial modernization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full committee of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate, April 26, 1990, at 2 p.m. for a continuation hearing of the April 3 hearing to receive testimony on the Department of Energy's decision plan related to the opening of the waste isolation pilot plant in Carlsbad, NM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON TOXIC SUBSTANCES, ENVIRONMENTAL OVERSIGHT, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances, Environmental Oversight, Research and Development, Committee on Environment and Public Works, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 26, beginning at 2 p.m., to conduct a hearing to consider scientific questions surrounding asbestos exposure, reauthorization of the Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act [ASHAA] and implementation of the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, Committee on Governmental Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 26, 1990, at 2 p.m., to hold a hearing on S. 1957, a bill to increase the purchase of commercial items by civilian agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Human Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 26, at 1:30 p.m., for a hearing on "reauthorization of the CDC Tuberculosis Program."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on April 26, 1990, at 2 p.m., to hold a hearing on the nomination of William M. Nickerson, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Maryland, James K. Singleton, Jr., to be U.S. district judge for the District of Alaska, Stephen M. McNamee to be U.S. district judge for the District of Arizona, and Jack D. Shanstrom to be U.S. district judge for the District of Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on April 26, 1990, at 10 a.m. to hold a hearing on the economic implications of changes in Puerto Rico's political status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HONORING THE SPRINGFIELD, SD, AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY UNIT NO. 132

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the members of American Legion Auxiliary Unit No. 132 in Springfield, SD. These dedicated individuals commit many hours and much energy to project that enhance the lives of veterans and other residents within their community. Their hard work and sense of civic purpose are two of the reasons why Springfield, SD, is such a great place to live.

During the past year, the members of American Legion Auxiliary Unit No. 132 have donated time and money to the Special Olympics, the auxiliary emergency fund, and collecting broken eyeglasses for the needy. Also, the auxiliary sponsored a successful blood donor drive that surpassed all expectations, and this effort has become a regular feature of the auxiliary's activities.

The auxiliary's work does not stop with their local community. Unit No. 132 recently undertook a project to help collect money for the Make a Wish Foundation. Their contributions will make it possible for terminally ill children from throughout the country to have a wish come true.

These are just a few of the many fine projects sponsored by the members of the Springfield American Legion Auxiliary. Their commitment and dedication to serving their fellow citizens is a reminder that Springfield's veterans and their families have not finished serving their country.●

THE AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION RESERVE AND ENHANCEMENT ACT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2302, the Agricultural Conservation Reserve and Enhancement Act of 1990, introduced in the Senate by my distinguished colleague from Missouri, Senator BOND.

Within its provisions, this bill would extend the authorization for 38 to 45 million acres in the Conservation Reserve Program [CRP] through 1995. The bill would mandate at least one more signup for highly erodible cropland, and would allow additional signups at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. Further, the Secretary would be directed to offer additional incentives to plant hardwood trees on CRP acres.

The Conservation Reserve Program has worthy and well-defined goals: To reduce soil erosion, protect the long-run capacity to produce food and fiber, reduce sedimentation, improve water quality, create better habitat for fish and wildlife, curb production of surplus commodities and provide income support to farmers.

In my home State of New Mexico, the CRP is a very important program. Based on the latest available statistics, there were 1,475 CRP contracts in the State at the close of 1988. Approximately, 400,485 acres were placed under CRP contract through 1988 with an average rental payment of $38.29 per acre.

A recent economic assessment of the program conducted by the Economic Research Service [ERS] at the U.S. Department of Agriculture concluded the CRP does increase net farm income and does improve environmental quality. This program benefits are offset somewhat by higher food prices and administrative expenses. There is also the potential for down turns in rural economics, particularly in the agricultural input industries, where there is a large amount of CRP enrollment. The ERS estimates net economic benefits of the program range for $3.4 to $11 billion.

Mr. President, I strongly support language in this bill requiring the Department of Agriculture to study the future of the CRP and to provide to Congress a comprehensive report on options and recommendations, including cost estimates, for addressing this land as contracts expire. The Secretary would work with representatives of farm organizations, commodity groups, academia and industy. As CRP contracts expire, it will be critical that conservation achievements are not lost.

Mr. President, while there are other valuable provisions in this bill regarding integrated farm plans, swampbuster and multiyear set-asides, I want to express serious concerns about a certain provision within this bill.

Last fall, the Congress failed to do its work on time, and we had that planned train wreck, otherwise known as a sequester, At that time, CRP annual rental payments were not made to famers because of indecision as to whether or not such payments were subject to the sequester. I joined many of my colleagues in urging the administration to quickly reach a decision on this matter. Farmers across the Nation were financially dependent on these payments being made on a timely basis.

I am opposed to the provision this bill would exempt CRP annual rental payments from sequester. Mr. President, I strongly oppose any efforts to exempt any additional Federal programs from the deficit reduction process.

My opposition to exempting CRP rental payments from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings should not be construed as opposition to the CRP or this bill.

I strongly support CRP and I will work to see this important program is fully funded within our budget constraints. However, to the extent we broaden exemptions to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, we both endorse a dangerous precedent that could erode this important law and weaken the budget discipline imposed by this law.

A major deficit reduction package is critical for this country, and agriculture would benefit from such a package just as all other sectors of our economy. Farmers and ranchers know, perhaps better than anybody, the costly effects of the high interest rates caused by our deficit, now estimated by the Congressional Budget Office for fiscal year 1991 at $160 billion.

Finally, Mr. President, I might add that the conservation title, as well as the entire farm bill, which will be reported out of the Senate Agricultural Committee must fit within the agreement on the budget. The Senate Budget Committee is now making up the budget resolution for fiscal year 1991.

Mr. President, it is with these reservations that I want to cosponsor Senator BOND's bill; it has valuable provisions relating to the Conservation Reserve Program. However, I want to be clear that all Federal farm programs over the next few years must operate within budget constraints.●

MOSAIC PROJECT TRACES FLORIDA JEWISH HISTORY BACK TO 1400's

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we know that one of the fundamentals in shaping the future is understanding the past.

"MOSAIC: Jewish Life in Florida" is an outstanding example of our quest to understand history. The value of historical knowledge cannot be overstated.

The traveling MOSAIC exhibit will be on display in eight locations throughout Florida, starting this fall at the Historical Museum of South Florida in Miami.

Dr. Henry A. Green, director of Judaic studies at the University of Miami and director for MOSAIC, said he hopes this project will help define the past and show how people worked together. I commend those worthwhile goals.

Our Nation is the sum of contributions from people drawn to this great land from around the globe. And Florida, with its rich diversity, reflects the complex mosaic that we know as America. In 2 years, we will mark the 500-year anniversary of Columbus' discovery of the New World. Dr. Green, the director of this project, says that at least five crew members on Columbus' first voyage were conversos—Jews who converted to Christianity due to pressure of the Spanish Inquisition.

Since then, the contributions of Jewish Floridians have been many. Today, south Florida is home to one of the largest Jewish communities in the world.

Research to gather items for the MOSAIC exhibit has been done by hundreds of trained volunteers throughout Florida. More than 3,000 items—including photos, artifacts and graphics—will be shown with this exhibit that tells of Jewish life in Florida. This traveling MOSAIC exhibition will be a tribute to our continuing study of history and to our rich heritage.●

ACE RIVER BASIN PROJECT

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, this past weekend we observed Earth Day around the country, and judging by the large rally here in Washington and in other cities across the Nation, the observance was a great success. Earth Day was an excellent 1-day effort to raise the environmental consciousness of our citizenry. Yet, the environment requires our individual and collective attention each and every day. We have a profound obligation in this regard.

With this in mind, I rise today to share with my colleagues one conservation success story from my home State, where an ambitious effort has been launched to protect and enhance the bottomland hardwoods, cypress/tupelo swamps, fresh, brackish, and saltwater marshes, and the estuary in the ACE River basin of South Carolina. Located primarily in Charleston, Colleton, and Beaufort Counties, the 350,000-acre ACE Basin is comprised of a series of islands and marsh habitats formed by three rivers—the Ashepoo, Combahee, and Edisto—hence the name ACE—that flow into St. Helena Sound. The basin is characterized by diverse natural habitats and is significant to the management and preservation of North America's fish and wildlife resources. Specifically, it is an important area for the migrating and wintering ducks in the Atlantic Flyway. Furthermore, the basin is the habitat for at least 17 rare or endangered species, including 6 federally listed species such as the wood stork and the bald eagle. Consequently, portions of the ACE Basin have been identified as high-priority habitat under the North American waterfowl management plan.

In the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, the loss and degradation of habitat have been identified as the major waterfowl management problem in the continent. The plan recommended the protection and enhancement of migration and wintering habitat through acquisition, protection, and management of wetlands by public and private conservation interests. From Maine to South Carolina, about 880,000 acres of wetlands and upland buffer habitat have been listed for protection and enhancement in the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. Within the ACE Basin alone, over 90,000 acres have been identified for protection under the plan.

I have been actively involved with this effort, working closely with the ACE Basin Task Force, which is comprised of Ducks Unlimited, the Nature Conservancy, the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Together, these various groups promote a range of conservation programs that have the potential to protect the entire basin. The task force is now working toward the establishment of an ACE Basin national wildlife refuge and a national estuarine research reserve.

Last year, I was able to initiate the designation of the refuge by earmarking $1.5 million in the Interior Appropriations bill. This year, President Bush joined me in supporting the effort and included another $1.5 million in his budget for this U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service refuge. Negotiations are currently under way to acquire the first tracts of land for the refuge.

Additionally, the task force, working with the Department of Commerce, has undertaken the establishment of a 28,000-acre estuarine reserve within the ACE Basin. The nomination of this site as a national estuarine research reserve demonstrates the State's strong commitment to long-term management of the area. The ACE Basin would contain the largest reserve along the Atlantic coastline, and the second largest in the United States. The site is planned for Federal designation in early 1991. Once designated, the site is eligible for up to $3 million in Federal acquisition and development funds.

These projects are a triumph for conservation interests in the State and across the country. But, the key to the success of this effort is the role of the landowners, who for years have been good land stewards. A primary goal of the task force is to work with these people to help them perpetuate and expand their land management programs. In some instances, key parcels of ecologically significant property are purchased by governmental agencies for long-term protection and public use. However, land acquisition constitutes only a limited portion of the total basin effort. For the most part, members of the Task Force provide technical assistance and set up management agreements whenever possible. Landowners are encouraged to protect ecologically valuable lands under conservation easements and deed restrictions. When land is placed under a conservation easement, the owners still retain title and access; however, they cannot significantly alter the habitat or develop it.

The Lane family of Charleston provides an excellent example of the cooperative efforts by landowners in the basin. Hugh Lane, Sr., Hugh Lane, Jr., and Charles Lane have been highly supportive of the project, and each has played an important role in getting other landowners to support it. All three gentlemen serve on Ducks Unlimited's ACE Basin Wetlands Advisory Committee which provides guidance and directs expenditures for Ducks Unlimited within the ACE Basin. Charles Lane is currently chairman of the committee.

On April 18 of this year, the Lane family signed a conservation easement on their 1,000-acre Willtown Plantation located on the South Edisto River. Prior to this, Hugh Lane, Sr., made substantial financial contributions to both the Nature Conservancy and Ducks Unlimited, including an initial contribution of $40,000 to get Ducks Unlimited's ACE Basin Wetlands America Fund started.

Additionally, Gaylord and Dorothy Donnelley, two of the Nation's most dedicated conservationists, donated Big, Sampson, and Warren Islands to the Nature Conservancy during 1987 and 1988, and Boulder Island to Ducks Unlimited this year. Subsequently, the Nature Conservancy has transferred the property to the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation to be included in the National Estuarine Research Reserve, and Ducks Unlimited will include its donation in the national wildlife refuge.

Last, Ted Turner, another ACE Basin landowner, has supported this effort wholeheartedly by placing his entire Hope Plantation—over 5,300 acres—under a perpetual conservation easement.

I have mentioned only three of the contributor families to the ACE Basin project, but there are numerous others who have contributed or plan to contribute their property, money and time to ensure the project's success. Believe me, they are all vitally important to this effort. Collectively, the contributions of these generous citizens and organizations have created an environmental success story in South Carolina.

In light of the recent observance of Earth Day, I wanted to share this story with my colleagues. It exemplifies what can be accomplished when individuals work together unselfishly to enhance and protect the environment. I salute all those who are working to make the ACE Basin project a success that all Americans can take pride in.●

NEW APPROACH TO UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD CAMBODIA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask to insert in the RECORD at this point a statement by Senator Edmund Muskie to the Subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific Affairs of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, as well as a column written by Mary McGory about his testimony.

Our former colleague's statement strikes me as making a great deal of sense, and I would urge those in the executive department to examine it carefully. For reasons which I cannot fathom, we seem to be captive to China's foreign policy whims and aims.

Following the Chinese leadership on Cambodia is, inevitably, going to lead us in the wrong direction.

I urge my colleagues to read the Muskie statement carefully. I would also urge my friends at the State Department and in the White House, who normally do not follow the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD very closely, to read this statement.

The material follows:

TESTIMONY OF HON. EDMUND S. MUSKIE, CHAIRMAN, CENTER FOR NATIONAL POLICY, TO THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON EAST ASIAN AND PACIFIC AFFAIRS, FEBRUARY 28, 1990

(Report on a trip to Southeast Asia, and recommendations for a new approach to U.S. policy toward Cambodia)

I would like to summarize briefly today the findings and recommendations of a trip to Southeast Asia that I made on behalf of the Center for National Policy, of which I am chairman. We have prepared a long written report that includes extensive excerpts from key meetings, that I would be glad to submit for the record, should that be desirable.

My intention today is to give the main points, and to take any questions Members of the Committee might have.

For 15 years, from 1975 to 1989, as you Senators know, Cambodia was a nation largely outside of the consciousness of the American public. Senators Baucus, Danforth and Sasser went there; Senator Robb has recently been there, exhibiting great determination; Congressman Steve Solarz went briefly.

Basically, though, the history of American involvement in Cambodia prior to 1975, the story of what happened in Cambodia during the Khmer Rouge reign of terror between 1975 and 1979, and the facts of the 1979 Vietnamese invasion and 10-year occupation, were outside public focus in the United States.

As we know, all of this began to change with the release of the film, "The Killing Fields," detailing the atrocities committed by the Khmer Rouge, and with the plans of Vietnam to get ready to pull out. There began to be more press attention to the issue of Cambodia, and efforts were taken here in the Congress, and by the Administration, to step up aid to the non-communist resistance guerrillas fighting the Phnom Penh government.

The Jakarta Informal Meetings, bringing together Prince Norodom Sihanouk and the current Prime Minister, Hun Sen, were, I believe, considered positive, and a form of progress, by all of us.

Last year, of course, when the international conference on Cambodia convened in Paris, many of us were very hopeful. But Sihanouk's commitment to the Khmer Rouge became an insurmountable difficulty, standing in the way of a political settlement. U.S. policy sided with Sihanouk, and with China. Phnom Pehn and Vietnam said "no" to the Khmer Rouge, as you know, and all of our hopes for a settlement dimmed, as the conference broke up.

Prior to the Paris conference, with the Vietnamese pull-out that U.S. policy has long demanded on the horizon, it has seemed to me that the time might be approaching when the United States might be able to take on a new posture toward Indochina—positive and constructive—and begin to play a more active and leading role in the development of Southeast Asia.

The failure of the Paris conference was not a hopeful sign, however. It seemed that U.S. policy had only two choices at that point: to go along with Sihanouk's demand that the Khmer Rouge be imposed on Cambodia as the price of a political settlement, on the one hand, or to continue to support Sihanouk and his forces in a guerrilla war in coalition with Khmer Rouge, on the other.

It seemed to me that for all of us—whether members of the public, the press, members of Congress or U.S. government officials, the most difficult problem in knowing what to think or do about Cambodia remained: a lack of concrete, first-hand information.

Clearly, it was necessary to consider a new approach, if any progress were to be made. I therefore agreed to travel to Cambodia in my capacity as chairman of the Center for National Policy. It was my intention to observe firsthand the conditions there, and to develop a direct assessment of the effects, the consequences of present U.S. policy.

I asked Senator Robb to travel with me on the trip, and he made every effort to do so, for which I was most grateful. I regretted that we could not take this trip together, but I saw that he was very determined to find a way to see Cambodia, and I felt that he would eventually succeed, which he has clearly now done. I assume that he felt, as I did, that the time was much too short, but even a short time is better than nothing.

My own questions, as I prepared for this trip, were these: what is the reality of the situation in Cambodia today? What are Vietnam's objectives, and are they consistent or inconsistent with U.S. interests? What about Cambodia's neighbor, Thailand, an important U.S. ally? Is China right or wrong in its commitment to the Khmer Rouge?

Can peace be brought to Cambodia? Is genuine self-determination a possibility?

I was in the region for about two weeks, in Cambodia itself for almost a week. I traveled overland from Ho Chi Minh City to get to Phnom Penh, and I was able to spend a day at Angkor Wat. I talked with heads-of-state, with soldiers, with civilians, with government officials, and with representatives of non-governmental organizations. I spent a good deal of time with officials of the American government, both here in Washington and in Bangkok, discussing Cambodia prior to my trip there, and afterwards.

I had not been in Cambodia since 1965. I tell you frankly that I was shocked at what I saw this time. This country was, clearly, devastated by the Khmer Rouge. They not only killed large numbers of people; they also destroyed the infrastructure and the economic and social fabric of the nation.

There has been a visible rebuilding. It's modest, but it is real. It occurred in large part while the Vietnamese were still there. The Cambodians would be irrational if they had not preferred the results of the Vietnamese invasion to what had gone before.

The indigenous Cambodian government is not one that should be impossible for the United States to interact with. It is not beyond the pale as a matter of international comparison. It is communist, but not rabidly ideological.

It is in the process of making efforts to liberalize.

From the conversations I had and from my own observations, I have concluded that a fundamental redirection of U.S. policy must take place, if we are not to contribute to a return of tragedy to this nation.

This report describes the development of the trip and provides both direct excerpts and overall summaries of key meetings. The material speaks for itself, generally, but a few points should also be stressed.

First: as noted, the government of Cambodia in the fall of 1989 was a communist government in form, but it also included many non-communists, from earlier regimes. It did not appear monolithic; it did demonstrate pragmatism.

Second: from my observations not only of the government and its administration of Cambodian society, but also from what I saw of the searing evidence of the devastation of the Khmer Rouge period, and what I learned about the dominance of the Khmer Rouge in the resistance coalition, it became clear that the central question for U.S. policy had to be, simply, this: why should we insist on dismantling the existing government prior to elections, and thereby risk the return of chaos?

Under the circumstances, this appears to be the critical choice, if we really hope to move Cambodia toward a better future, in which the stability required for genuine and lasting self-determination can be maintained.

I think it is important, in bringing perspective to this point, to look at what is different in relation to Cambodia today, as compared with the period during which I was Secretary of State.

Starting with the most basic fact, from the perspective of the United States, our relations with the Soviet Union are entirely different, because the Soviet Union is different. Yes, we both still have massive nuclear arsenals, bigger and more dangerous now than they were then. But, quite obviously, the international political "expansionism" of the Soviet Union is a thing of the past—absolutely for now, if not irrevocably forever (something that we cannot know at this point).

It is patently obvious that the Soviet Union would like to reduce its commitment to Vietnam, not increase it.

So that's an important change fromn 1979 and 1980.

Second, in Vietnam itself, it is obvious that economic development is the preoccupation, not military adventures. Just as the rest of the region, Vietnam is trying to grow. It has not been as successful, but that is in part because of our embargo on aid.

So that's the second change.

Third is the change in Cambodia itself. It is not a country run by Vietnam; it's run by Cambodians. Again, I encourage everyone to go see for him or herself. You may not like the government, but it is definitely Cambodian.

There has never yet been a Cambodian government elected in a genuinely democratic election, and this government is no exception. But I emphasize that it is not an exception. Sihanouk inherited his power from the French, and Lon Nol inherited his from the force of arms. Hun Sen inherited his from the Vietnamese. He appears to have used it to benefit the country as much as to benefit a specific regime.

I would encourage all who are interested in him to read the report of our meeting in this document. It's long, eighteen pages, and I think quite interesting and instructive.

Finally, of course, there is the issue of China.

And here is where the U.S. confronts a dilemma that we have not yet faced up to: as long as we continue to support China's wish to bring back the Khmer Rouge, we are on the wrong side in Cambodia.

Historically, the two forces in the region that have been perceived as seriously threatening, to their neighbors and each other, have been Vietnam and China.

Other countries in the region, especially Thailand, have long seen a need to balance between the two.

It is clear to me that Vietnam is ready for peace, for improved relations in the region; ready to reduce hostility with China.

China's objectives are less clear. There was some sign while I was in the region last fall that China might be moving to deal more with the Cambodian government, and with the Vietnamese. But on the crucial issue of the Khmer Rouge, they have not yet shown any real sign of flexibility as far as one can tell.

Again, let me stress that there is nothing to be said for bringing back the Khmer Rouge. Phnom Penh has been intransigent on this point; so has Hanoi. In this they are right and we should support them, not oppose them. This does seem like strange bedfellows.

But, it is not nearly as strange as U.S. support for a coalition that includes the Khmer Rouge.

Now let me briefly say a word on the recent Big Five meeting in Paris. Some signs are positive:

The goal is said to be self-determination through free, fair and democratic elections.

A U. N. role was stressed.

Diplomatic efforts were welcomed.

Withdrawal should be verified.

But, there were problems with Paris:

First, nothing was said about genocide, and this as you recall was one of the points at issue last summer in the international conference.

Second, there are a number of ambiguities in the recent Paris declaration that might be positive or negative, depending on what they are taken to mean. For example, the statement that "elections must be conducted in a neutral political environment in which no party would be advantaged" could imply a simple and desirable criterion for fair elections, or, it could be intended to imply that "advantages" gained by current government by virtue of legitimately earned political support must be eliminated—a little like insisting that there must be no advantage whatsoever to incumbancy.

There must be a concern with this process as it goes foward, to ensure that we are working toward the right objective: genuine self-determination, in conditions that will truly permit it.

Look at what it took in Namibia. I was there for the election last November, at the request of the White House; I saw it firsthand.

As you know, in Namibia the existing government remained in place; the U. N. saw to controlling the ceasefire, monitoring the electoral process, and the process of making the transition to a new government, after elections.

In Cambodia, at least as much as in Namibia, history requires that stability be maintained. The country is still fragile, but it functions.

It would be a tragedy to dismantle the present administrative structure; it has taken ten years to put it together. No one who looks at Cambodia, who has any judgement, any experience, could seriously suggest such a thing as being constructive, or even practical.

If the U.N. seat issue can be resolved, so that the U.N. is truly neutral, and not associated with the Khmer Rouge, then it seems likely that some kind of Namibia-like model can indeed work for Cambodia, but it is extremely important how the details of the U.N. idea are filled in.

These are my thoughts. But, really I would ask only two things of U.S. policymakers:

One, go to Cambodia; take an honest look; we have favored the other side for many years; let's be true to ourselves and look at both sides; (point about "tilting").

Two, it is time to send China a message, plain and clear: the U.S. wants good relations with China, but if China values U.S. good opinion, as we assume China does, then China can do this for the United States: say "yes" to elections in Cambodia, and be satisfied with that.

Let's have a ceasefire in Cambodia.

Let's stop the arms shipments.

Let's have elections.

Let's stop talking about power-sharing in advance of elections.

Let's have a new U.S. policy;

We will talk to both sides.

We will denounce the genocide that occurred at the hands of the Khmer Rouge, in clear and simple terms.

We will send a clear message to China: elections, yes; destabilizing the country, no.

Thank you very much for giving me this opportunity to appear before you today.

A Battered Child of a Country

It's decade since he held public office, but Edmund S. Muskie could be at the point of performing the greatest public service of his career.

The former secretary of state, former senator from Maine, former vice presidential nominee and would-be president is attempting to rescue Cambodia from the clutches of the Khmer Rouge and to end the Vietnam War once and for all.

In 1968, Muskie was a casualty of President Lyndon B. Johnson's Vietman policy, He and Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey lost to Richard M. Nixon, who came in as the "peace" candidate—and kept the United States in the war for another 4½ years. Muskie doesn't want Cambodia to pay, again, for our mistakes. As chairman of the Center for National Policy, Muskie visited Cambodia and Vietnam and came back declaring our policy toward both is sick.

Muckie, long considered cautious, has boldly come out for recognition of Vietnam and talks with the communist Hun Sen regime in Phnom Penh. The Bush administration is adamantly opposed. But Muskie says it's time to move on.

He knows there is not much of a constituency on either point: Vietnam is still a painful subject, and a string of movies showing its ghastliness and futility keep a low-level resentment going. Recognition still makes lawmakers nervous. When asked about it, Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell (D-Maine), Muskie's protege, turned coy and refused to comment.

As for Cambodia, a handful of House members, mainly Chet Atkins (D-Mass.), keep pleading for justice and humanity. But while Congress clapped its hands sore when Vaclav Harvel urged on them moral action, nobody seems willing to take any risk for doing the right thing in this battered child or a country.

To the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Muskie gave the best reason for caring about all these "Old unhappy, far-off things and battles long ago":

"We have intervened in that area of the world for the last 30 years. . . . We changed the history and the lives of that area of the world." He could have added, "and our own."

The backbone of our policy on Cambodia, braided into our policy on Vietnam, he suggested, is bitterness.

Only one Republican attended the hearing. Sen. Frank H. Murkowski (Alaska) did not come to defend the administration. "I never quite understood the logic of our position," he said.

Muskie finds the policy not just indefensible but incoherent. On the one hand, he points out, we say we abhor the Khmer Rogue, the marauders who murdered as many as 2 million Cambodians before the Vietnamese invaders topped them; on the other, we support Prince Sihanouk, China's pet, who hysterically insists on inclusion of the Khmer Rouge in any resolution.

It was our position for the last 10 years that nothing, including the Khmer Rouge holocaust, was as bad as the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia. Withdrawal of troops was the first demand on a list of four that we drew up when the economically prostrate Vietnamese humbly sued for recognition.

Last September, they began to evacuate their troops. Although the retreat was accepted by the rest of the world, we whined about verification—while doing nothing about it. In recent days, to thicken the always-poisonous air, stories appeared about Vietnamese troops being called back by Hun Sen when his men were being clobbered by the Khmer Rouge.

The Vietnamese have been certified as "cooperative" on the excruciating question of the MIAs and POWs by John W. Vessey Jr., former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Vessey says that "the Vietnamese say we keep raising the high bar."

Two chilly State Department types followed Muskie to the witness stand and talked about the United Nations—which has been suggested as an agent for running the country while an election is organized—functioning "horizontally and vertically" in Cambodia, about "structuring a framework for peace." These are words used by people who don't really want anything to happen.

The sticking point between us and Vietnam, they indicated, is that we insist on Vietnam backing our loathsome policy of sponsoring the Khmer Rouge in a four-part interim government, which Foggy Botton inexplicably calls "a comprehensive settlement."

"We have allowed ourselves to become the prisoners of Prince Sihanouk and China," said Sen. John F. Kerry (D-Mass.).

Muskie displayed a welcome truculence toward China, which President Bush thinks he understands better than anyone else in the world.

"They have got to begin to listen to other parties involved," said Muskie, the erstwhile conformist who seems to be enjoying his new role as outside agitator.●

PRESIDENT NIXON'S "SHOULD WE HELP GORBACHEV" PIECE

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would ask that the following statement by former President Richard Nixon be inserted in the RECORD. I believe that the article presents an accurate and timely assessment of the situation the United States faces vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

While Mr. Gorbachev has changed dramatically the way we in the West view the Soviet Union, he has, in fact, done very little to change the domestic and foreign policies that have characterized his country for so many years. In the euphoria over Mr. Gorbachev and his new thinking, I think we have chosen to overlook a few old facts that remain unchanged today. First and foremost, Mr. Gorbachev is Communist. He would not be General Secretary of the Communist Party if he were not. Moreover, Mr. Gorbachev is a Russian nationalist with ambitions for his country not unlike those the Russian czars had for centuries before—we see clear evidence of this in Afghanistan and Angola. Finally, Mr. Gorbachev is a brilliant politician who has taken every opportunity to increase his hold on power and policy.

President Gorbachev has a huge task ahead. I must commend his willingness even to approach the challenge. But I do not believe that the United States should fall into the dangerous habit of propping up Gorbachev at any price—we are seeing the beginnings of that now in Lithuania. If Gorbachev is not willing to make the most fundamental economic reforms, reforms which would facilitate private property ownership and free enterprise, all the dollars in America will do nothing but prolong the economic crisis awaiting the Soviet Union. As President Nixon so concisely states, we should only help Mr. Gorbachev if "his reforms go far enough to have a chance to succeed and if as a result the Soviet Union becomes less oppressive at home and less aggressive abroad."

The statement follows:

[From the American Spectator, March 1990]

RICHARD NIXON: "SHOULD WE HELP GORBACHEV?", NOT IF YOU TAKE HISTORY SERIOUSLY

(Last December 4, former President Richard Nixon dictated a long analysis of East-West relations, and, in keeping with his standard practice, distributed copies to a close circle of friends. Portions have been reprinted elsewhere, but The American Spectator thought readers might be interested in seeing in a complete form what was on RN's mind a few weeks before the appearance of the much noted article in Daedalus by Mr. Z.—Ed.)

Before the Malta conference, Secretary Baker said that "this is the first Administration since the war which has been more concerned with the consequences of Communism's demise than with the threat of Communism."

A liberal magazine recently editorialized that we should help Gorbachev because of our interest in assuring the "success of an economically and politically liberal regime without any apparent expansionist ambition."

Time magazine has declared that Gorbachev wants to "transform the Soviet Union into a more democratic society."

The headline over a recent lead editorial in the New York Times proclaimed, "The Cold War Is Over." After Malta, President Bush took issue with that statement. He was right to do so. But as the "Spirit of Malta" washes over the West, he may soon find that he is a very lonely member of a virtually silent minority.

On all sides we hear that Western ideas have won and that Communism has been defeated. And yet a Communist, Gorbachev, is the most popular man in Europe. He is equal to Bush in popularity in the United States. Among American intellectuals—those with post-graduate training 85 percent view Gorbachev favorably as against 65 percent for Bush.

Before going along with the conventional Beltway wisdom, let us take a closer look at this exciting new superstar on the world scene. This we know:

He is a Communist. He wouldn't be General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union if he weren't.

He is a proud Russian nationalist, with goals and ambitions for his country such as Russian leaders have had for centuries before Lenin.

He is a brilliant, pragmatic political leader who likes power, knows how to use it, and wants to keep it.

Let us examine what he has done. His political reforms have been an enormous public relations success abroad. They have also produced a less oppressive life for many in the Soviet Union. They are totally inadequate compared to a free, democratic society. But compared to what the Soviets had before, they are breathtaking. Where there was no freedom to criticize, there is now some. Where there was no freedom of press, there is now some. Where there was no freedom to emigrate, there is now some. Where there were no free elections, there are now some.

But keeping this last issue in context, while some Communist officials lost their positions in recent elections, Gorbachev strengthened his. He is the most powerful Soviet leader since Stalin during World War II, Stalin's foreign minister, Mololov, once told an American who was urging him to support the concept of free elections, "I like the idea of free elections. There is only one thing wrong with them. You don't know in advance how they come out." Gorbachev did not have this problem. He knew in advance how the elections would come out as far as any effect on his power was concerned.

Any objective observer must agree that glasnost, Gorbachev's political reforms, has produced less repression for his people at home and enormous popularity for him abroad. But his economic reforms, perestroika, have been a failure in every respect. The rhetoric has been impressive—joint ventures, cooperatives, private businesses, decentralized controls, and even some kind words about free markets. The results have been virtually nil. For example, in the ten years of Deng Xiaoping's economic reforms, the per capita income of the Chinese people has doubled; in the five years of Gorbachev's rule, including three in which perestroika was in effect, the per capital income of the Russian people went down.

Gorbachev's foreign policy has been a brilliant public relations success, particularly in the West. He withdrew the Red Army from Afghanistan and played a role in getting Vietnamese troops out of Cambodia and Cuban troops out of Angola. He announced unilateral cuts in his defense budget and reductions in his Warsaw Pact forces. Most important, he has repudiated the Brezhnev doctrine and has even been credited by some for the repudiation of Communism by the people of Poland, East Germany, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia.

For these reasons, Gorbachev's critics and friends alike agree that he is the most exciting leader in Soviet history. While he has only marginally changed the Soviet Union, he has profoundly changed the world.

But what does he really believe? For one thing, he has adopted a tolerant attitude toward religion, as did Stalin during World War II. Unlike Stalin, however, he meets the influence and power of the Pope cannot be measured by the number of military divisions he has. Gorbachev often speaks of God, as did Brezhnev, and he likes to say that his mother had an icon over her bed. All this is interesting, but it does not make him a closet Christian, just as his economic reforms do not make him a capitalist and his political reforms do not make him a democrat. In these areas, as is his initiative with the Pope, he has shrewdly said what many in the West want to hear. But it remains to be seen whether his policies will produce what responsible leaders in the West want to see—a truly freer, benign Soviet Union.

Rather than just applauding what he has done, let us examine why. When Gorbachev came to power five years ago, he found he was presiding over a military superpower and a Third World economic power. Everywhere he looked he saw Communism in crisis. All the Soviets' Third World conquests were enormously expensive losers, costing them $12 billion a year in foreign aid. Cuba, Vietnam, Ethiopia, Angola, and Nicaragua all required huge subsidies to avoid bankruptcy. Afghanistan was costing lives as well as money.

In Eastern Europe any observer could see that the explosive forces of dissent were just beneath the surface. Communism policies had produced stagnation rather than progress, and because of the massive advances in communication, the people of Eastern Europe knew it.

At home Gorbachev saw that the Soviet economy, plagued with corruption, drunkenness, inefficiency, and shortages, was falling further and further behind the West. He saw that Deng's economic reforms had produced a better life for the Chinese people. He found that all the major industrial nations of the world were aligned against him. He saw that his major potential adversary, the United States, finally recovering from the malaise of the late seventies and the recession of the early eighties, had a booming economy, a strong foreign policy, and a new defense initiative. SDI, that would cost the Soviet Union billions of dollars it didn't have just to keep up.

Gorbachev is a Communist, but he is not a fool. He is a leader of great courage and vision who is not afraid to make the bold play. He knew he had no choice but to reform at home and retrench abroad. Otherwise the Soviet economy would collapse and Marxism-Leninism would suffer total defeat.

And yet for two years, he temporized. He continued the policy of his mentor, Yuri Andropev, of trying to get a bad system to work better by eliminating drunkenness, corruption, and inefficiency. All this produced was longer lines for vodka and acute shortages of everything else.

Three years ago he adopted bolder political and economic reforms. His purpose was not to abandon Communism but to save it. His economic reforms have failed, but his political reforms dramatically improved his image abroad, strengthened his political powers at home, and earned him the support of an energized Soviet intellectual class.

Even more important, Gorbachev has become the darling of Western intellectuals and pundits as well. He is so different from the old caricature of the sour, humorless Communist that many naively rush to the other extreme and gush that he is "just like us."

As a master of the PR game, he knows how to project the image that we want to see. In a revealing moment, a leading American television commentator said on the last day of the Malta meetings that Gorbachev understood the kind of relationship President Bush wanted to have with him—good-natured, informal, jocular—and had delivered exactly that during meetings. To continue the reporter's analysis, which was right on target, if Jesse Helms had been elected President last year and had been dragged kicking and screaming to summit meeting, Gorbachev would probably have tried to win him over by talking about the evils of abortion and pornography.

That does not mean, to use a phrase that has become almost meaningless, that he isn't "for real." It does mean that, as we would with any other master politician, we should look at his deeds as well as his words, the substance as well as the style. And one area where his words and deeds diverge dramatically is the one that is the most critical for American policy-makers: Soviet military power.

The defense cuts Gorbachev has announced have had a dramatic effect abroad in reducing Western fear of the threat of Communism. Secretary Gorbachev has stated that the Soviet military threat is less than at any time in the past fifteen years.

While Gorbachev's deteriorating economy may soon finally force him to cut back, he still spends 20 percent of Soviet GNP on defense, compared with six percent in the United States. In the five years Gorbachev has been in power, all three legs of the Soviet strategic nuclear triad—land, sea, and air—have been modernized. Soviet superiority in tanks, chemical weapons, and combat aircraft has been maintained and in some cases increased. Total Soviet military spending under Gorbachev has increased three percent every year he has been in office. In that same five-year period, U.S. defense spending has gone down by 11 percent.

What Cheney undoubtedly meant by his statement was that the likelihood that the Soviets' vast military power would be used against the West had diminished because of events in Eastern Europe. Whether or not that is true, there is still no question but that the Soviet Union's military might is greater now than when Gorbachev came to power. Even if he has been sounding to some hopeful ears like a dove, his bristling talons still make him look like a hawk.

The same is true of his foreign policy. Gorbachev has received kudos for withdrawing the Red Army from Afghanistan. But he was getting rid of a loser, and he still supplies his puppet government in Kabul with huge shipments of arms. His clients in Cambodia and Angola are still in power. He provides arms to North Korea and Libya, two notoriously aggressive nations that threaten their neighbors and export terrorism all over the world. He also provides arms to Cuba, which in turn are shipped to Communist rebels in El Salvador after being laundered in Nicaragua. CIA Director Webster has responded that Soviet intelligence activity is increasing under Gorbachev.

Eastern Europe is where we have seen the most spectacular developments. Many say he inspired what happened there. Some say he even encouraged it. Most ignore that it was Western ideals, combined with the failure of Communist ideals he still upholds and opposition to Soviet domination he represents, which brought millions into the streets in Poland, East Germany, Prague, and Budapast.

Gorbachev had two choices in Eastern Europe. He could have repressed the demonstrations by implementing the Brezhnev doctine. Or he could take credit for developments he could not contain. That he made the smart play and acted in his national interest does not qualify him for sainthood any more than Lenin's separate peace with the Germans during World War I meant that he liked the Kaiser.

The military option was not acceptable because it might not have worked. Even more important, Gorbachev had bigger targets than Eastern Europe—Western Europe and the United States. To do what was necessary to keep unpopular puppets in power in Eastern Europe, he would have had to abandon his enormously successful efforts to seduce Western Europe and the United States. A chance to psychologically disarm his potential adversaries in the West was worth losing his absolute control of Eastern Europe. And at the same time, these countries at least temporarily remain in the Warsaw Pact, and Gorbachev can let the West help foot the bill to keep their failed economies afloat.

Regardless of what he says publicly, Gorbachev cannot be pleased by what is happening in Eastern Europe. His predecessors would not have permitted it. He is not in a position to be able to try to stop it and still accomplish his broader goals. What we are seeing under Gorbachev is a profound shift in Soviet priorities. For seventy years Soviet foreign policy drove domestic policy. Domestic policy drives foreign policy. Foreign policy serves domestic policy.

The Soviet economic crisis is so great that foreign and defense policies must be managed in a way that will help resolve it. Whether it is defense, arms control, Eastern Europe, or the Third World, Gorbachev's first priority is to do everything he can to help the Soviet economy. By disarming the West psychologically, he removes fear, the glue that holds the Western alliance together and that provides the rationale for adequate defense budgets in the West. By projecting a benign image abroad, he increases his ability to get the credits, aid, and technology he needs to receive his sick economy. And there is a chance he may have his cake and eat it too if the West fails to see what he is doing and to make him pay a price for it.

This brings us to the central question in American foreign policy today: Should we help Gorbachev? If so, how?

The conventional wisdom is that we should help him. A leading East-West analyst concluded bluntly, "We should help those in the Soviet Union who are doing the right thing." But again, we must ask ourselves whether Gorbachev really is doing the right thing from our point of view. Is he a convert to Western ideas of political pluralism, individual rights, and free market economy? Whoever believes that will believe that Santa Claus is bringing my grandchildren the $150 Nintendo sets I am buying them for Christmas.

Gorbachev is making a vitue out of necessity. He has changed, but it is a change of the head, not the heart. At a time when he is using his head, we should not lose ours. In providing help for Gorbachev we should adhere to a fundamental principle. If his ultimate goal is to make life better for the Soviet people, we should help him. But we should not help him if his ultimate goal is to make life more difficult for the West by using Western subsidies to build a more formidable, more dangerous Soviet Union.

First, his economic reforms will not work unless they are radically expanded. Bailing out the Soviet economy as it exists now does Gorbachev no favor, just as a banker does no favor to a borrower by making him a bad loan. Massive Western aid now simply permits the Soviets to postpone making the tough decision to adopt reforms that will work. As Andrei Sakharov put it, "In the absence of radical reforms in the Soviet system, credits and technological aid will only prop up an ailing system and delay the advent of democracy."

What would be radical enough? Only measures the West takes for granted but that could destory Gorbachev as swiftly as a raging virus—lifting price controls, encouraging more entrepreneurism, decentralizing economic decision-making. His dilemma is that if his reforms go far enough to work, they would threaten the authority of all those, such as Gorbachev himself, who depend on the Communist party and the central government for their power.

Even if the reforms go far enough to work, it is not in our interest to help Gorbachev unless his foreign policy becomes less aggressive. Even as he issues calls for new thinking in foreign affairs, Soviet power is being applied against American interests in old wars in Afghanistan and El Salvador and for propping up anti-American regimes in Cuba, Nicaragua, North Korea, and Libya.

We can help Gorbachev only if the Soviet Union becomes less repressive at home and less aggressive abroad. For example, President Bush is right to support waiving the Jackson-Vanik provisions on providing Most Favored Nation treatment for Soviet products if the Soviet Union adopts new liberal immigration laws. On the other hand, we should not provide credits for food and consumer goods for the purpose of financing perestroika. The Soviet Union can pay for perestroika itself by cutting its budgets for defense and foreign adventure.

Today Japan is the second most powerful economy in the world in part because for a quarter century the United States relieved it from the responsibility for significant defense spending. We should do no such favor for the Soviet Union. If we subsidize the Soviet economy while it continues to expand and modernize its military machine, the result could be a Soviet Union that is stronger both economically and militarily than when Gorbachev found it and that threatens us more.

Gorbachev must understand that Central America is a neuralgic issue for the United States. Sending arms to an anti-U.S. government in the Western Hemisphere is unacceptable. The idea that Gorbachev is unaware that arms he provides for Cuba are delivered to Nicaragua and then to rebels in El Salvador is ludicrous. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan destroyed any chance for the Senate to approve SALT II. The continued use of Soviet arms by Communist rebels trying to overthrow the pro-U.S. government of El Salvador could destroy the chances for approval of a START treaty.

We should apply different standards in considering what aid to provide to new non-Communist governments in Eastern Europe. Even if we are not sure the reforms will work, we should gamble that these peoples' energy and creativity, suppressed for nearly a half-century, will be enough to finish the peaceful revolution they have begun. The euphoria of recent weeks aside, it is by no means a sure thing. As Gorbachev has learned, giving people the right to vote and choose their leaders is far easier than getting a stagnant economy to move again. Governing a democracy is far more difficult than governing a totalitarian system. Those who make revolution are seldom the best qualified to run a government.

Talk about a "Marshall Plan" for Eastern Europe trivializes a complex question. The nations of Western Europe suffered enormous physical damage in World War II, but they still had governmental and economic structures that enabled them to use the aid they received effectively. In Poland, East Germany, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, the opposition forces generally do not yet have that capability. But we must nevertheless be generous with our aid, because we must do everything necessary to see that their efforts to rid themselves of Communist rule do not fail. What they need, in addition to credits in the short term, is expert advice on how to run an economy and how to govern a democracy. The Communists have lost the ideological battle. But the West has not yet won it. The ideals of freedom and free markets when they are celebrated but not implemented are meaningless.

Before going overboard and giving Gorbachev the aid he desperately needs for his terminally ill economy, we should not lose our historical perspective.

Let me quote from an editorial in the New York Times: "One week ago Russia came of age. She allowed her people all the fun and trappings of a real election—provoked not publicly by show of hands but in private in red curtained booths behind closed doors." Most people would assume that that editorial had been written about Gorbachev's Russia in 1989. In fact, it was written about Stalin's Russia in the 1930s. Gorbachev is not a Stalinist, but he is also not a Jeffersonian democrat. I am simply suggesting that we should examine his motives just as coldly as he is examining ours.

I do not question Gorbachev's sincerity. He is profoundly sincere in wanting to rescue the Soviet system from a terminal illness. He has been bold and courageous in adopting policies at home and abroad that serve that purpose. We should help Gorbachev . . . but only if his reforms go far enough to have a chance to succeed and if as a result the Soviet Union becomes less oppressive at home and less aggressive abroad.●

AUGUST WILSON RECEIVES HIS SECOND PULITZER PRIZE FOR DRAMA FOR HIS PLAY, "THE PIANO LESSON"

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to August Wilson, who on April 12, 1990, won his second Pulitzer Prize in 4 years for his play "The Piano Lesson." Mr. Wilson, the winner of the Drama Prize, had previously won the Pulitzer Prize for Drama in 1987 for his play "Fences."

"The Piano Lesson" is the fourth play in a Wilson cycle about black American life in different decades during the 20th century. The play is set in the 1930's and, as in so many of his plays, the locale is in his—and my—native Pittsburgh, where he lived until he was 33. "The Piano Lesson," which deals with a brother and sister at loggerheads over what to do with the ancestral piano they jointly own, has won Wilson worldwide critical recognition of his artistry and revelatory power, and has established him as one of this Nation's leading playwrights.

The cycle started with "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom," which met with tremendous success in 1985, when it received a Tony Award nomination and won the New York Critics' Circle Award for Best Play of 1985. "Ma Rainey's" success inspired Wilson, a black man, to continue with a series of plays on the black experience in America. Wilson's commitment to telling the story of the black American continued with "Fences" (1987), which won him his first Pulitzer Prize and a Tony, "Joe Turner's Come and Gone" (1988), and "The Piano Lesson" (1989).

In each of these plays, Wilson benefited from the expertise and insights of his director, Lloyd Richards, artistic director of the Yale Repertory Theater and a founder of the Eugene O'Neill Playwrights Conference in Connecticut, where he first became acquainted with Wilson's work. Wilson, 44, who began his career as a poet and a short-story writer, came to play writing late and largely self-taught, submitted five scripts to the O'Neill Conference before "Ma Rainey" was accepted by Richards. Since, Richards has championed Wilson's work and been a mentor and friend for the better part of a decade.

Henry James once observed that the power of truth in art is directly related to the amount of felt life concerned in producing it. This observation is certainly appropriate to August Wilson's work which has a revelatory power proportional to the passions and daily trials that he experienced growing up and living in 20th-century America. This artistry is found in a unique ability to bring his felt life to bear in powerful truth to a diverse audience.

Mr. President, for a man to receive one Pulitzer Prize in his lifetime is a tremendous feat. The fact that August Wilson has won two Pulitzer Prizes is a testament to this man's unique genius. I am pleased to recognize August Wilson for this very auspicious and inspiring achievement and ask that my distinguished colleagues join me in this salute.●

DIARIO LAS AMERICAS TO MARK 37TH YEAR

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to commend an outstanding editor and publisher from Miami, Horacio Aguirre.

Mr. Aguirre, through his professional dedication and contributions to our community, is a living symbol of one of our most cherished freedoms: The freedom of expression.

A native of Nicaragua, Mr. Aguirre came to Miami with a dream. On July 4, 1953, he founded Diario Las Americas newspaper. Today, Diario Las Americas is one of the largest Spanish-language newspapers in the country and a success by any measure. As our Nation celebrates its birthday this Fourth of July, Diario Las Americas will celebrate its 37th year. Mr. Aguirre personifies the American dream. He had an idea, he took a risk, he worked hard and he succeeded.

The Aguirre success story is also a salute to time-honored family traditions, because his son is fully involved as a manager of the newspaper. There are many ways children honor their parents, but carrying on the family business is among the highest honors. Mr. President, Horacio Aguirre is more than a successful publisher and proud father. He also is actively involved in the Greater Miami community.

Mr. Aguirre has been a leader in the business community, an adviser to local universities and decorated by the church. On May 1, 1990, the Florida Senate in Tallahassee will honor Mr. Aguirre with a resolution expressing admiration and respect. I am proud to add my voice to the chorus of praise for this man who has made our community a better place to live.●

FORMER SENATOR JAMES L. BUCKLEY ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL TERM LIMITATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I would like to share a letter I have recently received from Judge James L. Buckley, a former U.S. Senator from New York. Judge Buckley endorses term limitation because it will help restore Congress to a body of citizen legislators.

Thomas Jefferson once remarked, "the principles of our Constitution * * * are wisely opposed to all perpetuation of power, and every practice which may lead to hereditary establishments * * *." Today seats in Congress are the equivalents of personal fiefdoms, and the wisdom of Jefferson is apparent: Congress is neither adequately representing its constituency, nor adequately attacking the crucial problems we presently face.

By establishing term limitation, we will ensure a steady stream of fresh idealism and new creativity to deal with what are becoming persistent, if not permanent problems. A $3 trillion deficit is only one of the more glaring examples.

I ask that Judge Buckley's letter appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks, and I again urge all Senators to join in this fundamental reform.

The letter follows:

U.S. COURT OF APPEALS,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT,
Washington, DC, February 26, 1990.

Hon. GORDON J. HUMPHREY,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR GORDON: Had the good people of New York decided to return me to the Senate in 1976, my first order of business in 1977 would have been to introduce the equivalent of Senate Joint Resolution 235. So please count me in as an enthusiastic supporter of a measure which, in significant degree, would restore the original concept of Congress as a body of citizen, rather than professional, legislators.

May the Powers smile on your enterprise.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. BUCKLEY.

INCIDENT IN SOUTH KOREA

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, the administration and others often talk about the risks we would run if we reduced our troop presence in South Korea. I must say, I find it ironic that my proposal last year on the defense appropriations bill to reduce the U.S. troop presence by 3,000 was considered dangerous, but the recent announcement by the administration that we will reduce our troop presence by 7,000 over 3 years was deemed to be in U.S. security interests.

But as I have stated before, there are risks associated with not reducing the U.S. troop presence, and recently in Seoul we have had a dramatic illustration of that. On April 8, U.S. Department of Defense personnel were involved in an incident that quickly changed a minor incident into a continuing front-page story throughout South Korea. Incidentally, it was trumpeted in the North Korean press as well.

At 1:20 in the morning in the Itaewon District of Seoul, a U.S. civilian employee of the Defense Department was involved in a minor traffic incident with a Korean national. Very quickly about 200 angry Koreans gathered to attack the Americans. According to followup reports, U.S. military police could not get the Korean police to intervene, and so our MP's intervened themselves. The crowd then turned on the MP's.

Mr. President, I ask that a foreign broadcast information service transcript of an April 14, 1990, Seoul broadcast on the incident entitled "Scuffle Swells Into International Incident" be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

While the South Korean Government sought to downplay the incident, as seen in the attached broadcast, it is clear that U.S. military authorities took it seriously. They took the extraordinary step of placing the entire Central Itaewon District, a well-known and well-frequented commercial district in Seoul, off limits to U.S. soldiers, civilian employees, and their dependents between midnight and 5 a.m. Three weeks after the incident, the "off-limits" restriction is still in place.

This incident was not a well-planned protest demonstration for the benefit of television cameras. This was a spontaneous display of resentment at the U.S. presence. As South Korea grows in economic and political strength and self-confidence, this resentment will only grow. Keeping an oversize United States force presence in South Korea will only inflame local passions more.

I am glad the President has decided to reduce the U.S. presence by 7,000 troops by 1993. But that will still leave 36,000 troops in place, at a time when South Korea's ability to defend itself against its smaller, weaker neighbor to the north is greater than ever. Even though South Korea's GNP grew at the lowest rate in the last 9 years, it still expanded 6.7 percent in real terms. It's time for South Korea to do more in its own defense, and for the United States to reduce its troop presence on the Korean Peninsula.

The transcript follows:

SCUFFLE SWELLS INTO "INTERNATIONAL INCIDENT"

SEOUL, April 14 (OANA-YONHAP).—An awkward follow-up by U.S. Military officials, a slow Police investigation and reckless news reports have inflated a minor confrontation between a group of Koreans and U.S. servicemen into an international incident.

On April 9, the American news agency Associated Press [AP], citing U.S. military authorities, said "a midnight mob" of Koreans had inflicted minor injuries on two U.S. Military Police officers and a civilian employee at 1:20 a.m. on April 8 in the Itaewon district of Seoul. AP said the reason a large number of Koreans had turned on the Americans was under investigation.

A day later, several daily newspapers in Seoul reported that the U.S. civilian, who had by then been identified as Kenneth W. McGowan, had driven over the foot of Paek Pong-hun, who was standing in the road trying to hail a Taxi, and that the car's wing mirror had struck the four-year-old son of one of Paek's eight companions.

According to later reports in the Korean press, two U.S. Military Policemen [MP] in a patrol car arrived on the scene as the Koreans stopped McGowan's Toyota and one of the MPs struck Paek on the arm with his club while brandishing his pistol threateningly. About 200 angry Koreans gathered to attack the Americans and their cars, inflicting minor injuries the reports said.

Whether the MP drew his pistol or just touched it, the image of an ugly American soldier "brandishing" his weapon at innocent civilians caught the attention of Koreans who would never tolerate a Korean policeman drawing his weapon on U.S. civilians.

On Wednesday, the U.S. military paper Stars and Stripes took the opposite tack in its report, headlined "Americans Flee Mob in Seoul," and the United States Forces Korea (USFK) distributed to Korean press organizations its own version of the scuffle. Use of the word "mob" in describing a group of law-abiding Koreans further stimulated the Korean press, as vernacular reports proved later.

Stars and Stripes and the USFK press release elaborated on how the Koreans "began beating and kicking the vehicle, shattering windows and causing significant damage to the car's body" and why the MPs "were unable to control the sense [as received] without the use of some force to protect themselves."

Neither, however, offered a reason for the heated tempers, saying the Koreans "suddenly attacked them and their vehicle."

The military daily came out with a more detailed report on the cause of the melee on Thursday [12 April], citing a Korean investigator as saying that McGowan's car ran over Paek's foot as he tried to negotiate his way through a large crowd of pedestrians wandering in the street. But neither the U.S. nor Korean investigators would comment on reports in Seoul newspapers that the crowd turned on the MPs after one of them pulled his pistol and waved it threateningly, the report added.

As for the on-the-scene investigation on Tuesday [10 April], the paper quoted "a Korean police spokesman" as saying, "McGowan took part in the investigation and the two MPs stayed away because 'there were too many news reporters observing'." But the foreign affairs' department at Yongsan Police Station, which is in charge of the Itaewon area, flatly denied the report, saying neither McGowan nor any of the other Americans involved had shown up while all five Koreans had, so that the on-scene investigation had to be called off.

On Thursday, USFK announced that it had placed the central Itaewon area off limits to American soldiers, civilian employees and their dependents from midnight to 5 A.M. beginning on Friday [13 April] to safeguard the health and welfare of USFK personnel. "When lives are at stake, no measure is too extreme," it said.

Aggravated by the statement, over a dozen Seoul newspapers on Friday dealt with the curfew in a barrage of criticism, quoting the USFK news release. What most infuriated the Korean newspapers and rallied other so-far-silent Korean dailies to join the press furore was the claim in the statement that "in this case, the two MPs involved had acted properly."

"The incident, which was chiefly caused by differences in customs and language barriers, is a mountain made out of a mole hill seeing that the latest USFK measures included the curfew," the state-run SEOUL SINMUN said in a commentary. The daily quoted Paek and denizens of Itaewon who witnessed the clash as saying they could not understand why USFK officials, who should apologize for the incident, had placed the area off limits.

"It is deplorable that Koreans must be made to endure suffering in their own country just because they cannot communicate with foreigners in a foreign language," another morning paper editorialized.

The three U.S. military servicemen reported to Yongsan Police Station Friday as asked, but they refused to make statements except in writing and were sent back to their barracks, the foreign affairs section of the police station said.

The final decision on taking their statements is up to the prosecution, but they are expected to be booked without physical detention around April 16 and will be treated under the regulations of the Status of Forces Agreement, which denies Korean courts jurisdiction over U.S. military personnel unless the Korean Government judges it to be crucial, said a police officer who declined to be named.

In a separate but related statement issued by the National Police Headquarters on Friday, police booked 870 military and civilian members of the U.S. Armed Forces on various charges and transfered five others to U.S. authority last year, but none was put behind bars.●

YEAR OF THE LIFETIME READER

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, in my capacity as vice chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, I invite all Members of the Senate to join in cosponsoring Senate Joint Resolution 292, a joint resolution designating 1991 as "The Year of the Lifetime Reader."

I am pleased to announce that the other Senate members of the Joint Committee have agreed to cosponsor the resolution and accordingly I ask unanimous consent that Senators DECONCINI, MOYNIHAN, HATFIELD, and STEVENS be listed as original cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 292.

Literacy and reading are so essential to our national life that they must always rank high on the national agenda. In recognition of this fact, the Library of Congress has initiated the 1991—The Year of the Lifetime Reader campaign, which through local projects will promote libraries, literacy, and lifelong learning.

Senate Joint Resolution 292 calls on the President to declare 1991 as the Year of the Lifetime Reader, and encourages parents, educators, librarians, government officials, corporations, labor unions, and associations to observe the year with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities aimed at giving our citizens at every age and in every walk of life the gift, the joy, and the promise of reading. The Library of Congress is publishing a brochure containing specific suggestions for the year of the lifetime reader projects. First Lady Barbara Bush has agreed to serve as honorary chairperson of the Year of the Lifetime Reader campaign.

This campaign reinforces the hundreds of community partnerships established last year during the successful 1989—The Year of the Young Reader initiative, which also was led by the Library of Congress. Many Members of the Senate cosponsored the legislation supporting that program; now, it is my hope that they will add their names to this resolution, which extends the campaign to include projects related to adult literacy, family literacy and to the needs of blind and physically handicapped readers.

The 1991—Year of the Lifetime Reader, is a joint effort of the Center for the Book in the Library of Congress and the Library's National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. Libraries across the Nation are being encouraged to participate, including the 150 regional and local partners of the National Library Service for the Blind and physically Handicapped and the 23 State centers for the book that are affiliated with the Library's Center for the Book. This list includes Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. In no way, however, is this campaign limited to these particular States. It is a national effort that involves individuals and groups at all levels.

Many corporations and over 60 national organizations already have agreed to participate in the 1991—Year of the Lifetime Reader, effort including the American Library Association, the Association of American Publishers, the Business Council for Effective Literacy, Lions Club International, the National Alliance of Black School Educators, the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs, and Reading is Fundamental, Inc.

I urge all Members of the Senate to join us in promoting this worthy project.●

GAO REPORT ON APACHE DOES NOT TELL THE WHOLE STORY

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, last Thursday, the House Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, chaired by Representative DINGELL, held a hearing on a General Accounting Office [GAO] study on the AH-64 Apache helicopter requested by the subcommittee. The hearing was designed to grab headlines, but not to address the so-called problems with the Apache. The hearing was essentially an attack on old maintenance problems the Apache has encountered. But rather than disclose any new information at the hearing, the GAO focused on issues which the Army and the manufacturer of the aircraft, McDonnell Douglas, have worked closely together over the past year to resolve. Actually, instead of being attacked, McDonnell Douglas and the Army should be congratulated for establishing "Apache Action Teams" to address these issues.

While the GAO accountants pointed to charts and statistics detailing the Apache's performance, I believe it is equally or more important to state for the record what those closest to the Apache, the Army's commanders and pilots who have flown this aircraft, have said of its performance.

The 11 Apaches used during Operation Just Cause in Panama received justifiably high marks for their performance. Col. Gene Cole, commander of the 82d Aviation Brigade at Fort Bragg, said of the aircraft, "The Apaches performed the missions as we expected them to perform. They did exactly what we wanted. The Apache's survivability was even better than it's advertised to be." The survivability to the Apache's design was proven during Operation Just Cause. Three different Apache helicopters were hit by small arms fire 5, 13, and 23 times respectively—including hits at the rotor blades and engine. All flew safely back to base and all returned to combat within 36 hours. This validates the GAO's assessment that the Apache is a much more survivable aircraft in combat than the Army's older Cobra and Huey helicopters. I am convinced that these helicopters could not have sustained the types of attacks and brought their crews back alive in the manner of the Apache.

The Apache earned equally high praise for another recent performance. On April 2, 1990, just a few short weeks ago, Gen. Bill Tuttle, who as commander of the Army Materiel Command is responsible for acquisition of all Army equipment, sent a letter to the Secretary of the Army commending the performance of the Apache during Reforger 90, our joint-NATO exercise in Germany. He stated that, "Commanders at all levels in Europe have expressed their pleasure with aviation's performance." He goes on to say, "Especially noteworthy was the operational ready rates sustained by the AH-64 Apache units while supporting wartime optempos. The 5/6 Cavalry flew 488 hours on 272 sorties, maintaining on operational ready rate of 81 percent Fully Mission Capable and 92 percent Mission Capable."

Mr. President, there is a valid role for the GAO to play in analyzing military programs. However, I believe that in the case of the Apache, the high reviews given the aircraft by those most familiar with its operation and by those who actually fly the aircraft lead one to question the GAO's publicized conclusions. The GAO has raised valid maintenance issues involved with the Apache, but for more than 1 year these issues have been aggressively addressed by the Army and McDonnell Douglas. The Apache's high level of performance in the operation in Panama and in the NATO exercises prove that the Apache—the world's finest attack helicopter—remains a vital component of our national defense.●

TRIBUTE TO FRANK SCHRECK, JR.

● Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of an outstanding native Nevadan, Frank Schreck, Jr.

Frank Schreck grew up in Henderson, NV, where he attended Basic High School and excelled both in athletics and academics. He also was a successful entrepreneur. During the famous Las Vegas Helldorado Days, Frank bought popsicles in Henderson, transported them to parade and rodeo sites in Las Vegas, and sold them for profit. These profits were set aside for his school expenses.

When Frank graduated from high school, he received several offers to attend college on basketball scholarships. He was recruited heavily by several schools, and the University of Southern California even sent the cheerleading squad to Henderson to entice him to Los Angeles. However, his adviser and government teacher, Mike O'Callaghan, rescued him from the overzealous cheerleaders and, with the assistance of his parents, convinced him to accept a scholarship to Yale University.

After receiving his B.A. in 1965, Frank attended law school at the somewhat less conservative University of California Boalt School of Law in Berkeley. When he completed his degree in 1968, he returned to southern Nevada.

Since then, Frank has devoted considerable energy to assisting in Nevada's political process. His parents, Frank and Jo Schreck, taught him the importance of political and social responsibility at an early age, and to this day, Frank practices the lesson his parents taught him.

Frank has had many great accomplishments during his distinguished legal career. He has served as a member of the Nevada Gaming Commission, he has created one of the most prestigious law firms in Nevada, and he is one of the State's most respected attorneys. Frank Schreck is recognized throughout the world as a leading expert in gaming law, as evidenced by his position as President of the International Association of Gaming Attorneys.

In Frank's mind, however, other accomplishments seem more important. He has provided pro bono services for poor people in need of legal help. He has frequently represented minority clients who could not find an attorney willing to take up their cause.

Frank takes great pride in having represented teachers on education issues. He gives his staff time off to work on important social programs, and he gives generously to many charitable organizations. Frank Schreck is proud to be a benefactor to the St. Judes Home for Children, Catholic Community Services, City of Hope Hospital, the League of Women Voters and other programs. Quite honestly, if someone is in need, Frank doesn't know how to say no.

Currently, Frank is also serving as a member of the University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV) Law School Advisory Committee, and he is a member of the UNLV's vision project which raises scholarship money for the school. He is committed to helping the university become not only one of the best schools in the West, but in the country.

Frank met his wife, Bonnie, at Disneyland where, in her words, they began a "Mickey Mouse romance." They began dating at UNLV basketball games and remain avid fans of the UNLV program. They have two children, Sydney and Derek, and I am confident that the Schreck values of hard work, social responsibility and activism will be carried through future generations.

Mr. President, I would like to congratulate and commend Frank Schreck for his dedication and service to the people of Nevada. He has set an example of leadership for all of us to follow.●

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to Executive Session to consider the following nominations:

Calendar 724, L. Joyce Hampers, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce;

Calendar 725, Brig Gen. Arthur E. Williams, to be a member and President of the Mississippi River Commission;

Calendar 726, Thomas L. Sansonetti, to be Solicitor of the Department of the Interior;

Calendar 727, Mary M. Raether, to be a member of the National Council of Disability;

Calendar 728, Sandra S. Parrino, to be a member of the National Council of Disability;

Calendar 729, Alvis K. Waldrep, Jr., to be a member of the National Council of Disability;

Calendar 730, Anthony H. Flack, to be a member of the National Council of Disability;

Calendar 731, Peter H. Raven, to be a member of the National Science Board, National Science Foundation;

Calendar 732, Benjamin S. Shen, to be a member of the National Science Board, National Science Foundation; and Nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Public Health Service.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed, en bloc, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read, that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc, that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

L. Joyce Hampers, of Massachusetts, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION

The following-named officer for appointment to the positions indicated, under the provisions of section 2, Act of Congress, (21 Stat. 37) (33 United States Code 642):

To be a member and President of the Mississippi River Commission

Brig. Gen. Arthur E. Williams, 133-28-8513, U.S. Army.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Thomas Lawrence Sansonetti, of Wyoming, to be Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON DISABILITY

The following-named person to be a member of the National Council on Disability for the remainder of the term expiring September 17, 1991: Mary Matthews Raether, of Virginia.

The following-named person to be a member of the National Council on Disability for a term expiring September 17, 1992: Sandra Swift Parrino, of New York.

The following-named person to be a member of the National Council on Disability for a term expiring September 17, 1992: Alvis Kent Waldrep, Jr., of Texas.

Anthony Hurlbutt Flack, of Connecticut, to be a Member of the National Council on Disability for a term expiring September 17, 1991.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Peter H. Raven, of Missouri, to be a member of the National Science Board, National Science Foundation, for a term expiring May 10, 1994.

Benjamin S. Shen, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the National Science Board, National Science Foundation, for a term expiring May 10, 1994.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Public Health Service nominations beginning Gregory M. Buchalter, and ending Douglas S. Mitchell, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1990.

Public Health Service nominations beginning Richard L. Fodor, and ending Herbert L. Venable, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1990.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF THOMAS L. SANSONETTI

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on April 25, 1990, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources ordered favorably reported the nomination of Thomas L. Sansonetti to be Solicitor for the Department of the Interior by a vote of 19–0.

Mr. Sansonetti is an extremely well-qualified candidate for this position. He received his B.A. in foreign affairs, followed by his M.B.A., from the University of Virginia, and went on to earn his J.D. from Washington and Lee University. He has a broad legal background, having been in private practice in Gilletee, WY, for 7 years, and then serving for 2 years as the Associate Solicitor for Energy and Resources at the Department. For the past year, he has served as administrative assistant to Congressman CRAIG THOMAS and is therefore well aware of the issues currently before the Congress and the Department.

As a westerner, he has an understanding and appreciation of the problems which face many of the States in which the majority of our public lands are located. His experience in natural resources litigation and his firsthand knowledge of how both the executive and legislative branches of Government operate will enable him to make a smooth transition to the position of Solicitor.

I believe Mr. Sansonetti will serve the Department of the Interior very ably, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting his nomination.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

EXTENDING THE CIVIL PENALTY ASSESSMENT DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 2533, a bill to extend the Civil Penalty Assessment Demonstration Program introduced earlier today by Senator FORD and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2533) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to extend the Civil Penalty Assessment Demonstration Program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be considered as having been read the second time by title, and the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to pass S. 2533, to extend the authorization of the Federal Aviation Administration's [FAA] Civil Penalty Program, and to advance transportation in the State of Hawaii.

This bill would amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, to extend the FAA Civil Penalties Demonstration Program an additional 3 months through July 30, 1990. The program was originally authorized for 2 years, through December 31, 1989. Last fall, in the closing days of the session, we extended the program for 4 months through April 30, 1990, to allow the FAA to address significant concerns raised by industry and legal groups concerning the procedures used in the demonstration program.

The Administrative Conference of the United States reviewed the program and made some recommendations. On April 13, the U.S. Court of Appeals directed the FAA to stay actions under the program until the agency has corrected the administrative and procedural deficiencies in the program through rulemaking. On April 16, the FAA initiated action to address the court's concerns, and also implemented procedures to respond to the criticisms raised by the Administrative Conference. I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this short-term extension to keep the program alive until the FAA has had time to complete action on the technical changes, and until we have had an opportunity to review the program. Failure to act would mean the end of an important enforcement program which, though controversial in its implementation, has improved safety and security compliance in aviation.

Section 2 of the bill contains a provision to amend the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, to permit the State of Hawaii to use revenues generated by off-airport duty-free facilities for transportation-related purposes. The revenues could only be diverted if 150 percent of airport needs have been met for that specific year; the diversion applies only through December, 1994; and the amount is capped at $250,000,000. The Senate passed a bill containing these provisions on November 21, but the measure was not agreed to by the House. Since then, provisions have been added limiting Hawaii's eligibility for airport discretionary grants, and restricting potential increases in airport landing fees to the consumer price index. I understand that all affected parties have now agreed to this provision.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will join me in passing this legislation quickly to preserve important FAA programs, and to fulfill other transportation needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed as follows:

S. 2533

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) section 905(d)(4) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1475(d)(4)) is amended by striking "28 month" and inserting in lieu thereof "31-month".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective as of April 30, 1990.

SEC. 2. Section 511 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2210) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

(g) USE OF AIRPORT GENERATED REVENUES IN HAWAII.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding the limitation on the use of revenues generated by airports contained in subsection (a)(12) of this section, the State of Hawaii may use for eligible transportation projects revenues generated on the sale at off-airport locations in the State of duty-free merchandise under a contract between the State and a duty-free sales enterprise.

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—

"(A) APPLICABILITY PERIOD.—This subsection only applies to revenues generated after the date of enactment of this subsection and before December 31, 1994, on sales referred to in paragraph (1) and to amounts in the Airport Revenue Fund of the State of Hawaii which are attributable to revenues generated before the date of enactment of this subsection on such sales.

"(B) COVERAGE OF AIRPORT CAPITAL AND OPERATING COSTS.—The State of Hawaii may use under paragraph (1) revenues generated on sales referred to in paragraph (1) in a fiscal year of the State only if the amount of such revenues, when added to the amount of funds received in such year by the State for airport capital and operating costs from all other sources (including revenues generated by such airports from other sources, unrestricted cash on hand, and Federal funds made available under this Act for expenditure at such airports), exceeds 150 percent of the projected airport capital and operating costs for such year.

"(C) ANNUAL CAP.—The amount of revenues generated on sales referred to in paragraph (1) in a fiscal year of the State of Hawaii which the State may use under paragraph (1) may not exceed the amount of the excess determined under subparagraph (B) for such year.

"(D) AGGREGATE CAP.—The maximum amount of revenues which the State of Hawaii may use under paragraph (1) may not exceed $250,000,000 in the aggregate.

"(E) REDUCTION DUE TO LANDING FEE INCREASE.—If any fee levied or collected by an airport operated by the State of Hawaii for a rental charge, landing fee, or other service charge from an aircraft operator for the use of airport facilities is increased in the period beginning on the date of enactment of this subsection and ending December 31, 1994, by a percentage which is greater than the percentage change in the Consumer Price Index of All Urban Consumers for Honolulu, Hawaii, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor in such period and if, as a result of such fee increase, there is an increase in the revenues derived from such fee, the $250,000,000 limit established by subparagraph (D) shall be reduced by the amount of the projected increase in such revenues in such period less any portion of such increase which is attributable to changes in such Index in such period.

"(F) DETERMINATION OF COSTS AND PROJECTED INCREASES IN REVENUES.—The State of Hawaii shall determine capital and operating costs and revenues under subparagraph (B) and the amount of projected increases in revenues from fee increases referred to in subparagraph (E). Determinations shall be submitted by the State to the Secretary for approval. A determination shall be treated as approved by the Secretary unless the Secretary disapproves such determination on or before the 30th day after the State submits such determination to the Secretary.

"(G) ELIGIBILITY FOR DISCRETIONARY GRANTS.—The State of Hawaii shall not be eligible for a grant under section 507(c) in any fiscal year in which the State uses under paragraph (1) revenues generated on sales referred to in paragraph (1). If the State receives a grant in a fiscal year in which the State as a result of this subparagraph is not eligible to receive a grant, the State shall repay all amounts received by the State under such grant to the Secretary for deposit in the discretionary fund established under section 507(c).

"(3) PERIOD OF USE.—Revenues generated on sales referred to in paragraph (1) in the period of applicability set forth in paragraph (2)(A) may be used under paragraph (1) in any fiscal year of the State, including a fiscal year of the State beginning after December 31, 1994.

"(4) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection, the following apply:

"(A) Airport capital and operating costs.—The term 'airport capital and operating costs' means costs incurred by the State of Hawaii for operation of all airports operated by such State and costs for debt service incurred by such State in connection with capital projects for such airports, including interest and amortization of principal costs.

"(B) DUTY-FREE SALES ENTERPRISE; DUTY-FREE MERCHANDISE.—The terms 'duty-free sales enterprise' and 'duty-free merchandise' have the meaning such terms have under section 555(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1555(b)).

"(C) ELIGIBLE TRANSPORTATION PROJECT.—The term 'eligible transportation project' means a project for construction or reconstruction of a highway on a Federal-aid system which will facilitate access to an airport and which is located within 10 miles by road of such airport.

"(D) FEDERAL-AID SYSTEM; HIGHWAY.—The terms 'Federal aid system' and 'highway' have the meaning such terms have under section 101 of title 23, United States Code.".

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MEASURES INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the following calendar items be indefinitely postponed: Calendar items numbered 62, 67, 208, 31, 402, 316, 475, 386, and 425.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY FEDERAL ANNUITANTS TO HEALTH BENEFITS THROUGH DIRECT PAYMENTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar item No. 359, H.R. 1805, a bill to permit Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1805) to amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholding if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, and to make a technical correction to the life insurance program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1538

(Purpose: To amend chapter 87 of title 5, United States Code, to provide for the uniform termination of insurance on an employee's separation from service, and for other purposes)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator GLENN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], for Mr. GLENN, proposes an amendment numbered 1538.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 4, add after line 14 the following new section:

SEC. 3. UNIFORM TERMINATION OF LIFE INSURANCE COVERAGE.

Section 8706(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended in the first sentence by striking out "or 12 months after discontinuance of his pay, whichever is earlier".

On page 3, line 23, strike out "indivdual" and insert in lieu thereof "individual".

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, this amendment would make the termination of coverage under the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance Program uniform for all employees at the time of separation from service by eliminating the provision for termination 12 months after discontinuance of pay. This change will permit employees in nonpay status such as those on leave-without-pay to retain coverage by payment of their share of the insurance premiums. Under current law, such employees could lose their coverage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1538) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1539

(Purpose: To amend chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, to reduce the age at which a widow or widower may upon remarriage receive certain compensation under the Federal employees' compensation system)

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator ROTH and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], for Mr. ROTH, proposes an amendment numbered 1539.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill; add the following new section,

SEC. . REDUCTION IN AGE REQUIREMENT FOR WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS FOR RECEIVING CERTAIN COMPENSATION UNDER THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION SYSTEM.

Chapter 81, of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 8133(b)(1) by striking out "age 60" and inserting in lieu therof "age 55"; and

(2) in section 8135(b) by striking out "age 60" and inserting in lieu thereof "age 55".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1539) was agreed to.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments? If not, the bill is considered read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

"To amend title 5, United States Code, to allow Federal annuitants to make contributions for health benefits through direct payments rather than through annuity withholdings if the annuity is insufficient to cover the required withholdings, to make a technical correction relating to the life insurance program, and to provide for the termination of life insurance coverage uniformly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PERMITTING THE CAST OF THE MUSICAL "SARAFINA!" TO PERFORM IN THE HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BOREN, I send a resolution to the desk to permit the cast of the musical "Sarafina!" to perform in the Hart Senate Office Building, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 275) to permit the cast of the musical "Sarafina!" to perform in the Hart Senate Office Building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate take up and consider the following resolution to allow the cast of the acclaimed musical "SARAFINA!" to perform in the atrium of the Senate Hart Building on Tuesday, May 1 at noon.

The cast of "SARAFINA!" consists of 30 South African actors, ages 15 to 25, who portray the story of schoolchildren in Soweto. It is a story of struggle but it is also a story of hope. The idea to write "SARAFINA!" began in 1984 when Winnie Mandela spoke with Mbongeni Ngema, the noted South African author and musician, about doing a show which would celebrate the children of South Africa's black townships. "SARAFINA!" was then written, choregraphed, and directed by Mr. Ngema, with the moving musical arrangements by Mbongeni Ngema and Hugh Masekela. The show's world premiere in Johannesburg in 1987 was followed by a critically acclaimed and enormously successful 2-year run on Broadway. The Washington opening on April 26 marks the beginning of a 5-week run at the Kennedy Center and a subsequent nationwide tour. By giving a voice to the children of South Africa, "SARAFINA!" is a powerful story of how the cruelties of apartheid touch both young and old.

I hope that my colleagues and their staffs will be able to hear the voices of "SARAFINA!" on May 1 in the Hart Building and see the show at the Kennedy Center during its run. I thank the Senate for considering this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 275) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 275

Resolved, That in honor of the opening of the acclaimed musical "SARAFINA!," members of the cast will be allowed to sing in the Senate Hart Building on Tuesday, May 1 at noon, to share the music of a moving story about the black schoolchildren who suffer under apartheid.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WILDFIRE DISASTER RECOVERY ACT OF 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Agriculture Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 1011, the Wildfire Disaster Recovery Act of 1989, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1011) to provide for the establishment of the National Commission on Wildfire Disasters, to provide for increased planning and cooperation with local firefighting forces in the event of forest fires, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 1011) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MAKING TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO THE ETHICS REFORM ACT OF 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.J. Res. 553, a joint resolution to make technical corrections to the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 received today from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 553) to make technical changes in the Ethics Reform Act of 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 553) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INFANT MORTALITY AWARENESS DAY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 546, a joint resolution to designate May 13, 1990, as National Infant Mortality Awareness Day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 546) designating May 13, 1990 as "Infant Mortality Awareness Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 546) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M.; JOURNAL OF PROCEEDINGS APPROVED; RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME; RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BYRD

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9 a.m. on Friday, April 27; that following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved; that the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later; and following the reservation of the leader time, Senator BYRD be recognized under the previous order to offer his amendment regarding the study of foreign aid assisting U.S. investments abroad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, the first rollcall vote on tomorrow will occur around 9:20 or 9:25 a.m. on the Byrd amendment. Under the order, the Byrd amendment has a 20-minute time limitation. As I previously indicated, tomorrow's session could be a long one with votes possible throughout the day.

ORDER FOR NO AMENDMENTS TO THE BYRD AMENDMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be no amendments to the Byrd amendment on which there is a 20-minute time limitation scheduled for consideration at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished acting Republican leader has no further business and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 9 a.m. Friday, April 27.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:35 p.m., recessed until Friday, April 27, 1990, at 9 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

BENEFITS OF AUTOMATION ELUDE POSTAL SERVICE

HON. NEWT GINGRICH
OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, as we look at the Postal Service's proposals to raise rates and cut services, I would encourage my colleagues to read the attached article from the Washington Post on the problems of innovation. It has become rather obvious that automation alone is not the answer. Postal officials will have to come up with innovative methods of incorporating automation and the retraining of their employees.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 26, 1989]

BENEFITS OF AUTOMATION ELUDE POSTAL SERVICE

(By Dana Priest and Judith Havemann)

At the giant mail-processing center in New Orleans, 22 clerks sit in front of pigeon holes, the kind used 214 years ago by Benjamin Franklin's office, slowly examining each letter before placing it into its proper, numbered niche.

Mail handlers unload letter trays from trucks, wheeling them inside where others haul, lift, toss and sort mail all night and half the day.

In the middle of this scene from the 1950s is an island of innovation, the U.S. Postal Service's link to the 21st century: new, electronic sorting machines that flush 28,000 letters an hour past blinking electronic eyes and into one of 100 steel traps, each representing a carrier's route.

But the sorted letters must be picked up again by human clerks and delivered by human carriers. In the course of being sorted and delivered, a typical letter is touched by 14 humans' hands.

Decades after its first stab at modernizing, the Postal Service—a $41 billion-a-year government owned corporation with more employees than the U.S. Army—has undergone the most expensive, traumatic technological change in its history. The change has not yet been palpably beneficial.

Having poured $526 million into new sorting machines and other technology in the past 12 months, the Postal Services faces a $1.6 billion loss this year, declining business growth, lagging worker productivity and raids on its most lucrative business by private competitors.

"We've got to capture the savings dollar-for-dollar that these machines represent or we can kiss the Postal Service as we know it goodbye," Robert Setrakian, chairman of the Postal Board of Governors told postmasters in September.

Meantime, U.S. postal patrons can get ready to kiss the 25-cent stamp goodbye. As Postal Service costs continue to rise nearly 1½ times as fast as inflation, the board is prepared to raise postage rates again in 1991, probably to 30 cents for a first-class letter.

First-class mail delivery performance was at a five-year low last year, and complaints about late mail rose last summer by 35 percent, despite a sluggish 1 percent growth in mail volume.

Automation was to be the service's hope for a turnaround. But efforts to automate have been plagued by poor management and planning, costly changes of direction, internal scandal and an inability to achieve the paramount goal of moving the mail with fewer people.

With 822 new sorting machines like the one in New Orleans installed across the country in the last two years, the post office's total work force declined by only 1.1 percent. In the area most affected by automation, mail processing, the worker pool actually increased by 5,131 people, according to postal figures.

Work-force reductions are complicated by union contracts that provide postal workers with wages and benefits worth about $20 an hour and contain strict work and assignment rules, strong seniority rights, restrictions on the use of part-time employees and bans on layoffs.

The New Orleans post office is one example of how poor planning from above and labor restrictions from below can play havoc with efforts to cut costs.

Within an eight-month period, the facility received seven new 60-foot-long letter-sorting machines, had two others taken away and another four already in the plant retrofitted with new equipment. To make room, concrete walls were knocked down overnight and some of the new equipment was used to hold down still-drying floor tile.

Despite drastic decreases in the volume of mail handled, the service had to hire additional employees: technicians to run the new machines. Postal managers were unable to lay off people whose jobs were made redundant by technology. Instead, they transferred employees to areas where there was more work and adjusted work hours to better coincide with the new mail flow.

The changes affected workers' personal lives and depressed morale. "You're talking upheaval," said postmaster Charles K. Kernan, general manager of the New Orleans division.

About 550 processing clerks on the late-night shift downtown were told to begin work at midnight instead of 10 p.m. This meant a 10 percent pay cut because more of the shift occurred in daylight hours. The change also made it impossible for many parents to get home in time to send their children to school.

Wayne Cola, who works the letter-sorting machine, said his three children now must spend the night with his mother-in-law because he gets off later in the morning. "The kids don't like it," he said.

Postal officials in New Orleans also centralized mail processing so they would have more mail to feed into the machines. As a result, 22 of the 34 manual clerks in a nearby suburb were forced into the downtown processing center because there was no work for them elsewhere. They were put in one corner of the facility where they spend the day under-employed, sorting letters by hand.

"The mail is not coming in here so we have to slow down," to avoid looking idle, said C. J. Roux, a postal clerk. "We don't want to work ourselves out of a job."

The transfer infuriated some longtime employees, who had thought that they would be protected in desirable jobs because of their seniority.

"They shuffled me away like an old piece of furniture," said Alvin Coulon, a 27-year veteran of the post office and one of those transferred to the midnight shift in New Orleans. "No body knew nothing" about the change. "Nobody can do nothing about it," he said.

With more mail being sorted in processing offices, the goal across the country is to have letter carriers spend more time on the street, with larger quantities to carry. But some carriers are not happy about that possibility and they, too, admit to slowing their work pace.

"They knew the future," Joseph Williams, manager of the Carrollton post office in a section of New Orleans said of his disgruntled carriers.

Although automation was planned for years, some offices were caught off-guard when it finally arrived. For example, last fall a planned upgrade of some of the sorting machines in the main D.C. processing center, which serves Washington, as well as Montgomery and Prince George's counties, caused a drop in on-time deliveries from 93 to 79 percent because postal managers were unable to adjust to the temporary shutdown of some equipment.

The standard is 95 percent on-time arrival.

The most-advanced machine in the current automation plan is called a "multi-line optical character reader." [Its electronic eye can read a five- or nine-digit typed or printed Zip code and up to four lines of address. The machine translates the address or Zip code into a bar code symbol, which it sprays on the envelope, then sorts to a particular tray that represents a carrier's route. Bar code machines read and sort envelopes that contain the codes.

Officials point to San Diego as a model of the way automation should work. The success there is due largely to the innovative work of local managers who devised their own strategy for using the machines and, more important, figured out how to stop the workers from feeling threatened by the change.

"It's like a rock in the water," said San Diego division postmaster and general manager Margaret Sellers. "You start out with a ripple, if you don't do planning, you get a tidal wave."

First, Sellers created an automation team, with five subcommittees to manage the change and to sell it to employees. When she received the first sorting machine, she put it on display at a post office open house and then persuaded union leaders to hold meetings and to walk the workroom floor explaining to workers what the machines could and could not do.

"Our reaction at first was against it," said postal clerk Gary Pattee, an eight-year veteran. "It was hard to sell it to us because we thought we were out of here."

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.
Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Instead, Pattee, like other workers, was encouraged to learn how to operate the mechanical letter-sorting machines, and he was paid for doing it on his own time. Now his skills and his position are more flexible.

Fast-growing San Diego has been insulated from some of the problems experienced elsewhere because redundant employees are used to handle an increasing volume of mail. Still, the office has been able to reduce the number of manual sorting clerks by 10 percent during the first year of automation.

The mission of the U.S. Postal Service is indisputably ambitious. Each day a work force of over 800,000 employees in 40,000 post offices and processing centers across the country, flies, ships, trucks and carries an estimated 537 million pieces of mail to 92 million households and 7.3 million businesses. The United States alone produces 40 percent of all the mail in the world and has kept the cost of its first-class stamp well below that of every other major capitalist nation.

Postal officials are lobbied by no fewer than 70 industry groups and must negotiate compensation and working conditions with four labor unions and three manager's organizations. Once a repository for political patronage jobs, its relationship with Capitol Hill today consists of 24 annual oversight hearings before committees in both houses of Congress. Its work has been made no easier by constant turnover at the top—there have been four postmasters general in the last five years.

The history of the service's efforts to automate is one that "makes me want to cry when I rehear it," in the words of Deputy Postmaster General Michael S. Coughlin.

D.H. Shepard first invented an "apparatus for reading" addresses in 1951, according to records of the Patent Office. A handwritten memoir by Omer M. Long in the postal archives shows what during the late 1950s and 1960s the then-Post Office Department had the lead in optical character readers.

"We were visited regularly by the foreign engineers trying to learn the state of the art," Long wrote. "Unfortunately, management . . . changed so often . . . or were totally unsuited for the position . . . that we lost all respect for lack of performance in the field."

Lawrence F. O'Brien, postmaster general in 1965–68, called the post office's 1960s research and development investment "laughable."

In 1978, then-Postmaster General William F. Bolger announced the invention of a nine-digit Zip code, which made it possible for new machines to read an envelope and sort it to a particular carrier's route. Reacting to opposition from commercial mailers and the public, Congress put a three-year hold on the idea. When the nine-digit code finally became policy, many fewer mailers than predicted used it.

There were other problems as well. In one 18-month period, the Postal Service gave $25 million in rate discounts to business mailers for using a nine-number Zip code that the new machines could process, but then failed to press them on the machines, according to the General Accounting Office.

Then in 1982, then-President Ronald Reagan appointed Peter E. Voss to the Postal Board of Governors. In 1986 Voss pleaded guilty to accepting kickbacks from a Michigan lobbying firm for his help in trying to steer a $250 million sole-source contract for optical scanners to Recognition Equipment Inc., a Texas firm.

Postmaster General Anthony M. Frank said the Voss scandal set the agency back 18 months in its effort to automate.

Foreign firms now dominate the field of mail-automating equipment. Contracts for many of the newly installed machines went to a Texas licensee of a West German firm, AEG Telefunken.

Last week, reaffirming its long-term commitment to automation, the Postal Board of Governors endorsed a five-year strategic plan that will cost over $5 billion. Frank has promised to keep costs 2 percent below inflation, to achieve historic productivity gains and to increase revenues.

"This is not a speed boat here. It doesn't turn on a dime," Frank said in an interview. "It is changing, it is slow, it is frustrating once in a while, but so is every large corporation."

POST OFFICES FACE THE FAX TO COMPETE

The U.S. Postal Service has decided that if it can't lick the competition, it will rent it space.

The Postal Service began leasing space to fax machines in post office lobbies on the East Coast this month charging rent, keeping part of the revenue generated by the machines and attempting to increase convenience, attract more customers and prove that the post office knows how to handle competition. Last year, about 1.3 million commercial fax machines took in about $4 billion for their owners, according to industry figures.

The Post Service, which once carried virtually all the packages in the United States, now has only 3 percent of that market, according to Postmaster General Anthony M. Frank. United Parcel Service did $6 billion in domestic and international business last year, according to Dun and Bradstreet. The Federal Express Corp., another competitor, took in $5.2 billion here and abroad in its most recently completed fiscal year.

In 1988, the last year for which figures are available, the Postal Service's Express Mail service, domestic and foreign, took in $551 million, postal officials said.

Roughly 1 million magazines are being delivered by private delivery services, including 800,000 by United Delivery Systems based in Grand Rapids, Mich., and several thousands by a delivery service owned by Time Warner Inc. in Atlanta.

In the international market, private companies now ferry mail from the United States to foreign countries, bypassing the Postal Service. Although international mail has been growing, the Post Service's share of it has dropped nearly 25 percent in the last five years.

GORBACHEV IS OVERPLAYING HIS HAND IN LITHUANIA

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in the past several days, I've talked with President Bush and other top administration officials, and talked as well with the President of Lithuania.

Events in Lithuania are moving faster than most people realize. President Landsbergis says the Soviet policy will soon lead to civil conflict and great human suffering.

President Gorbachev is overplaying his hand. He doesn't want to negotiate with the Lithuanians. He wants to make a terrible example of them.

From my conversations with administration officials, it's clear to me that line has been drawn by the White House. Where that line is precisely, I am not sure, but the Soviets are coming awfully close to crossing it.

Mr. Gorbachev wants to starve Lithuania into submission. That's a short-sighted policy. We should make it very clear to him that he may soon find his own economy starved for lack of western assistance.

THE MIAMI-DADE BRANCH OF THE NAACP HOSTS SECOND ANNUAL FREEDOM FUND AWARDS BANQUET

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, on June 9, 1990, the Miami-Dade branch of the NAACP will be hosting the Second Annual Freedom Funds Awards Banquet, a very special event which furthers our Nation's continuing pursuit of racial harmony. I would like to thank the Miami-Dade branch of the NAACP for asking me to serve as co-chairperson, an honor which I have happily accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Miami-Dade branch of the NAACP for its tireless efforts to continue the struggle which began more than 80 years ago. It is unfortunate that a Nation as great as ours, conceived on the highest ideals of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, has had to endure the harsh realities of racial prejudice.

The NAACP has built upon the ideals of men such as Frederick Douglass, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Ralph Abernathy, and many others who have been dedicated to the cause of minority rights, rights which all men are guaranteed by their birthright. All Americans have a duty to emulate the ideals that these gentleman furthered, while the rest of America wallowed in the ignorance of racial prejudice. Outstanding individuals with the NAACP in my district who have furthered this cause include: Johnnie McMillian, president; Oza Jenkins, general chairperson, Second Annual Freedom Fund Awards banquet; A. Kate Kemp, first vice president; Brad Brown, second vice president; Richard Powell, third vice president; Shirley Johnson, fourth vice president; Peggy Demon, fifth vice president; Aroy Davis, sixth vice president; Deloris Wright, secretary; Janice Isley, assistant secretary; Willie Barnett, treasurer; C. Brian Hart, assistant treasurer; and executive committee members Neal Adams, Rev. Billy Baskin, Rev. Alexander Bostic, Rev. Victor Curry, Betty Ferguson, Doris Hart, Rev. G. David Horton, Rev. Florence Pratt-Hall, Mayor Robert Ingram, Billy Isley, Rev. Arthur Jackson, Jr., Joseph R. Kemp, Jr., Rev. Walter Richardson, Rodney Thaxton, Pat Tornillo, and David Honig, Esq.

The funds raised from the banquet will support programs to further the NAACP goals in providing equal opportunity and full citizenship rights for all people. Among these include fair share directives, stay-in-school programs, voters registration campaigns and get-out-to-vote efforts.

It should be the hope of all Americans that one day we will no longer harbor racial prejudices, and realize that the color of one's skin does not limit the ability of individual's success. We should all strive to learn from our past inequities and do all that is possible to end the differences which, unfortunately, still exist in our country.

The Miami-Dade branch of the NAACP is one of the many branches of the NAACP and countless other organizations that will further our Nation's pursuit of racial harmony.

THE TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSION ON IMPORT OF LISINOPRIL

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill which would suspend for a 3-year period the duty on Lisinopril. Lisinopril is imported from Ireland for processing into finished dosage form in Wilson, NC. Lisinopril is also manufactured in Puerto Rico, but the domestically produced material is insufficient in quantity to satisfy market demands and importation is necessary. Lisinopril, a synthetic peptide derivative, is an oral long-acting angiotensin converting enzyne [ACE] inhibitor. It is used for the treatment of hypertension, either alone or concomitantly with other antihypertensive agents. Lisinopril differs from other drugs in its class by virtue of its long half life and resulting once daily dosage which may enhance patient compliance.

This measure is non controversial and I urge my colleagues to support this bill as part of any tariff suspension legislation that comes before the House.

NYU'S FACULTY RESOURCE NETWORK

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues news about an exciting new collaboration between New York University and 10 of our Nation's historically black colleges and universities: Benedict College; Bennett College; Dillard University; Johnson C. Smith University; Morehouse College; Spelman College; Stillman College; Talledega College; Tougaloo College; and Xavier University of Louisiana. Each of these colleges and universities has joined NYU's Faculty Resource Network—a program that links New York University with smaller liberal arts institutions in an effort to foster faculty development and new curriculum initiatives. In addition to the 10 historically black colleges and universities, 14 institutions from the New York-New Jersey-Connecticut area are already participating in the Network with NYU.

Since its inception in 1985, the Faculty Resource Network has been a pathmaking program in higher education which brings faculty members from smaller liberal arts institutions to the NYU campus where they can take advantage of extensive research and library resources and have the opportunity to work closely with colleagues in their disciplines.

The recent addition of the 10 historically black colleagues and universities to the Network, made possible by a grant from the Pew Charitable Trusts, will bring important benefits to all participants. At a time when retention of minority students is a critical issue in higher education, historically black colleges have a proven track record in retaining and graduating large numbers of their students. These institutions, therefore, can yield important insights into how best to educate minority students. For its part, New York University, as the largest private research university in the Nation, offers an impressive array of intellectual tools and talent to stimulate faculty and curriculum development.

On January 25, 1990, at the announcement of this new initiative in New York City, Dr. John Brademas, our former colleague and now president of New York University, was joined by Johnetta Cole, president of Spelman College; Leroy Reith, president of Morehouse College; and other distinguished presidents and officers of the participating institutions.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to request that the text of Dr. Brademas' remarks on this occasion be inserted in the RECORD.

REMARKS OF DR. JOHN BRADEMAS, PRESIDENT, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

Let me tell you why this is a great day for New York University and its Faculty Resource Network.

Today, joining the Network, are ten historically black colleges. The significance of their inclusion has many dimensions.

MISSION OF THE FACULTY RESOURCE NETWORK

First, the mission of the Faculty Resource Network is to strengthen and invigorate the intellectual infrastructure of higher education—the activities of teaching and learning.

The men and women of the faculty are the heart of a college or university. It is they who carry out teaching and research. For the past five years, the Faculty Resource Network has linked New York University, a large urban research institution, with a group of smaller liberal arts colleges to foster development of faculty and new curricular initiatives.

Each year, the Network provides the opportunity for one or more faculty members from each affiliated school to be in residence here either during the academic year or over the summer months. Visiting professors can audit courses at NYU, use our library and computer facilities and, in collegial fashion, intereact with NYU scholars and teachers.

The value of these cooperative efforts is considerable.

Although the aim of the Network is to enrich the faculty experience and enhance the profession of teaching, the Network has another valuable benefit, keeping students engaged and eager to learn.

REACHING OUT TO HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

With the expansion of the Network to include ten new colleges, the advantages of the Network grow proportionately.

Today, we reach out to institutions that have played and continue to play a crucial role in American higher education, and we are confident that the historically black colleges will bring a fresh perspective to the Network.

For these colleges clearly have great experience in teaching and advising undergraduate students from minority groups. They boast impressive records in the area of student retention. Beyond keeping their students on the path to complete their undergraduate degrees, these colleges are highly successful in sending their graduates on to pursue advanced degrees.

And as president of a university well-known for its outstanding graduate and professional schools, I hope many of the graduates of the colleges we today welcome to the Network will consider coming here—to New York University—to continue their academic careers.

Another sign of the success of historically black colleges is their alumni, who have emerged as leaders in their communities and in the nation. Some of them are here with us today.

And, of course, one of the greatest leaders our country has ever known—the man whose birthday we celebrated only last week—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was a graduate of one of these institutions, Morehouse College.

MUTUAL BENEFITS

I'm sure that our relationship with the historically black colleges in the Network will give us at NYU deeper insight into the education of minority students. And I have doubt that our collaborative project will have a significant impact not only on all members of the Network but also on higher education nationally.

Now having spoken to how I think we at NYU will gain from this venture, I want to give you some examples of how our new Network members will benefit.

Faculty from our new-member colleges will be able to participate in the Network's scholar-in-residence program. Several books, articles and a variety of new courses have already resulted from research done here at New York University under the auspices of the Faculty Resource Network.

The Network plans a series of interdisciplinary seminars to address issues in current scholarship and problems in curricular reform and teaching methods. And representatives from each of the new institutions we honor today will be invited to participate.

And, of course, our new-member colleges will have the opportunity to take advantage of New York City, a vibrant and exciting center for learning and culture.

THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF C.R. SMITH

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, when C.R. Smith was buried last week, he was eulogized as a man who left a great legacy—for aviation and for the world at large.

Mr. Smith, founder and long-time president of American Airlines, did more than build the foundation of what has become the largest airline in the Western World. He was a pioneer and a builder of the entire air transportation system.

Today that system is the lifeblood of our economy—indeed, of the world's economy. In that sense alone, he was the kind of leader of whom Thomas Carlyle said, "history is the biography of great men."

The values he expressed so clearly because the foundation on which American Airlines employees have built a vast enterprise.

American plans to honor C.R. Smith's profound and unique contribution by creating an aviation museum in his honor near the company's Dallas/Fort Worth headquarters. The museum will perpetuate Mr. Smith's legacy both among company employees and the public at large.

I believe it is entirely appropriate that Member of this House of Representatives also join in acknowledging the contributions of C.R. Smith.

A NATIONAL TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION SERVICE: HARNESSING AMERICAN SCIENCE FOR AMERICAN INDUSTRY

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues Mr. WYDEN, Mr. BOEHLERT, and Mr. BROOMFIELD to introduce legislation creating a National Technology Extension Service, which, I believe, could have a major impact on American economic competitiveness and the American standard of living. Senator BOSCHWITZ is introducing companion legislation on the Senate side. The Extension Service would enable American industry to tap the expertise of scientists and engineers in Federal laboratories and universities, in a way that has been demonstrated to be both inexpensive and very effective.

Hearings before the full House Small Business Committee last September established the importance of technology to long-term economic growth and international economic competitiveness. New technology can have a tremendous effect on the quality of a company's products, on its ability to produce at low cost, on its ability to introduce new products, and on its ability to compete in an international market. Nobel-prize winner Robert Solow of MIT and Edward Denison of the Brookings Institution have estimated that technological advances are responsible for more than half of the growth in American GNP per worker during this century.

But technological advance in the United States is not as rapid as it might be. Although the United States is the undisputed world leader in basic research and in many areas of applied research, it is not as quick as other countries in commercializing that research. For example, the United States has been slow to utilize the vast expertise in its Federal laboratories—a subject explored in a hearing before RON WYDEN's subcommittee last fall. Japan, by contrast, excels in commercializing research, including American research, which is a main reason for its striking economic performance since World War II.

A National Technology Extension Service is a way of harnessing our great strength in research for the needs of American industry. It would complement and enhance the effectiveness of current technology transfer efforts, such as those mandated by the Stevenson-Wydler Act of 1980 and its 1986 amendments. It would give small firms in particular the opportunity to access technical expertise which can be crucial to their ability to compete and survive. Section I of our bill authorizes the National Institute of Standards and Technology to create a user-friendly database of experts, technologies, and research projects in the Federal laboratories, which a business could access directly on a personal computer. Section II would authorize Small Business Development Centers to defray the cost of accessing the database, and others like it, for small businesses.

The Extension Service is modelled loosely on the United States agricultural research and extension system, which for nearly a century has funded agricultural research and disseminated the new technology to farmers. The system has generated a rate of return far higher than that on typical private investments. It is a major reason why agricultural productivity growth has been higher over the last 50 years than in any other broadly-defined sector of the American economy, and why the United States has long been the undisputed world leader in agricultural productivity.

The Extension Service would replicate the agricultural system on an economy-wide scale, using the latest computer and telecommunications technology. An informal survey of a representative sample of companies which use a State-level service similar to the one we are proposing found the average cost to be $17,000 per year per firm, and the average increase in profits to be $290,000. Although it can be hazardous to extrapolate to the entire economy, these numbers suggest that a National Technology Extension Service could have a major impact on our economic growth rate and standard of living, and on the international competitiveness of American goods.

Our bill would authorize $7 million in startup funds for the first year. If the program proves successful, our hope is that the Service could be made national in scope. The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Technology Extension Service Act of 1990."

SECTION 1. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF TECHNOLOGY EXTENSION PILOT PROGRAM.— In addition to such other technology resource and technical information activities of the Department of Commerce's Technology Administration, the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary"), acting through the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Director"), is authorized and directed to create a Technology Extension Pilot Program (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Program"). The Program shall run for five years from the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the Program shall be to provide private businesses, in States selected under subsection (e) of this section to participate in the Program, with improved access to Federal and federally-funded technology and expertise, as well as to equivalent technology and expertise from States and other sources, in order to accelerate the transfer of goverment-supported technology and expertise to businesses and to improve the productivity and economic competitiveness of these businesses.

(c) ACTIVITIES.—The Program shall consist, to the extent the Secretary and Director deem appropriate, of the following—

(1) A database, accessible by computer to private business in participating States, which contains information on—

(A) research projects in Federal laboratories;

(B) other federally-supported research projects, including research in universities;

(C) reports and other documents available from the National Technical Information Service;

(D) patents available for licensing from Federal laboratories and from federally-funded research projects;

(E) other technology resource services available from the Federal government and participating State governments; and

(F) technology transfer personnel and services available at Federal laboratories and the Federal Laboratory Consortium for Technology Transfer.

(2) Direct access to experts in Federal laboratories and elsewhere who are available, under terms too be set by the Secretary, to answer technical questions by telephone.

(3) Interactive access to databases of technical and business information in print.

(d) DATABASE CONTRACTOR.—The Secretary, acting through the Director and using a competitive selection process, shall select a non-Federal database contractor to create the Program's federal database and network of experts and to manage them for the duration of the Program. The contractor must be able to provide access to experts other than, and complementary to, State and Federal experts. The contractor will further be required to provide a staff of information searching professionals to facilitate interactive accessing of technical and business information in print, as well as Federal and State databases.

(e) PARTICIPATING STATES.—Within twelve months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, acting through the Director and using a competitive selection process, shall select up to 5 States for participation in the Program. To be eligible for selection, a State shall provide such matching funds as the Secretary shall deem appropriate and shall establish a database of State research projects, licensable technologies and State services, as well as a network of experts available within the State.

(f) FEES CHARGED TO BUSINESSES.—Private businesses within participating States that wish to take advantage of the information and other services provided by the Program shall be charged as follow—

(1) for businesses with gross annual sales of $5 million or less, no charge;

(2) for businesses with gross annual sales greater than $5 million but less than $15 million, no charge during the first year after States are selected, 25 percent of cost of providing that information and services to the business during the next year, 50 percent during the year after that, and 100 percent thereafter;

(g) COOPERATION.—The heads of Federal departments and agencies shall provide the Secretary with such information and assistance as the Secretary may request in order to carry out the requirements of this Act.

(h) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—After three years of Program operation, and again after the end of the Program, the secretary shall evaluate Program operations and business use of the Program and shall report findings to the appropriate committees of Congress.

(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out the Program established under section 1 of this Act, there is hereby authorized to the secretary the following amounts—

(1) for fiscal year 1991, $2,000,000; and

(2) for each of fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995, $3,000,000.

SEC. 2. (a) SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—The Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 648) is amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. 24—Any applicant which is funded by the Administration as a Small Business Development Center may apply for an additional grant to be used solely to increase access by small businesses in its service area to on-line databases for the purpose of facilitating technology transfer, such as that created by Section 1 of this Act or other privately or publicly-funded databases. The Small Business Development Center may seek to increase small business access by:

"(1) defraying part or all of the cost of access to the databases for a limited period of time;

"(2) training small businesses in use of the databases;

"(3) demonstrating to small businesses the benefits of accessing the databases."

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administration for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 the sum of $5,000,000 to carry out the provisions of section 2(a) of this Act.

WAKE UP TO TOURISM

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, man's spirit of adventure and willingness to challenge the unknown is what lead to some of history's greatest intrepid explorers, such as Christopher Columbus, Ferdinand Magellan, and Marco Polo.

These men possesed an unrelenting desire for a higher quality of life and self enrichment. It was their spirit to reach beyond themselves which led each of them to discover new worlds, interesting people, and exciting opportunities for cultural and economic exchanges. Our world has become closer—more intimate—because of travel.

The business of travel and tourism has a tremendous impact on the global economy. In Washington, there is a bipartisan organization within the House of Representatives which is working to set a legislative agenda to enhance the economic benefits of tourism across the country. This organization is the Congressional Travel and Tourism Caucus. As a member of the caucus and presently serving on the steering committee, I enjoy the opportunity to promote the travel industry and am sure that the experience will continue to be both rewarding and challenging.

Today, travel and tourism is one of the world's largest industries. Statistics reveal that globally, tourism is increasingly becoming a major source of foreign exchange earnings for countries.

Here in the United States, the travel industry generates more jobs than any other industry except health services and is the largest "invisible" export for the United States in the services sector.

Just like the adventuresome explorers from another time, visitors from abroad are discovering a new land—America. During 1989, foreign visitors spent $34.3 billion in the United States or $450 million more than Americans spent abroad. For the first time in this country's history more money was spent by visitors coming to the United States than was spent by Americans traveling abroad. That means more jobs, more tax revenues, and more assistance with international balance of payments.

Mr. Speaker, tourism is also very important in my home State of Missouri. In fact, during my tenure in the Missouri Legislature, I had the privilege of serving on the Missouri Tourism Commission. Tourism is Missouri's second-largest industry, with a spending level of more than $5.8 billion last year.

"Wake-up to Missouri" is our State's promotional theme. Since 1983, we've been using that theme to let travelers know that Missouri has a great deal to offer—from the culturally rich urban areas and idyllic rural settings, to the mighty Mississippi River and majestic Ozark Mountains—Missouri has it all.

At home in Missouri's Second Congressional District there is variety of tourist attractions, including the Six Flags Over America Theme Park, the outstanding collection of the National Museum of Transportation, pristine Queeny Park, home of the St. Louis County Pops Orchestra, plus picturesque St. Charles, popular for its charming historic district and formerly the State's capital. The district is served by extensive transportation facilities, including one of the Nation's busiest airports, Lambert-St. Louis International Airport, Amtrak's Kirkwood Station, and three primary interstate highways.

Visitors are waking up to Missouri and the United States. Tourism is not just fun and recreation—it's good business!

I urge my colleagues to do all they can to support the tourism industry. Everyone in Missouri's travel industry works together—as partners—to keep tourism growing. That kind of cooperative efforts works great in my State—and it can be the key to our continued success nationally as well.

CHILDREN'S TELEVISION WORKSHOP OF NEW YORK CITY

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the Children's Television Workshop of New York City for the achievements of its public television series Square One TV. The New York Times headline of March 26, 1990 is "Making Math Come Alive on Television." That's what Square One TV is supposed to do, and now we have new research proof that the results it has been seeking are happening!

I am of course proud that my New York neighbors are succeeding with this project. But I take special pleasure in their accomplishment because it reflects so well on the help they receive from the National Science Foundation. The VA-HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee of which I am the ranking member has provided the Foundation with funds to reach out to the American people in science education directions. Their support to Square One TV shows just how effective these new approaches can be.

The Square One programs are seen daily on public TV stations across the Nation at times when youngsters are at home. The research just out indicates that these viewers score up to 56 percent better on math tests conducted on fifth graders in Corpus Christi, TX. The program's producer, David Connell, says, "We show kids that the stuff they are learning in class has application in the real world." I believe that is a very worthwhile goal for the programs and for the National Science Foundation, and the research is welcome evidence that they are on the right track. We in the Congress can be very pleased that this has worked so well!

The article follows:

MAKING MATH COME ALIVE ON TELEVISION

(By Eleanor Blau)

There was the case of the robber in a monkey suit.

And of the woman who staged her own kidnapping.

And a woman who seemed to predict earthquakes.

The "Mathnet" team solved them all.

With calculators in holsters under their uniforms with deadpan looks and with the background theme of the old "Dragnet" detective series, Kate Monday (Beverly Leech) and George Frankly (Joe Howard) have been figuring things out on "Square One TV" since the mathematics series for 8-to-12 year-olds made its debut two seasons ago on public television.

Now, the daily half-hour program, which is produced by the Children's Television Workshop—the "Sesame Street" crowd—is pleased by some new calculations of its own.

A study of fifth graders in Corpus Christi, Tex., conducted by the workshop, reported that those who watched "Square One TV" improved dramatically in problem-solving.

Eve R. Hall, the director of research for "Square One TV," said 48 youngsters were tested at the start of the study. Then half of them watched 30 episodes of "Square One" and everybody was tested again.

Viewers improved by an average of 46 percent in the number and variety of techniques they used to solve problems, Ms. Hall reported, and by an average 56 percent in the sophistication and completeness of their answers. Nonviewers did not improve at all, on average, in either category she said.

Both groups reflected the socioeconomic and ethnic mix of the area, which is two-thirds Hispanic, she said, and the results held regardless of students' backgrounds or sex.

The study, like the program, focused on ingenuity, not rote. One question, for instance, asked children to discover what was wrong with a game and to fix it. The game included a coin to be flipped, dials to be spun, elasticized loops hugging numbers on a board and cut-out players labeled "Green" and "Orange."

The flaw in the game was that it was unfair to Green; it could be made fairer in various ways, including moving loops or changing numbers on the dials.

"There is a great tendency among kids in our target age, when presented with a problem, to either see the answer right away or respond, "We haven't had that yet,'" said Dave Connell, who developed "Square One TV" and who writes much of its material.

THEY SIMPLY PRESS ON

"Square One," which also includes game shows, skits, music videos and animation, encourages children to search for solutions without feeling defeated, he said. For instance, on the "Mathnet" section, Jack Webb-like Kate Monday and her naive but smart partner, George Frankly, make mistakes but learn from them. "They do not get discouraged or depressed," he said. "They simply press on."

"We describe various ways of tackling a problem," Mr. Connell went on: by drawing a picture, for instance, by making a guess, by recalling how a similar problem was solved in the past or by asking an expert.

In the case of the monkey-suited robber, the initial suspect, a gorilla, is reported missing from his cage, and the "Mathnet" duo determine how far it could have traveled by learning, among other things, the length of gorillas' strides.

A clue in the case of the phony kidnapping is a telephone message consisting only of touch tones, each of which, it turns, out, stands for one of three letters.

And the fake quake-predictor is revealed after Kate and George learn about two kinds of earthquake waves.

During the season, which just ended, "Square One TV" is seen at 5 P.M. on Channel 13 and at 4:30 P.M. on Channels 21, 25, 31 and 49 in the New York area (Channel 25 is still running it) and at a wide variety of times elsewhere—including school hours when few children watch.

"MATHNET" IS THE STAR

Even so, the program has a respectable audience. In the second season of "Square One," 3.5 million households tuned in during an average week. (That's fewer than the 11 million who watch "Sesame Street," but that is a different sort of program for 2-to-5 year olds, is in its 21st season and is seen more times a day than "Square One" in many areas). Letters to "Square One" and word of mouth make it clear that the "Mathnet" segment is the biggest hit of the series.

The program does have its critics. For example, Elizabeth Fennema, education professor at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, said that she was not convinced that viewers learned much, that she and youngsters she knew found the program boring and that it offered stereotypes of women and minorities.

Dr. Elizabeth Stage, who has been on an advisory committee to "Square One" and who is executive director of the California Science Project at the University of California at Berkeley, said, "Everybody is stereotyped" on the program because it is a parody of television. "I think they've gone to great lengths," she added, not to make fun of one group more than another.

In fact, Dr. Stage said, her one reservation about the program was that, in using parody, "they sometimes end up showing people as fairly silly."

MAKING MATH COME ALIVE

But there is considerable praise for "Square One TV" among teachers familiar with it. Dr. Francis Fennell, for one, noted that some teachers show the program or taped parts of it to their classes.

Dr. Fennell, who recently headed an educational panel for The Arithmetic Teacher, a journal of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics, and who teaches education at Western Maryland College in Westminster, Md., said, "I think that program makes math come alive."

Mr. Connell was the original executive producer not only of "Square One TV" but also of "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company," a 1970's series for second graders with reading difficulties. But he met with skepticism when he proposed a math series.

"Math is not a spectator sport," the doubters told him. "But," he said, "most people think of math as being computation, arithmetic—not thinking—which is what it is all about. One of our advisers said arithmetic is to math what spelling is to literature."

In a country where it is almost fashionable to say "I'm no good at math," he said, and in which many youngsters dislike and fear the subject, television can change attitudes and provide role models. "We show kids that the stuff they are learning in class has application in the real world," he said.

Well, sort of the real world. In the monkey case, the gorilla winds up atop an 80-foot Hollywood sign with helicopters hovering as George Frankly reads it its rights to grunt with an attorney.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, National Volunteer Week is a celebration of the human spirit. It is a recognition of the accomplishments of the many people in this country who generously donate their time and efforts for the good of others. In my own community of Westchester County, NY, we will be recognizing the contributions of many individuals and organizations who are representative of hundreds of others on Friday, April 27, 1990.

Among the many outstanding groups and individuals honored is the rape crisis helpline in White Plains, NY. This important support organizations is an emotional lifeline for many victims of sexual assault. Helpline volunteers offer assistance without interfering with police or medical work. They are there 24 hours a day to provide comfort and information to those who are victims of this horrible crime.

Also being honored is Edwardo Correia, a resident of Yonkers, NY, and a marketing research assistant for General Foods, USA. He has been a volunteer at Children's Village in Dobbs Ferry, NY, for over 3 years. During this time, he has tutored children, organized field trips, and arranged birthday parties. He has also been involved in INROADS, a national organization dedicated to preparing minority youths for corporate employment and community leadership. Edwardo Correia is a prime example of someone who is committed to making his community a better place and is willing to give of himself to see that it is.

Sylvia Begany, of Yonkers, is being recognized for her work at the Home for the Aged Blind and the Newman Center for Alzheimer's Care. As a retired nurse and someone who has experienced her own health problems and rebounded, she understands the difficulties many people with chronic illnesses face. She uses this experience to make a difference in the lives of elderly patients.

Belinda M. Jackson from Mt. Vernon, NY, is a young person with exceptional energy and a strong desire to help others. She is involved in Adolescents Karing About People, the Greater Centennial AME. Zion Church, the Leading Youth of Mount Vernon, and the YMCA Leaders club. In spite of consistently being committed to community service, Belinda still manages to excel at school.

Another individual deserves to be acknowledged as one whose selfless actions have made a noticeable difference in the lives of many. Dr. Robert Schultz of New Rochelle, NY, has been working as a volunteer staff person for AIDS-Related Community Services. As an AIDSline volunteer for the past 2½ years, Dr. Schultz has provided callers with current, accurate information about AIDS. In light of the many misconceptions about AIDS, it is comforting to realize that there are those dedicated to providing the facts while maintaining compassion and understanding.

While I am congratulating these and all volunteers, and although this week, in particular, is a tribute to their efforts, we should be thankful everyday for their tireless attempts to make our world a better place, one where futures will be brighter and where our fellow human beings will understand that others are willing to give of themselves to make their lives better.

CHILDREN AID IN DRUG WAR

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I submit this article for the benefit of the Members.

[From the Indianapolis Star, Jan. 11, 1990]

ANTI-DRUG CAMPAIGN ENLISTS AID OF CHILDREN

Eleven is now the median age at which youngsters first use an illegal drug, be it tobacco, alcohol, marijuana or any of the terrible assortment of hard drugs.

That is why an innovative citywide "Just Say No" campaign starting tonight aims at enlisting more than 15,000 school children in the war on drugs.

Jim Arvin, coordinator of drug education for the Indianapolis Public Schools, and Christel DeHaan, president and chief executive officer of Resort Condominiums International will kick off the drive at 7 p.m. in the Public Assembly Room of the City-County Building.

RCI is the corporate sponsor of the yearlong effort, first of its kind in the nation, which will involve fourth, fifth and sixth graders at all 68 IPS elementary schools and 30 parachial schools and three private schools in Indianapolis.

Youngsters in that age group are the most vulnerable to tempting pleas to "just try it."

The audience of parents, teachers and administrators from all 101 schools will be briefed by Arvin; DeHaan: Mayor William H. Hudnut; Mickey Lentz, coordinator of support services for the Office of Catholic Education; Dr. James Adams, IPS superintendent, and IPS School Board President Stephen Hyatt.

Arvin will also introduce Becky Furste, co-chairperson of Indianapolis Challenge; Gary Porter, project consultant for "Just Say No"; Chief Paul Annee of the Indianapolis Police Department; Marion County Sheriff Joseph McAtee; Capt. Mike Sherman of the IPD narcotics division; Jeff Oberlies, Marion County deputy prosecutor; James Stutz, IPS supervisor of health, physical education and athletics, and Tim Mosier, IPS coordinator of drug and family life education.

RCI has provided kits, which will be distributed at the kick-off, for students who join their schools' "Just Say No" clubs and take part in their varied activities, which are designed to invite them to choose health and fitness as an alternative to drugs.

Arvin says there are 15,000 children in the targeted grades who could join. Considering the low median age for first-time use, and because school is the place where it is most likely to happen, getting them to join has a high priority.

"Drug abuse is the nation's most critical problem," says DeHaan, explaining the involvement of RCI, the world's oldest and largest vacation-exchange company.

The Indianapolis program has the backing of the Bush administration and drug czar William J. Bennett. It deserves the support of everyone who wants the community's children to grow up drug-free and healthy.

TRIBUTE TO STEVE REYNOLDS

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this week, New Mexico mourns the death of a great public servant and a fine gentleman. Steve Reynolds, 73, died early Wednesday morning at St. Vincent Hospital in Santa Fe following complications from a 10 year bout with diabetes.

Serving as State engineer since 1955, Reynolds was recognized internationally as an expert on water issues in the Western United States. He planned and supervised the execution of an estimated 1.5 billion dollars worth of projects to conserve New Mexico's precious and scarce water supply.

Some of these projects were the Navajo Dam and Reservoir on the San Juan River, the Navajo Indian irrigation project, the San Juan Chama Transmountain diversion project, the Ute Dam and Reservoir and the Canadian River and the Brantley Dam and Reservoir on the Pecos River.

In his years as State engineer, Reynolds served 10 Governors from both parties and was regarded as a model of nonpartisanship and integrity. Like the water he devoted his career to preserving, he was a precious resource and will not be easily replaced.

I am enclosing for my colleagues' review an article reviewing Steve Reynold's life which appeared in the April 25, 1990 edition of the Albuquerque Tribune.

STATE ENGINEER REYNOLDS DIES, 73

(By Carlos Salazar)

Stephen E. Reynolds, the New Mexico state engineer who was one of the most powerful water officials in the West, died this morning.

Reynolds, 73, died at 12:30 a.m. today at St. Vincent Hospital in Santa Fe of complications after surgery on March 24 for a blocked femoral artery. Doctors removed his left leg below the knee the next day.

As state engineer, Reynolds ruled New Mexico's water resources for 36 years. He served under 10 governors.

Reynolds exercised the sole power to regulate water issues, a task that most water-short Western states assign to commissions and/or bureaucratic authorities.

Reynolds decided who got how much precious water and angered many over the years. But even his opponents respected him.

In the June 1989 issue of Governing magazine, Reynolds was called "The West's last water buffalo."

"There is no other Steve Reynolds. He is by far the most powerful individual dealing with water in the West," Steven Shupe, a former Colorado assistant attorney general who consults on regional water issues, said in the article.

It's estimated the federal government lavished more than $1 billion on water developments benefiting New Mexico during his tenure. Included was the big San Juan Chama project that diverts water from the Colorado River system through the Continental Divide into the Rio Grande basin.

New Mexico sets a two-year term for the state engineer, but 10 governors in a row, Democratic and Republican never bothered to reappoint Reynolds.

In 1980 former Gov. Jerry Apodaca said that his administration in 1975 "took a long, hard look" at Reynolds' operation, presumably to have him removed as the water czar.

"He'd been there so long, he practically had a monopoly on water policy. It was like (J. Edgar) Hoover of the FBI," Apodaca said. "But we found no vindictiveness, no personal involvements of any kind in his decisions. He knew everything about water; that great knowledge is Steve's security."

In the 1980s, Reynolds became a target for many environmentalists who thought he was too optimistic about the state's long-term water supplies.

Reynolds was born and reared in Decatur, Ill.

He received his mechanical engineering degree at UNM in 1939.

As a senior, Reynolds was captain of the UNM football team and in 1963 was honored by Sports Illustrated.

HELP AMERICA RECYCLE

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Recycling Initiatives Grant Act [RIGA], which could add a vital element to our solid waste management strategy.

Americans produce an astounding amount of garbage; more than 160 million tons of municipal solid waste per year. That's coming close to 1 ton per person, a truly shocking statistic. Almost as shocking is that only 10 percent of this trash is recycled. Another 10 percent or so is incinerated and the rest is put in landfills.

Landfilling is not a long-term solution. The Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] estimates that 50 percent of the landfills that existed in 1986 will be closed by next year. Within 20 years, more than 80 percent of the Nation's landfills will be closed.

What can we do with the more than 200 million tons of trash we bury each year? The obvious solution is to cut down on the amount of trash we produce and to recycle as much of the rest as possible.

Some States have already begun enacting voluntary and mandatory recycling laws and people are participating. However, in many instances, recyclable items are collected but then simply stored because there is no market for them. The current glut of news print means that many localities separate and collect newspapers only to put them in the landfill.

For recycling programs to succeed and grow, we need to create new methods to reuse products and market these recycled goods. We need to stop the debate about which comes first, the supply of recyclable items or the uses of this supply. We need to develop new recycling techniques, find new uses for products, establish efficient ways to collect and redistribute these items, and create the markets for these goods.

The Recycling Initiatives Grant Act will provide Federal grants to support research and development of innovative recycling techniques. At a total annual cost of $3 million, this program would be a cost-effective aid in the Nation's race to outpace our refuse production. Each $100,000 grant can support development of new methods to separate, collect, reuse, market, or produce goods with recycled materials.

This grant program will be authorized for 4 years, and so that the Congress and the Nation can benefit from the results of these grants, the recipients must report back to EPA and EPA to Congress. This necessary feedback will assist us as we work toward a national recycling policy in the future.

Let's put American ingenuity to work. I urge my colleagues to support this Recycling Initiatives Grant Act.

LEGISLATION TO AMEND SECTION 306 OF THE TRADE ACT

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation which provides for the timely and effective review of the extent to which foreign countries are complying with bilateral trade agreements with the United States. I am pleased that my colleagues, LES AUCOIN, NANCY JOHNSON, and DICK SCHULZE have agreed to be original cosponsors of this legislation.

Chapter I of title III of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended in 1988, includes a provision that gives the U.S. Trade Representative discretionary authority to monitor implementation of each trade agreement entered into by the United States. Under this existing provision, section 306, if the Trade Representative exerts this discretionary authority, conducts a review, and concludes that a foreign country is not satisfactorily implementing a trade agreement, the Trade Representative is required to determine what further action will be taken under the authority granted under section 301 of the act.

Unfortunately, the current review process simply does not ensure adequate oversight of existing bilateral trade agreements. The review process needs to be opened up, so that our industries, who are directly impacted by these trade agreements, have access to the review process, have the right to petition their government, and can call attention to wrongdoing on the part of our trading partners. The absence of effective review procedures encourages foreign countries to enter into agreements with the United States and then disregard the commitments which were made.

The legislation which I am introducing today seeks to remedy this problem by amending section 306 of the Trade Act to allow an interested party to request, at certain intervals, a review of any existing bilateral trade agreement. Under the terms of my legislation, an interested party is defined as an individual that has a significant economic interest that has been adversely affected by the failure of a foreign country to comply with the terms of a trade agreement. Upon receipt of a written request for review, the Trade Representative would have 90 days to review whether or not a foreign country was complying with the terms of the appropriate trade agreement. In conducting their review, the Trade Representative is directed to take into account a number of factors including, among others, structural policies and tariff or nontariff barriers which may have contributed directly or indirectly to noncompliance with the terms of the trade agreement. The Trade Representative is also authorized to consult with the Secretaries of Commerce and Agriculture, with the U.S. International Trade Commission, and to receive public comment. Last, under this legislation, the Trade Representative will continue to have the discretionary authority to conduct reviews of existing trade agreements provided for under section 306.

These modifications will introduce a degree of accountability to our trade laws. The message is simple: If our trading partners agree to certain measures, they should be held accountable if they fail to abide by their commitments. Indeed, this proposition was clearly embodied in the section 301 process enacted by Congress in 1988. By adopting these provisions, Congress explicitly acknowledged that violations of trade agreements are unjustifiable, and are deserving of our attention. The legislation I am introducing today completes the process we formulated in 1988, so that trade agreements will have meaning, that there will be accountability and oversight in the process of implementing these very agreements.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is designed to ensure that our trading partners do not take advantage of the United States. It does not redefine what foreign trade practices are unfair. Failure to comply with a trade agreement cannot be construed to be a fair trading practice. If we are not interested in exerting oversight of these trade agreements, perhaps we ought to think about taking away the Trade Representative's authority to enter into these agreements. We simply invite our trading partners to mouth the right words, but do nothing to require them to back up these words with specific actions. Such a trade policy does a real disservice to this country, and requires our immediate attention.

HONORING THE BETHESDA-CHEVY CHASE RESCUE SQUAD

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, President Bush observed National Volunteer Week and the 50th anniversary of the volunteer Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad with a visit to the squad's station in Bethesda, MD, on April 25. I was delighted to accompany the President to the rescue squad with Congressman CURT WELDON, chairman of the Congressional Fire Services Caucus and to congratulate the members of the squad, with a special congratulations to President George Giebel and Chief David S. Dwyer.

These volunteers, who sacrifice their time and put themselves at risk daily for their community, deserve as much recognition as we can give to them as beneficiaries of their efforts. Their services have proven to be indispensable to the citizens of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area as the members of the rescue squad have risen above and beyond the call of their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to the selfless efforts of the members of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad and salute them for their devoted and compassionate efforts on behalf of Montgomery County, MD.

ON BEHALF OF THE CALIFORNIA CULTURAL ASSEMBLY

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an organization that is celebrating its 10th year of exemplary community service, the California Cultural Assembly [CCA]. For the past 10 years, this organization has served as the only nonprofit arts presenter in the Sacramento region which successfully and consistently cultivates multiethnic audiences in the thousands.

The primary goal of CCA has been to break down the barriers of racism and prejudice within the Sacramento region. To achieve these ends, the organization has presented quality multicultural artistic and educational programs that instill self-esteem and pride among ethnic minorities.

Under founder Robbin Ware, the California Cultural Assembly has pioneered several programs and collaborations for Sacramento audiences to enjoy. For example, CCA was the founder and presenter of the first multicultural music concert at Oak Park and the first nonprofit organization to present jazz clinics and concerts for students of area high schools and community colleges. Furthermore, CCA is the publisher of the area's only comprehensive yearly multicultural arts calendar with monthly listings of programs produced by large and small nonprofit arts and cultural organizations.

Throughout its 10 years of service, CCA has provided a multitude of culturally sensitive and innovative artistic and educational programs which include: a 30-day Smithsonian Exhibit at the Crocker Art Museum entitled "Black Women: Achievement Against the Odds" in 1980; Cultural Renaissance Festivals in several area malls in 1982 and 1983; a 1984 exhibit displayed at the State Capitol Rotunda entitled "Women in American History: a Profile of black, white, Hispanic, Asian, and Native American women"; and annual jazz festivals that began in 1984 and are held in parks throughout the area.

This year, CCA has continued its tradition of excellent community programing with events such as the First Annual Symphony/Gospel Spectacular, a collaboration with the Sacramento Symphony, which was established to honor the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King and Sacramento's First Annual Multi-Cultural Drum and Percussion Festival.

Mr. Speaker, I commend The California Cultural Assembly for providing the Sacramento region with outstanding artistic and cultural programs, and for providing the people of Sacramento a means to celebrate the tremendous cultural and artistic legacies of many cultures.

PRESIDENT BUSH AWARDS NORTHWEST PILOT PROJECT VOLUNTEERS

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to announce the Northwest Pilot Project Access to the Arts Program was selected for a 1990 President's Volunteer Action Award. There were 2,000 nominations from across the country. They were chosen as one of 16 agencies that will be recognized at a White House luncheon with President Bush on April 27, during National Volunteer Week.

The Northwest Pilot Project Access to the Arts Program provides the opportunity for low-income elderly to attend cultural events. Having served as the co-director of the Gray Panthers for many years, and with my continued commitment helping seniors abstain better access to cost-effective quality health care, I realize the importance of senior programs. It is very exciting that I have the opportunity to recognize this program today.

This organization has provided elderly support services for over 20 years and averages transportation for over 350 people annually. The arts program was introduced approximately 2 years ago, following a survey which showed there was an interest to attend cultural events among the elderly living in downtown Portland. Program volunteers solicit tickets from performing arts groups and arrange transportation for the elderly.

In addition to obtaining tickets and transporting the elderly, they are responsible for collecting one-third of their funding. They are funded by three different sources, all contributing one-third of the total budget. The volunteers raise money through fundraising events and individual contributions. The remaining two-thirds is shared by the United Way and Multnomah County. I would also like to commend these two organizations for their support.

The President's Award is the most prestigious award presented for volunteer service. Established in 1982 to focus public attention on our Nation's volunteers, award recipients are honored for their own work and as representatives of volunteers nationwide. I would like to take a moment to recognize the awards program cosponsors for making this program possible.

The cosponsors are Volunteer—The National Center, a private nonprofit support organization, and ACTION, the Federal agency. These two volunteer groups work in cooperation with the White House Office of National Service.

I am very proud to offer my congratulations to the northwest pilot project. I ask my colleagues to join me in giving much-deserved recognition to the recipients of the President's awards, and to the many volunteers across the country.

We have a great tradition of volunteer programs which have contributed to the quality and diversity of our society. Let this award and its recipients be an example for us, of the good that results from giving.

REMEMBER EXERCISE TIGER

HON. JIM SLATTERY

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, on April 28, 1944, 30,000 servicemen left the shore of Truto, England, on LST Troopcarriers to participate in a practice for the D-Day invasion, "Exercise Tiger." The troopcarriers were attacked by German E-Boats during the mock invasion and 749 servicemen lost their lives when three of the troopcarriers sank. James Oliver Cottrell, the brother of Evelyn Brannock of Perry, KS, was one of the 749 servicemen who lost their lives in service to our country during the mock invasion. I ask that we remember the sacrifices of these brave Americans and their families this Saturday, the 46th anniversary of "Exercise Tiger."

I would like to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter I received from Evelyn Brannock. I was deeply touched by the letter and the obvious love Evelyn has for her departed brother and her country. In addition, I would like to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD articles from the Topeka Capital-Journal and from the Plymouth, England, Evening Herald, which describe "Exercise Tiger" and efforts to honor those who gave their lives for our country.

PERRY, KS,
September 26, 1989.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SLATTERY: Enclosed please find material taken from text to enlighten you on "Exercise Tiger".

As you have just read these articles, you know this was a rehearsal for D-Day.

My brother, James Oliver Cottrell, was one of these men who died in this pre-invasion, and his body never recovered. He was, I found out later in my search, on the LST #531.

Last year my family traveled to England to visit his memorial at Cambridge, something else the Army never disclosed to my parents. His name is on the Wall of The Tablets of the Missing in Cambridge and has been there since 1956. From there we went south to Torcross and walked along Slapton Sands. We stayed with Mr. Small and visited his monument, the Sherman Tank, and the monument the United States placed next to the tank in memory of these 749 Americans.

After returning from our trip, Mr. Small came over and stayed a week with us. At the request of many people who read the newspaper article of our trip, they wanted any information they could get on the subject. Mr. Small was key speaker, along with 13 men who survived the sinking of their ships. Much was to be learned in this meeting. (See enclosure)

I will never know for sure just how my brother died. Was he one that never got off his ship. Was he one that jumped overboard and died from the cold water. Was his body recovered, but not identified, or maybe it was identified and he is left still buried in a grave somewhere over there. Some of the English residents claim that some of the gravesites were never touched again. The not knowing is the hardest, but you learn to live with it.

I am convinced, along with many others, it is not fair, it is not right, to just pretend this never happened. Due to this listed as classified information and not declassified until 1972, this was passed over in our history books in our schools. My brother and 748 other American's like him, deserve the proper recognition they so rightly deserve. They died defending our Country so we may have a better and safer place to live.

So lets make a wrong, right, by doing what the State of Massachusetts did, file this into legislation, asking for annual observance of "Exercise Tiger" Day for the State of Kansas, on April 28th, and have this signed into law by our Governor Hayden.

Respectfully,

EVELYN BRANNOCK.

SOLDIER TO RECEIVE FAREWELL, FINALLY

(By Arron van Curen)

PERRY—A Perry family will get a chance in May to say goodbye to a brother killed in World War II.

The last time the Cottrell family said goodby to James Oliver Cottrell, then 20, he was boarding a train. Six months later he died in a torpedo attack in the English Channel.

"At that point there wasn't much to it because they never dreamed of him not coming back," said Ron Brannock, who later married Oliver's sister, Evelyn.

But Oliver did not come back. Not even his remains were returned from a watery battle site south of England.

And were it not for the campaign of an English beachcomber and similar efforts by Evelyn Brannock, the family might never have known how and why Oliver died.

Four of Cottrell's brothers and sisters and three of their spouses will travel to England in May to meet with this beachcomber and learn more about Operation Tiger, a practice run for the D-day invasion that led to the death of Cottrell and 748 other Americans.

Cottrell was one of 30,000 men brought to the southern coast of England to practice for the invasion of Normandy, France.

A crescent-shaped English beach called Slapton Sands is similar to Utah Beach, which was to be an invasion site at Normandy.

During an offshore maneuver in early morning darkness, nine German E-boats torpedoed three American troop ships. Two hours later, two of the ships had sunk.

To protect the secrecy of the invasion, then just six weeks away, the U.S. military offered no explanation when hundreds of death notices arrived at American homes shortly after April 28, 1944. Many of those notices came to eastern Kansas and western Missouri.

So the Cottrells knew only that their son and brother was missing in action and presumed dead.

"The folks got a telegram that came through the depot in Perry. That was the first they heard he was missing," Evelyn Brannock said.

In 1948, U.S. Army Adjutant General Edward F. Witsell wrote the Cottrells saying, "Your son was killed in action while aboard an LST engaged in preinvasion maneuvers." He wrote that the LST—an amphibious landing craft—had been attacked by German E-boats but offered no other details.

The Cottrells heard nothing more from the U.S. Army.

The soldiers' deaths might have remained unexplained and unheralded were it not for 16 years of effort by Ken Small, an English innkeeper and beachcomber who became curious when he began to find jewelry and buttons buried at Slapton Sands.

Small badgered the Pentagon and American politicians until they revealed details of the incident.

The troops paticipating in Operation Tiger were aboard amphibious landing craft off Slapton Sands when nine German E-boats slipped through defensive lines and launched torpedoes into three ships.

The ships sank quickly, trapping hundreds.

More dead were found the next morning, floating upside down in the water because they had donned life vests incorrectly.

Even more died because confused American troops had fired on their own ships.

British aircraft had reportedly seen the German boats enter the area before the attack, but word did not reach the American ships.

The disaster was of such proportion and was considered to be such a blunder that it nearly led to cancelation of the D-day invasion, according to recent wire service reports. It was hushed up for the duration of the war and remained an official secret until last year.

Small's effort eventually led the U.S. Congress to recognize the men who died, and several private military groups in this country installed a commemorative plaque on Nov. 15, 1987.

News coverage of the Nov. 15 ceremony told many Americans the story of Operation Tiger, and it was one that most had never heard.

The Cottrells, who still live in and around Perry, were among the Americans who knew nothing of the tragedy, but they took special interest when they realized that Oliver Cottrell was killed there.

Evelyn Brannock clipped her first newspaper article about Operation Tiger in October 1987, and since has become an expert on the incident that killed her brother.

"I just wanted to know more about him. Maybe it would make me closer to him," she said.

She wrote to Small and other people named in news stories and became part of a group researching the incident.

"I wanted to expose this to more of the American people—people like myself who had loved ones who were killed," she said.

When she came across clippings that told of mass burials of soldiers in unmarked graves, she wrote to federal officials, including Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., to see which ship he was on.

Though rumors of a mass grave in an English sheep field persist, Army historians have assured Brannock that all soldiers' remains were exhumed.

They also have denied rumors that swimming American soldiers were captured by the German subs.

Through the research, Brannock learned that Oliver Cottrell's name is included on The Tablets of the Missing, a memorial to missing American soldiers at the American Cemetery at Cambridge, England.

"My parents never knew their son's name was on that wall, but it has been there since 1956," she said.

When Brannock and her family travel to England on May 23, they will meet with Small and with Manny Rubin, a survivor of Operation Tiger who now lives near Slapton Sands.

They will spend three days of a seven-day tour of France and England visiting the American Cemetery and Slapton Sands.

They plan to lay flowers at both memorials, Brannock said.

Family members taking the trip with the Brannocks will be a sister, Edith Newell, of Oskaloosa; a brother, Donald Cottrell and his wife Nova, both of rural Perry; and a second brother, Elmer Cottrell Jr. and his wife Ardell, both of rural Perry.

SALUTE TO "FORGOTTEN" WAR DEAD

(By Steve Brumwell)

On a crisp, sunny spring morning the golden bar of Slapton Sands is the very epitome of South Devon tranquility.

But 45 years ago, on just such a morning, that same beach was covered with the bodies of hundreds of young American Servicemen.

They were the victims of one of the worst disasters in America military history—Exercise Tiger.

Yesterday, some of the survivors made a poignant pilgrimage to the Devon coast on the anniversary of what proved to be a bloody curtain-raiser for D-Day.

The veterans were taken to Slapton aboard the Royal Navy destroyer HMS Bristol, and stood in silence on the flight decks as a wreath was cast into the sea.

As two Royal Marine buglers played Last Post, it was a moment to look over the beach to the rolling hills, and shed a tear or two.

For many years the true story of what happened off the Devon and Dorset coast on April 27-28, 1944, lived only in snippets of folk memory—a ghastly flotsam of corpses amidst the seaweed, and bodies buried in the fields.

FORGOT

It is only recently that a small band of writers have probed the secrets of Exercise Tiger.

Freelance writer Nigel Lewis first heard about the episode in September, 1987, and has now produced a book "Channel Firing: The Tragedy of Exercise Tiger" which exposes one of the most extensive cover-ups in the Second World War.

Mr. Lewis said: "It was arguably the biggest screw-up in American military history. "It was a hell of a story and I had never heard of it before. Eisenhower never even mentioned Exercise Tiger in his memoirs, but if America forgot, the people of Devon and Dorset remembered."

Mr. Lewis believes that up to 1,200 men died in a two-day training exercise because of a succession of blunders.

During the first phase, troops hit the beach at Slapton in a rehearsal for the Normandy landings.

A mis-timed barrage by American and British ships peppered the beach with live rounds, transforming the "mock" beachhead into grim reality.

TORPEDOES

The morning was bad, but the night brought worse. A convoy of eight landing craft, packed with GIs, made a leisurely progress along the coast before turning in a gigantic question mark in Lyme Bay.

They were protected by a single Royal Navy corvette, HMS Azalea, and when a prowling pack of German E-boats chanced on the convoy, the carnage began.

As torpedoes ripped into the lumbering landing craft many Americans were killed outright, or tipped into the sea where they died of exposure.

On the morning of April 28, Joseph McCann, of Landing Ship (Tanks) 515—just 15 years old—was in the first small boat looking for survivors.

He said: "I found a lot of my friends dead. It was a morning much like this. But the higher the sun rose, the sicker I got."

The young sailor had to leave the dead to the sea and concentrate on rescuing the living.

BEAUTIFUL

He said: "I never really thought my dead friends were at peace. After this ceremony I feel they have been put to rest at last."

Mr. McCann added: "I was told by an officer that morning to shut my mouth and never talk about what had happened. I guess it was just too close to Normandy. I only told my wife about it in 1985."

Captain of LST 515 was John Doyle, 72, of Montana. After casting the wreath on the still waters of Start Bay he said: "The ceremony was beautiful. It certainly meant a lot to me."

Dr. Eugene Eckstam of Wisconsin, was a 25-year-old medical officer abroad LST 507 when the craft was struck amidships by a torpedo. About half the 500 men on board died.

He said: "Most deaths were due to the cold water. When I was picked up three hours later I was only half conscious. I had been worried about getting strafed as we had heard of Germans machine-gunning survivors."

For many of the veterans the ceremony was the first opportunity to speak out about the tragedy and revisit the deceptively calm coastline where their young lives were so nearly ended 45 years ago.

CRITICISM OF THE MINE, SAFETY AND HEALTH ADMINISTRATION'S DISREGARD FOR MINER'S SAFETY

HON. CARL C. PERKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have been very concerned about the recent efforts by MSHA to revise and weaken the rules covering the ventilation of mines. I attended the Health and Safety Subcommittee meeting today that was taking testimony from MSHA officials concerning this issue. I was allowed to make a statement at this hearing and I would like to share that statement with the rest of the House of Representatives:

REMARKS BY HON. CARL C. PERKINS

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this hearing today and want to congratulate you and the other committee members of the subcommittee for their leadership in providing credible oversight of this and other critical agencies.

I know that this hearing is intended to touch on a wide variety of issues that are presently confronting the committee and MSHA. I look forward to hearing the testimony and participating in the process. I would like to take just a few minutes of the subcommittee's time and direct its attention to the most recent controversy surrounding MSHA, the reversal of ventilation safety standards.

My field office in Pikeville, KY, was recently visited by a large group of coal miners who were shocked at the fact that MSHA had decided to move ahead with the revised rule making process surrounding the ventilation issue. This process is moving without any attempt to provide field hearings that allow the miners to voice their concerns to the administrators.

But aside from the lack of input that is being allowed the saddest part of all of this is that MSHA is going to ignore all of the warnings about the hazards of belt driven ventilation. I ask myself why does this agency choose to ignore more than 20 years of evidence to the contrary, why do they choose to ignore the criticisms of the national institute for occupational safety and health in the United States? The only answer that I keep coming back to is that they really do not care about the safety of today's coal miners.

When we have NIOSH stating that the use of belt air would raise the level of respirable dust in the mines—increasing miners' risk of contracting black lung and other respiratory diseases and add to the risk of fires and explosions by stirring up more float coal dust, I expect MSHA to listen and not ignore the warnings.

I just chaired a Black Lung Program oversight hearing in Prestonsburg, KY, this past Friday and see no reason to allow anyone to increase the number of people that must go through this particular misery of broken bodies and broken promises. The restrictions that are proposed to be weakened are ones that were fought for by the miners. Some miners even paid the highest possible price, their own lives, as a result of working in mines that had inadequate or dangerous ventilation systems.

I received a letter telling me not to worry since no mine in my district had requested to use the belt driven air system, yet. What am I supposed to do, ignore the same evidence that MSHA has and turn my back on the miners that are working in the mines approved for belt air? That would simply be unconscionable and I refuse to do that.

As I look over the list of changes and the increased dangers that will result I am simply astonished at the risks that MSHA is forcing on the miners. Phrases like "increases the risk of spreading fire to working areas", "increases the risk of methane ignitions and explosions", "increases the risk of mine explosions", "increases the risk of miners being trapped" are phrases I thought we were moving away from and not toward.

When MSHA was created it was with the intention of improving the working conditions and the health of the miners. To MSHA's credit there have been improvements in the mines over the last 20 years. But the reversal of these provisions and procedures will simply return us to a time when health hazards and mine explosions were not so unusual. This is a misguided policy aimed at satisfying the economic bottom line. I hope that this subcommittee continues to press MSHA about this and that you insist that such abuse of rule making power will not be tolerated.

I thank the subcommittee for your time and patience and appreciate your invitation to set in on this hearing.

TRIBUTE TO C.T. VIVIAN

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to C.T. Vivian who will be the keynote speaker at a dinner on May 8, 1990 sponsored by the Youngstown Area Urban League. Mr. Vivian is a long time civil rights leader and coworker of the late Martin Luther King Jr. He has been in the forefront of the struggle for racial equality and a strategist of the civil rights movement. For more than three decades Mr. Vivian has been working to bring attention to the plight of black America and the disadvantaged.

Mr. Vivian has held many positions including national director of affiliates, in which he served on Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s executive staff, director of a prototype of Upward Bound in Alabama, director of the Ford Fellowship Program and the president for the Black Center for Strategy and Community Development. These are just a few of the positions Mr. Vivian has held. His list of contributions to organizations geared to community development and racial equality is exceptional.

C.T. Vivian has also been extremely active on the lecture circuit. He has lectured in Africa, Japan, Israel, Holland, and the Philippines. He is also an accomplished writer. His book "Black Power and the American Myth" is a best selling, nonfiction analysis of human dynamics in the process of black/white interaction. His wife Octavia Geans Vivian is also an accomplished writer who has written the only biography of Mrs. Martin Luther King which is titled "Coretta." Mr. Vivian has been featured in a variety of films and publications, including "Marquis Who's Who in America," "1,000 Successful Blacks: The Ebony Success Library"—Vol. 1, "Odyssey: A Journey Through Black America," "From Montgomery to Memphis"—A full length film about the Dr. Martin Luther King, "Unearthing Seeds of Fire: The Idea of Highlander," and "The Trouble I've Seen."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize C.T. Vivian for the many contributions he has made in the fight against racial discrimination and the struggle to make our communities a better place. He has helped lead the fight against racism and sexism and has worked tirelessly to improve our communities and our country. He is a true inspiration to all.

HONORING JOSEPH O'DWYER

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man, who for the past 39 years has dedicated his life to education. Joseph O'Dwyer is the headmaster of the Intermediate School in Killorglin, County Kerry, Ireland, which is the oldest coeducational secondary school in Ireland.

I have very good reason, Mr. Speaker, for inserting this statement into the RECORD today. The Cahillane Irish/American Scholarship Fund is being set up by a hard-working committee in the Northampton, MA, on behalf of an outstanding individual, Jim Cahillane. The purpose of this scholarship is to help students not only from Northampton, but for students in Killorglin as well. I am pleased to inform you, Mr. Speaker that Joseph O'Dwyer was an honored guest in my First Congressional District, as they dedicated the public fund-raising program for the new scholarship fund.

Founded in 1909, the Intermediate School was a converted library. Early in 1984, Joseph began to make plans for a new facility. It was through his hard work and perseverance that this new facility is currently in operation.

The school provides a comprehensive education for an area in Ireland where the population is relatively poor. The funding for the new school was not easy to get. However, Joseph was able to find it. He initiated a self-help program among secondary voluntary schools, whereby every school would contribute 100 pounds in any given year to help the poorest school to initiate a building project. This program proved to be very beneficial to Joseph's school. In fact, the Intermediate School received over 15,000 pounds for its project.

Mr. Speaker, in 1951, Joseph O'Dwyer succeeded his father, John O'Dwyer, as headmaster of the Intermediate School. In his 39 years of service to the field of education, Joseph has made a lasting impact on the many students that have attended his school. Through such programs with schools in Northern Ireland, Joseph has tried to foster new relationships and attitudes. This dedication to not only education, but to peace as well, should not go without recognition.

Without Joseph O'Dwyer, the new Intermediate School built on 6 acres of land, would probably not be flourishing today. The school provides education to over 600 students from families who are relatively dependent on social and economic assistance. These students are given the opportunity to help themselves and the local community. Through its well-rounded education, students have developed their talents and with respect to their individuality, the students have gone on to be responsible citizens of their country.

The development of the new school was a vital part of the development in the community of Killorglin. Joseph O'Dwyer has just about single-handedly brought the new school to Killorglin. In recognition of his tremendous support and hard work for education and peace, I salute Joseph O'Dwyer and wish the Cahillane Irish/American Scholarship fund many years of success.

THE CORNER OF BEAVER AND LEE IS CHANGED

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, recently I had the pleasure of being in Jacksonville, FL for the cutting of the ribbon of the Center for Achievement. The door was opened and many were there to acclaim this ancient location for a modern up-beat transition for those living in the neighborhood. Many people contributed to the re-doing of the old building, including the taxpayers of the United States, but Mrs. Gertrude Peele deserves special attention and she gets it in the enclosed article from the Florida Times-Union, of March 15. It is an inspiring story.

[From the Florida Times-Union, Mar. 15, 1990]

WE CAN'T JUST SIT HERE

SHE WON'T LET FEAR, CRIME TAKE HER STREETS AWAY

(By Ann Hyman)

His name is Tony. He is 19 years old. Things aren't going right for him in Jacksonville. He can't find work. He wants to get back in the Job Corps, go to North Carolina, learn to be a carpenter.

Somebody tells him that Women in Community Service Inc. can help him.

Then, they tell him that WICS is at 927 W. Beaver St.

"He was told to come to me, that I could help him—but, he was also told it's a very dangerous neighborhood. That was enough to make the young man turn around, but he didn't turn around. Because of the way he felt about where he wanted to go in life, he came on anyway. Nothing happened to that young man," said Gertrude Peele.

Mrs. Peele is godmother of 927 W. Beaver St., a cramped walkup where WICS—an organization that works with people, 16-21, who are seeking educational or vocational opportunities—and the Jacksonville chapter of the National Council of Negro Women Inc. share space.

Mrs. Peele knows about streets that are mean and dangerous. She knows the power of fear.

But, she is determined that fear won't win.

"Sometimes we build ourselves up with so much fear that fear becomes a barrier. We can't just sit here and stop doing because of the fear of crime and drugs. If that's the case, then the drug dealers and the criminals will completely engulf the whole system," she says.

She is soft-spoken, but her words are tempered steel.

Eleanor Roosevelt said that it is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness, Gertrude Peele got the word.

"I have to move beyond fear. We have to move through fear. How do I do it? I just keep moving. I just travel on my knees, if you want to know the truth. I pray and I keep moving."

Her second-story office looks out on a vacant lot. It's fenced, the weeds and bushes that push through the scrabbly dirt are trimmed back.

But, two years ago, there was no fence and the lot was overgrown and Mrs. Peele wondered why she saw so many small children hidden in the bushes. She watched what was happening, next door to her, and she realized that prostitutes were using the vacant lot as if it were a day-care center.

And, she saw something else.

The rundown vacant building at the corner of Beaver and Lee streets was too busy for an empty building.

Drugs and sex were for sale at the back door.

"It looked like business was booming every day," Mrs. Peele said.

Kids in the bushes. Dealers and users and prostitutes moving around in the derelict building like shadows casting more fear, more despair into the rundown neighborhood.

Mrs. Peele knew she had to light a candle.

"I remembered my grandmother who was certainly my mentor and she used to sing a song, "Brighten the Corner Where You Are." To me, it was personal. If the corner doesn't look like what I feel it should be, then it's up to me to create some idea to change it."

She bought the building and leased it to the National Council of Negro Women for $1 a year. The Department of Housing and Urban Development paid for the renovation.

The gargantuan rats that once tunneled through the place are gone. The dealers, the users, the hookers are gone.

At 10 a.m. Saturday, the Center of Achievement will be dedicated to serving the community, and the little building at the corner of Beaver and Lee will become part of the solution, rather than part of the problem.

Monday, it's down to business when a youth leadership training institute begins at 8:30 a.m.

Three groups will operate from the building—the National Council of Negro Women, WICS and Child Watch Partnership of Jacksonville, a child advocacy program. Under the umbrella of those three organizations, 29 programs are operated, as varied as passing out bags of groceries from a little food pantry to getting a young person signed up for the Job Corps.

"I expect it to become a mecca for women, youth and children, not necessarily just poor people. It is for people, affluent or poor, black or white, male or female. Sometimes affluent people have needs that can be so great and they have nobody to talk to about it. They are just as bad off as the poor person," she said. "Sometimes families are faced with what they think is a major problem, but they just don't know who to contact."

The Center of Achievement will help people find their way through red tape—and, when appropriate, it will simply go 'round the other way rather than bother with red tape.

"I think of a woman dying of AIDS. All she needed was a cold drink of water, but she didn't have a refrigerator. It took only three telephone calls to find someone with a refrigerator for that woman and to have it delivered to her house," Mrs. Peele recalled.

Gertrude Peele has a reputation for getting things done—and, she gets things done through conciliation, not intimidation.

"She's absolutely phenomenal. She's very special," said Carol Baumer, director of development with the Gateway Girl Scouts Council. "She's worked in some very difficult situations and she brings hope. I think that's of such value. She begins to turn projects around and makes people realize they can work together and solutions can be found and problems solved."

Ms. Baumer worked with Mrs. Peele in 1979 when Ms. Baumer was on the executive committee of the Junior League of Jacksonville. The League, the National Council of Jewish Women and the National Council of Negro Women worked together to establish the guardian ad litem program, a child's advocacy program operated through the courts.

"I've worked with her on many programs. She's a true champion for children's rights. Plus, she's so wonderful at pulling people together and at taking a step back and listening to what other people are saying."

Julia W. Taylor, director of development at the University of North Florida, admires Mrs. Peele's ability to look at any issue in all its implications. She has worked with Mrs. Peele on a number of projects, particularly concerned with children's advocacy.

"She's not going to just look out for the National Council of Negro Women. She goes beyond that. She's always very responsive, very pleasant and she gets things done. She's consistent. And, she operates in a national arena, too. She's on the national boards of many organizations," Ms. Taylor said.

Helene Coleman recalls working with Mrs. Peele on a presentation that examined apartheid—and had, as well, an agenda to get Jacksonville's Jewish and black communities talking at a time when the relationship was strained.

The program was sponsored by the National Council of Negro Women and the National Council of Jewish Women and the National Council of Christians and Jews.

"We had the most overwhelming crowd of people to come across the river on a Sunday afternoon to the Jewish Temple. It was really a very moving experience. It was a cementing of relationships."

Cement is a building material.

That's how Mrs. Peele sees her work—she's in the building trade.

"I'm hoping we don't face another century like the one we're leaving now," she says. "Maybe as we approach the 21st century, the community will realize that we must come together and we must make an effort to change."

The corner of Beaver and Lee is changed.

And, in a couple of weeks, Tony will be on his way to North Carolina to learn to be a carpenter.

GIVING OUR STUDENTS THE WORLD

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the lack of adequate funding for many of today's college students, it is a pleasure to acknowledge an event that will provide college grants for deserving students.

On Thursday, May 10, 1990, Mr. Paul W. Bell, superintendent of schools in the Dade County Public School System, will be hosting the third annual Superintendent's Scholarship Ball. The theme of the ball is "Giving our Students the World," an appropriate title for such a worthy event. Being held at the Radisson Centre in Miami, the ball will benefit the College Assistance Program.

The cochairmen of the ball are Charles A. Citrin and R. Ray Goode. The executive committee members are Richardo H. Arlain, Richard I. Blinderman, Charles Crispin, Guarione M. Diaz, Daniel D. Dolan, Albert Dotson, T. Willard Fair, Howard Gary, Rabbi Gary Glickstein, Maritza Gomez, and Seth Gordon.

Also on the executive committee are Wilfredo Gort, Leopoldo E. Guzman, George Firestone, Annette Katz, Brenda Kinzig, Barry Kutun, Joseph P. Mastrucci, Phyllis Miller, Jose R. Pagan, Jr., John E. Porta, Henry Raattama, Jr., Gerald K. Schwartz, Darryl Sharpton, Lester Simon, Harry B. Smith, Marzell Smith, Joseph Solary, Patrick Tornillo, Richard J. Weiss, and David Wind.

It is imperative that we recognize the importance of education and the numerous benefits an education brings. There is a wonderful quote pertaining to students on the invitation to the Superintendent's Scholarship Ball, "* * * we can open up the world to them. They will do the rest."

HOW TO REACH FULL EMPLOYMENT AND BALANCED GROWTH

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, as the House embarks on the debate which determines the spending and revenue priorities of the Federal Government, I am struck by the underlying cynicism which seems to pervade our discussions.

As British playwright and poet Oscar Wilde once said, "A cynic is a man who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing."

We spend our time talking about the costs of carrying so much debt. We moan about mortgaging our future. We focus on price tags instead of looking at the value of certain investments which can reap quality, measurable benefits.

The Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act is 12 years old. It requires us to debate the economic goals and assumptions underlying the budget resolution. I urge my colleagues to break from the yoke of cynicism that ties you to caring only about balancing the almighty dollar at the bottom of a ledger.

Look instead at what can be achieved with some of those dollars; look at how investments in education, training, health care, nutrition, and housing and economic development, can increase the standard of living for our people, strengthen our businesses, and enhance our international competitiveness. Look at what the Federal Government can do to promote better jobs, education, and equal opportunity.

We must change our whole orientation. Stop worshipping at the altar of austerity and instead praise investing to meet national priorities.

Some might say such talk is pie in the sky; great rhetoric but surely not practical in achievement. But think small and restricted, and you will continue to get miniscule results.

I have been in public service for over 50 years, and I have seen many swings of the philosophical and ideological pendulum. The decade of the 80's was of restricted horizons. We fell behind on virtually every economic front. While the early years were characterized by deep recession, the later years were spent making up for the lost ground. For all intents and purposes, the end result has been that we've just about maintained the status quo. We have not advanced, we have not improved at a time when our competitors have made great strides.

The last decade of this century, then, is our final opportunity to forge ahead. Three-percent GNP growth rates are just not going to do it. Because we have not followed a full-employment and balanced growth path, we have forfeited hundreds of billions of dollars in total national production. Because we have not adequately educated nor trained our people, we have brought about losses in incomes for families, businesses, and farmers. This, of course, results in deficient Government revenues at every level.

If we want to solve our deficit problems, we need to invest in areas which will increase the productivity of the work force that keeps our economy going.

We must use the Federal budget as a tool for change. We must fully fund successful, cost-effective programs like Head Start preschool education, chapter one compensatory education, and expanded grants for postsecondary education. We must strengthen and expand teacher training, increase efforts to better teach our kids the math and science they need to know in our ever increasingly complex technological world. We must pass and then fund a national child care policy, so that parents can find and keep productive employment. We must strengthen and then expand our job training efforts.

This debate is about setting goals and a timetable for full employment and balanced growth. The goals and assumptions underlying the budget resolution should be based on prioritizing our spending and revenue levels to meet the national needs our great Nation demands as we enter the next century.

TRIBUTE TO THE ATHLETIC BOYS' CLUB

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in tribute of an organization which, for the past 40 years, has given the youth of the North St. Louis County area the opportunity to excel on the athletic field. On Saturday, April 28, the St. Ann's Athletic Boys' Club will commence its 40th season, once again adding to the generations who have benefited from this outstanding organization.

The Athletic Boys' Club, known locally as ABC, is an all-volunteer, not-for-profit organization which exists only through the dedication of a group of hard-working adults. Over the years the club has built up an impressive athletic facility, replete with five athletic fields and a large fieldhouse and gym. Years ago, I brought junior football teams from Kirkwood to ABC. We were always welcomed with the same enthusiasm and spirit that exists today at ABC. Children from age 4 through 18 are taught to play baseball, softball, basketball, football, wrestling, soccer, and boxing. And even though the club focuses on athletic excellence, no aspiring athlete is ever cut from any team; there are no tryouts, for the men and women who run the club realize that every child, regardless of ability, deserves the chance to benefit from all of the gifts that come with sports. Several well-known athletes began with the club, most notably major league baseball players Ron Hunt and Jerry Reuss, and the former NBA player and Mizzou All-American, Steve Stipanovich, among others.

I am confident that the next 40 years will see the ABC continue to grow and prosper, while never straying from the original community spirit upon which it was founded.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that there are many of us in this assembly who can look back to our youth with fond memories of days on the athletic field, and the lessons, discipline, and sheer joy that we derived from them. Perhaps some of these youngsters will grow up to be the athletic greats of the future. Others, no doubt, will go on to become businesspeople, doctors, lawyers, coaches, and certainly parents. Yet wherever the future finds them, it will find them better citizens for the years they spent with ABC. The gift of amateur athletics is that it gives children a sense of discipline and fair play that will be with them long after their athletic careers have ended. Today, on the occasion of the club's 40th anniversary, I ask this assembly to join me in saluting the past and present players, coaches, boosters, and parents of the Athletic Boys' Club for preparing our children for life, the greatest game in which they will ever play.

NORTH KOREAN THREAT

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the following April 26, Washington Times article correctly emphasizes that the United States must take an extremely cautious approach to reducing our troop strength in South Korea. For those Members of Congress advocating drastic cuts in our troop commitment to South Korea, this article is a must:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 25, 1990]

U.S. INTELLIGENCE UPGRADES ALERT TO NORTH KOREAN THREAT

(By Peter Almond)

A slow but continuing buildup of North Korean troops close to the demilitarized border with South Korea has prompted U.S. intelligence officials to reduce the warning time for a North Korean invasion to less than 24 hours.

The cut in warning time runs totally counter to huge increases in the amount of time the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has to prepare for an attack from Warsaw Pact nations—now nearly three months.

The short North Korean attack warning time signals the serious threat an increasingly isolated and potentially unstable North Korea poses to U.S. troops.

"We are advising to plan on zero warning time," said one intelligence official, noting that 70 percent of North Korea's 930,000-man ground force is on permanent war footing in bunkers and tunnels within 15 to 20 miles of the demilitarized zone.

The new, secret National Intelligence Estimate dropping the warning time from 48 hours to under 24 hours comes as the Pentagon plans a cutback of U.S. troops in South Korea and prepares to hand over control of ground forces to a South Korean general.

"It serves as a warning to be very, very careful about any changes in our military commitments to South Korea," said one U.S. official. "This is the one place in the world where we are closest to war. With [North Korean dictator] Kim Il-sung preparing to hand over power to his son, North Korea could be dangerously unstable."

Added to North Korea's attempts to get nuclear weapons, there is rising concern that the United States must not send any wrong signals to North Korea about U.S. willingness to defend South Korea.

It was just such a wrong signal that started the Korean War 40 years ago this June, historians have concluded.

"We must be very careful we don't send any wrong signals," said Sen. John McCain, Arizona Republican and member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who visited South Korea in February. "The North Koreans have a very good, well-equipped, fanatical army. They could attack at a moment's notice."

Added Virginia Sen. John Warner, ranking Republican on the committee and an ex-Marine who served in the Korean War, "I am strongly in favor of shifting the defense burden [to South Korea] at the earliest possible date, but I want to be cautious that they [North Koreans] will not read this wrongly."

The two senators, however, appear to hold minority views in a Congress determined to cut the U.S. defense budget and shift more of the defense burden to allies.

Last week, Democratic members of the Armed Services Committee complained that Bush administration plans to cut 7,000 of the 42,500 U.S. troops in Korea over the next 2½ years and hand over military control to the South Koreans are too cautious.

Paul Wolfowitz, undersecretary of defense for policy, answered that any faster effort to cut the U.S. role "would be courting a much higher risk of war in Korea. . . . North Korea remains one of the most reckless and dangerous actors on the international scene."

But some defense officials are concerned that even the planned withdrawal pace may be too fast. They are upset that the Pentagon has failed to provide to Congress a substantial assessment of the North Korean threat.

Intelligence officials, however, say they have more difficulty finding out about the inner workings of the North Korean regime than almost anywhere else.

Kim Il-sung, the country's 78-year-old Stalinist ruler, is expected to hand over power to his son and heir, Kim Jong-il, at any time.

"Not a lot is known about that son, and what is known is not particularly comforting with regard to risk," said Rear Adm. William Pendley, director of plans for the U.S. Pacific Command.

Kim Jong-il is regarded as something of a playboy by U.S. and South Korean officials. Reportedly, he is not involved in government business. According to Maj. Gen. Jung Hwan Kim, defense attache at the South Korean Embassy, he spends most of his time watching movies and drinking. His mother died when he was very young, and his brother died in his father's swimming pool.

His questionable personality may be one reason his father is holding off a transfer of power. In some respects, said Gen. Kim, Mr. Kim can afford to wait and watch U.S. power decline in South Korea because of his firm grip on North Korea and the unlikelihood of a democratic upheaval as has occurred in Eastern Europe.

However, Gen. Kim said Mr. Kim is anxious about changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, and that both China and the Soviets are opening channels to South Korea. He could decide that it is "now or never" to reunite the country on his terms, according to U.S. officials.

"He knows that in the long term the situation favors the Republic of [South] Korea," said Gen. Kim . "I think there is some possibility of provocation in the short term. We must be ready for this."

ASBESTOS

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent article published in the Science magazine regarding the latest scientific research on asbestos.

We are all concerned about the health risks posed to us by asbestos. We are also becoming more aware of the increased costs of removing asbestos from our schools and public buildings. However, we may not be aware of the danger posed to us by the actual removal of asbestos from these buildings.

The following article discusses the different forms of asbestos and the health risks posed by them. I also have an indepth article from the January 1990 edition of Science magazine called Asbestos: Scientific Developments and Implications for Public Policy, available in my office for anyone who may be interested. I hope my colleagues will have the opportunity to read the following article and the additional material I have available, as I found it extremely interesting.

THE ASBESTOS REMOVAL FIASCO

Removal of asbestos from buildings could cost as much as $50 to $150 billion. The content of asbestos fibers in the air of buildings containing asbestos is harmlessly small and essentially the same as in outdoor air.* Asbestos in buildings, unless damaged, does not shed fibers. The removal process releases asbestos fibers which could result in more cancer in the workmen than would have resulted in the usual occupants had the asbestos been left in place.

A puzzling defect in federal legislation and regulations is an arbitrary lumping together of disparate minerals and calling the lot of them asbestos. As a result, chrysotile, a serpentine mineral, is tarred with association with the dangerous amphibole crocidolite. The two minerals differ in composition, color, shape, solubility, and persistence in human tissue. Chrysotile is a white mineral with composition $Mg_6Si_4O_{10}(OH)_8$. It tends to be soluble and to disappear in tissue. Fibers tend to be curly and excluded from the periphery of the lung. Crocidolite is blue, has the formula $Na_2(Fe^{3+})_2(Fe_{2+})_3Si_8O_{22}(OH)_2$, and is relatively insoluble. It persists in tissue. Its fibers are long, thin, and straight and penetrate narrow lung passages. About 95 percent of the asbestos in place in the United States is chrysotile.

Another puzzling defect in federal performance is failure to give sufficient weight to epidemiological experience relating to chrysotile mines in Quebec. These mines have been operating since before 1900 and have produced about 40 million tons of chrysotile. In keeping with the lax practice of earlier days, mining operations were accompanied by large amounts of chrysotile dust. Wives of miners were heavily exposed; they dwelt in homes near the mines. Four epidemiological studies of the Quebec chrysotile mining localities show that lifelong exposure of women to dust from nearby mines caused no statistically significant excess disease.

The Environmental Protection Agency has fostered the view that a single fiber can cause cancer. This hypothesis is unproven. We live on a planet on which there is an abundance of serpentine- and amphibole-containing rocks. Natural processes have been releasing fibers throughout Earth history. We breathe in about 1 million fibers a year.

Another puzzle is a lack of expeditious effort by the EPA to obtain rigorous measures of indoor and outdoor levels of fibers. It is only recently that appropriate measurements have been made using transmission electron microscopy. Use of this equipment permits identification and quantitation of asbestos fibers. One would think that in a $50- to $150-billion program the first priority would be an accurate assessment of the problem. This lack of concern about determining the facts of exposure is also reflected in EPA policies with respect to schools.

Public and private schools are required to inspect for asbestos and to inform parents if asbestos-containing materials are present. Schools must submit a plan detailing how they will deal with damaged asbestos. They can be fined $5000 per day for failing to meet deadlines. The EPA has recommended bulk sampling and visual inspection to determine a course of action rather than measurement of airborne levels of fibers.

The removal process releases fibers into the air, sometimes creating greater concentrations of them than before the abatement work began. Remedial workers are being exposed to high occupational levels. EPA itself estimates that one half of all asbestos removal projects are done improperly.

Panic has not been confined to schools. Building owners broadly have been ripping out asbestos. If anything, the rush to remove asbestos is accelerating. EPA requires that asbestos be taken out of buildings before they are demolished or renovated. In addition, some owners have noted that the presence of asbestos has made it difficult to lease, sell, or insure asbestos-containing buildings. The Environmental Contractor has published an estimate that this year $7 billion will be spent on asbestos abatement—an increase of more than 30 percent during 1989. The estimate for 1993 is $11.5 billion.

The credibility of EPA has already been damaged. Unless policies are modified, the sums wasted in abatement and litigation will proliferate. Regulations should be modified to take into account the greatly differing hazards of the various asbestiform minerals. Standards for indoor air should be based on actual measurements of types and amounts of fibers.—Philip H. Abelson

IT'S TIME FOR THE TRUTH TO BE KNOWN

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, it has been 4 years since the No. 4 nuclear reactor exploded at Chernobyl, Ukraine, causing the largest and most devastating nuclear disaster in history. Four years—and we still do not know the truth.

We do not know the true extent of the human and environmental costs of the disaster. Official Soviet counts of the number of people who have died from the Chernobyl accident range from 31 to 250; but a United States scientific panel has estimated that more than 70,000 people can be expected to die from cancers caused by Chernobyl. Nearly 2 million Ukrainian and Byelorussian children who have been affected by high radiation exposure are still not receiving adequate medical attention.

Tuesday's Washington Post reported that Soviet officials will now evacuate an additional 14,000 people from the Chernobyl region, determining that they are endangered by the radioactive dust that has piled up in the 20-mile danger zone around the plant. Time magazine recently ran disturbing photos of livestock raised in the Ukraine since the catastrophe. Those horrifying pictures of animals with severe physical deformities would seem to have come from a medical text or science fiction picture book, but they don't. They come from the farms and villages of Ukraine, and they remind us that the mysteries of Chernobyl must be uncovered.

The world can no longer tolerate the Soviets' refusal to disclose full information about the Chernobyl accident. The small Ukrainian children who still play barefoot in dirt with untold levels of radiation face an uncertain future, risking the development of thyroid tumors and even leukemia, which could cost them their lives.

Clearly, denial will not solve the tragic health and environmental problems of Chernobyl. The Soviet Government has a responsibility to its own people and to the global community to undertake a comprehensive and public study of the Chernobyl disaster, its aftermath, and the extent of radiation exposure incurred. The people of the Ukraine, Byelorussia, and indeed, the whole world, deserve to know at least this much if we are to prepare adequately for—and maybe even stave off—the long-term health and environmental problems of Chernobyl.

As the world celebrates Earth Week, let us all entreat the Soviet Union to clean up on Chernobyl. After 4 long years, it's time we learned the truth.

SUPPORT OF H.R. 3848, THE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION MONEY LAUNDERING AMENDMENTS OF 1990

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I had the pleasure of joining the President in visiting the Bethesda Chevy-Chase Rescue Squad station as he marked the 50th anniversary of the volunteer squad and the third day of National Volunteer Week. Consequently, as the House considered and passed H.R. 3848, the Depository Institution Money Laundering Amendments of 1990, I was unable to cast my vote in support of the bill.

I cosponsored H.R. 3848 immediately after its introduction. I believe that money laundering is an essential part of the drug trade. Without money launderers, drug dealers would be left without a method to dispose of their ill-gotten gains. Financial institutions which aid drug dealers have no right to remain in business. H.R. 3848 will take financial institutions which launder money out of business permanently. I am pleased that the House has adopted this bill and I am hopeful for its quick enactment into law.

ON BEHALF OF ORANGEVALE OPEN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an institution that is celebrating 100 years of educational service to its community, the Orangevale Open Elementary School. For the past 100 years, Orangevale School has served as an excellent example of how a strong commitment to literacy and the spirit of voluntarism yields exceptional results.

The school has undergone many changes during its 100 years of existence. Built in 1890, the Orangevale School served 24 children, including those of the original settlers of Orangevale. Today, approximately 370 students attend Orangevale Open School ranging from kindergarten through the sixth grade.

Throughout this time, the Orangevale Open School has always remained committed to the belief that children should be allowed to grow and develop emotionally, socially, physically, and intellectually at their own pace.

Because the ultimate goal of the school is to have children feel excited about their education and develop a sense of awe and wonder about learning, Orangevale Open provides a wonderful learning experience for its students. The school's curriculum has a solid base in the traditional subject areas, including math, english, science, and social studies. The study of these subjects is combined with the development of valuable social skills, such as interpersonal relations, selfworth, and respect for others.

Last year, Orangevale Open was presented with the California Distinguished School Award. This award is given to schools with programs that promote and maintain educational excellence.

Another unique aspect of Orangevale Open is the caliber of parental involvement. Parents attend a monthly classroom meeting to discuss class events and curriculum with the teacher. In addition, approximately 15,000 hours will be spent by parents working directly in the classrooms this year. They correct homework, help in reading groups, provide cooking activities, and present small learning centers. This helps reduce the teacher/student ratio and results in more focused learning.

Outside the classroom, parents participate in field trips, assemble sceneries for plays, and support the PTA. This spirit of volunteerism is an integral part of the school's success.

In recognition of the school's birthday, a 100-year celebration was held at the school on April 19. The celebration featured a parade, speakers, and a short ceremony commemorating the burial of a time capsule. These events were followed by the school's annual open house where all classrooms could be visited. In addition, a history exhibit, which included photographs, was on display.

Mr. Speaker, I share the pride and honor felt by the Orangevale Open Elementary School in celebrating 100 years of exemplary educational service. I applaud them for their ongoing commitment to providing a unique learning experience for the children of Orangevale.

TRIBUTE TO TIANANMEN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute today to the Tiananmen Memorial Foundation [TMF], an organization in my congressional district, which seeks to further the welfare and human rights of Chinese around the world.

The TMF has created several avenues in which to pursue its objectives. One such avenue, the Tiananmen Memorial Human Rights Defense Fund, provides legal defense and other support for Chinese individuals whose human rights have been infringed. The Tiananmen Memorial Social Science Research Fund, also a branch of TMF, provides grants and fellowships for research on the economic and political infrastructure of China. TMF founded the Tiananmen Memorial Education Fund, which provides college scholarships to educational facilities and students in rural China.

On May 7, 1990, the TMF will sponsor a "Concert for Democracy in China." I ask you to join me in applauding the Tiananmen Memorial Foundation members for their effort to promote human rights and the welfare of all Chinese individuals, and to wish them all the best for a successful concert.

AN OMINOUS REPORT ON OUT-OF-HOME CHILD CARE

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, over the years I have focused many of my legislative efforts on improving the state of our child welfare system. Today the County Welfare Directors Association of California is releasing a report, the results of which are startling. At best, the report shows the foster care system in this county does not always work. At worst, the report details an ominous trend toward foster and out-of-home care that threatens the very fiber of the American family.

The statistics in the report being released today bring to light the horrible plight faced by many children who need social services. Efforts to bolster family situations to prevent kids from being taken from their homes and put into foster care or other out-of-home placements have been mediocre at best.

In 1989, there were nearly 80,000 kids in California living in out-of-home care. Between 1985 and 1989, the number of children in out-of-home placements in California increased by an astounding 65 percent. The 235-percent jump in the number of babies in foster care during that period is even more horrifying.

Not only do these trends exact tremendous human costs, but the financial toll for States paying for out-of-home care services when in many instances preventive services could have worked is staggering. The expenditures for out-of-home care in California increased by over $310 million between 1985 and 1989. Clearly, that amount is outrageous and should serve to renew and bolster our efforts to attack the problem at the core. The children of California who find themselves in need of social services deserve much better.

This report provides us with a graphic portrayal of the strengths and weaknesses of our child welfare and foster care programs. But more importantly, it offers us an opportunity to renew our efforts to address out-of-home placement trends for children and to develop new strategies to provide real alternatives to out-of-home care.

Family preservation services can be the key to a family struggling to remain together. A greater investment in preventive services will help countless children avoid the traumatic experience of being placed in out-of-home care.

I commend the California County Welfare Directors for conducting this study and for providing us with this useful documentation of what does and does not work in foster care and child welfare services. It is now up to legislators at all levels to reassess the current systems so progress in the short term and the long term can be reached. The quality of life for thousands of young people is at stake.

MAIL REFORM LANGUISHES BY THE BOOK

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, as we look at the Postal Service's proposals to raise rates and cut services, I would encourage my colleagues to read the attached article from the Washington Post on the problems of innovation:

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 27, 1989]

MAIL REFORM LANGUISHES BY THE BOOK

(By Dana Priest and Judith Havemann)

The Columbia Heights Post Office in Northwest, Thursday afternoon, one hour before closing and seven people are in line:

To the left, a chatty clerk admires the new gold belt a friend dangles before the cloudy plastic window that separates clerks from the public. "What are you doing this weekend?" she asks. "Nothing," her buddy replies.

Next to her, a coworker weighs a brown paper package and tosses it at cart, missing on the first try.

At the third window, a customer stands tapping her yellow pickup slip on the counter as the voices of clerks in the rear office seep through the walls.

"All Services," the sign read above each window position. No service, fumed the Rev. Afred Owens, as he stomped out of line and out the door.

"You would think you would have more people. It makes me angry," he said. "Once you get to the window, you have no problem, but I never wait over 10 minutes. I leave and come back . . . . I'll try again tomorrow."

The job of window clerk—one of the most coveted among the U.S. Postal Service's 800,000 employees—provides the public a regular glimpse into the workplace culture of one of the nation's largest employers.

It is a culture that postal officials, employees outside experts agree must adapt to new technology and change the way employees interact if the service is ever to increase productivity and avoid financial disaster.

So far tradition appears to be holding on.

Although the post office has spent more than $500 million on automation in the last year, it has failed to save money or improve service, raising questions about whether its rule-bound work force can be turned around fast enough, or at all.

A semi-governmental bureaucracy organized along military hierarchical lines, postal work is characterized by strong unions, rigid work rules and powerful seniority rights operating in an antiquated factory atmosphere that attempts each day to provide service to millions of customers for about 25 cents a transaction.

"The more centralized an organization is, the more it takes a first-class upheaval to change it," said Harrison Trice, professor of organizational behavior at the School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University.

The current impetus for change is simmering discontent at all levels and an atmosphere of entrenched habits and attitudes among both management and employees.

The disciplinary and grievance procedures outlined in the largest union contract have become a main channel of workplace communication, which at times seems absurd:

In Falls Church, a letter carrier received this written warning. "On January 9, 1988, you were instructed to have your mail ready at each delivery, to take all obvious shortcuts and to walk with normal gait; not to take "little baby steps." On January 21, 1988, you failed to do so."

In Philadelphia, a new postmaster tried to reduce absenteeism by taking across-the-board action against workers absent more than three times in 12 months. When a clerk died on the job, union activists blamed his death on the postmaster's work rules. It was later determined the employee had died of a drug overdose.

In Indianapolis, the postmaster ordered injured employees who returned to work but asked for light duty to sit in a large, glass-enclosed room in the middle of the work floor and read manuals, apparently in an effort to humiliate them into returning to full duty.

In Northern Virginia, American Postal Workers Union local president John C. Clements, wrote members of his chapter last April: "I have noticed a disturbing trend developing—that desire to 'quietly' resolve out our problems . . . . At the risk of sounding hardcore, I must make the following statement: Labor peace is Management's goal, not the Union's!

The posture of the two largest postal unions regarding reforms are as different as their two leaders.

Morris "Moe" Biller, 74, president of the 370,000-member American Postal Workers Union since 1980, is an old-line fighter who has refused to let his rank and file particiapte in Employment Involvement groups that are supposed to give workers a say in problem-solving and the management of their jobs. Likewise when the post office announced that Sears Roebuck & Co. would operate mini-post offices in its stores, Biller called out the troops. Union members mailed Sears thousands of letters of protest, some of them containing torn credit cards. In July, the Postal service relented.

By contrast, Vincent Sombrotto, 66, president of the 315,000-member National Association of Letter Carriers since 1978, is known as a reformer and has embraced attempts by postal officials to involve employees directly in decision-making about their jobs.

At the local level, managers see first-hand the lack of communication between supervisors and employees. Part of the problem, said postal and union officials, is that the thousands of rules outlined in official work manuals often have replaced reasonable discussion.

"Supervisors don't know how to make decisions unless they can find it in a book," said Phillip Tabbita, special assistant to the president of the American Postal Workers Union. "Common sense goes out the window, and good relations go out the window."

Typical, said Tabbita, is the way budget-driven mandates get translated into actual work orders. For example, if headquarters decides that budgetary constraints force it to keep sick leave down to 3 percent of any work week, officials will send that directive down the line. At the end, the message goes out to supervisors on the work floor that they must keep the sick leave taken by the crew on each of their shifts within that limit. But if someone is on maternity leave and someone else has an accident, the allotment for the entire crew is used up.

Management "tortures the supervisors in the process and they torture our people," said Tabbita.

"In my opinion, the line supervisor can never stand alone and take the blame for poor relations with supervisors in September. "The blame must also be pointed toward a supervisor's boss."

Visitors to processing facilities and post offices in Alexandria, Arlington, the District, Fairfax, Montgomery and Prince George's counties, Philadelphia, San Diego and New Orleans, point up that, at its core, the post office provides factory jobs to baby boomers in a white-collar era.

The workplace, for most, is a noisy, drab assembly line whose function is to get someone else's personal belongings—the mail—in and out the door.

To get through their shift, some employees said they mentally remove themselves from their work, which comprises tasks strictly defined by the union agreement.

"I think of my business I have on the side, or what the stocks are doing," said Chuck Muller, 33, a manual sorting clerk in San Diego.". . . I'm not even here when I'm at the case [work station]."

Felicia McFail, a window clerk at the main post office in Alexandria, described as "the best in the business" by her supervisor, light up when she talks about the professional calligraphy she does on the side.

Recently a visitor clocked McFail and two other clerks at the window: 12 transactions in 15 minutes.

The pace was slower in the back room, where mail is sorted. One clerk re-sorted missorted mail. One hand-counted each piece of stamped business reply mail to refund excess postage costs to the recipient. Another attempted to trace missing packages. Another hand-stamped letters marked "insufficient address."

Work life is complicated because the Postal Service hierarchical structure is superimposed over workers who have more formal education that their predecessors and may feel they have a right to more direct control of their workday.

"Back in the 1970s, we never told the union anything other than what we were required to do," said Deputy Postmaster General Michael S. Coughlin.

The Letter Carriers' Sombrotto said that in the past, "Management had goals and objectives, they sprung it on you, you grieved, went to arbitration and litigation; ultimately they won if they were right."

To try to overcome the us-vs.-them attitude, the Postal Service set up the Employee Involvement teams, Now there are also Management Involvement groups for supervisors.

But progress has been mixed.

The process, said William Burrus, American Postal Workers Union executive vice president, is an instrument to weaken the bond between employees and the union and "a way to get around the collective bargaining processing by talking directly to employees."

But local post offices and union locals have found ways to cooperate.

It was the union that pushed and won training for new window clerks and that has set up a national childcare task force that developed the first experiments with night care.

In San Diego and Northern Virginia, the local presidents meet regularly with top management and join in occasional pep talks or gripe sessions on the work floor.

Since 1982, the National Association of Letter Carriers has allowed the rank and file to participate in Employee Involvement groups, of which there are now about 5,000. Grievances have been dramatically reduced.

While the major contribution of some of these groups has been as simple as the purchase of office microwave ovens, there are also an increasing number of experiments in self-managed work.

At the District's post office at 45 L St. SW, employee teams have taken on the job of their supervisors. For a year, employees have come up with work schedules and monitored daily work performance and the general administration of the office. It was recently honored as the only post office in the District to have twice exceeded minimum postal standards in productivity, overtime reduction and safety.

"It's working well," said Joseph Henry of the union's involvement team. "The whole process of changing human behavior is a long-term process. . . . We're probably still looking four to five years away."

TRIBUTE TO THE VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Visiting Nurse Association of the Greater Youngstown Area. I am truly honored to recognize this excellent organization.

The Visiting Nurse Association has been serving the elderly and other individuals with handicapped conditions in Mahoning County since 1904. The men and women of this distinguished group have dedicated themselves to responding to the needs of these individuals. The Visiting Nurse Association is nonprofit groups and has excelled in providing essential home care services to thousands of needy people. Last year alone, this agency made nearly 26,000 visits to provide services such as skilled nursing, physical therapy, home health care, speech therapy, and occupational therapy.

The Visiting Nurse Association of Youngstown has certainly provided invaluable home care services to many of my constituents. I would also like to recognize a special woman who has spent her life serving her community through this worthy organization. Mary Lou Harrison devoted many years to helping others. Mary Lou Harrison is not only a towering example of leadership, but also a generous and caring individual and a very good friend. Although Mary Lou has now retired, her endless contributions to her community will not be soon forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, the Visiting Nurse Association has answered the cry for help from thousands of struggling individuals in the community. This distinguished agency has given new hope to those who thought they were alone in old age and times of illness. I thank this organization for its outstanding contributions and look forward to its continued growth and success.

H.R. 4629—POST SECONDARY EDUCATION DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1990

HON. CARL C. PERKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation, H.R. 2569, that would require all postsecondary institutions that are eligible to receive Federal assistance to disclose to their prospective students what the graduation/completion rates are for the programs they are offering.

I became interested in this matter when the Post Secondary Education Subcommittee met to receive testimony on the Student Athlete Right to Know Act that addresses the many concerns about what our student athletes are being told, or not being told, about the education they should be receiving. From the testimony I listened to, I became convinced that if more information is good for the student athlete then the same should be said for the rest of the students as well.

In this legislation I would require that each school be required to disclose to each current and prospective student the graduation rate and or completion rate for each of the various programs that are offered. This must be done prior to the enrollment or the entrance into any financial obligation by the student.

I see this legislation as a commonsense approach to an obvious need for more information on behalf of our students. As a Member that represents students that are labeled as "high-risk" when they enter school and borrow money to finance their education, I feel that this bill will improve their ability to make an informed choice about the potential success of their effort. If the completion rate is not reflective of the promises made then it will not be borne out in the statistics presented to the student.

I feel that this requirement will simply underscore the quality of the educational opportunities available in this country. At the same time I believe it will help us identify those institutions that are misrepresenting what they have to offer the student. If the criticism is that the institution simply wants to get the prospective student signed up to fill a chair for a few days then this will be reflected in the completion rates.

I hope to offer this bill as an amendment to the Student Athlete Right to Know Act when it is considered for markup next week by the Post Secondary Education Subcommittee.

THE TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSION ON IMPORT OF KETO ESTER

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce a bill which would suspend for a 3-year period the duty on Keto ester. Keto ester is not manufactured in the United States and must be imported to meet the manufacturing needs here in the United States. Keto ester is used in the manufacture of Vasotec and Lisinopril, both of which are angiotensin converting enzyme [ACE] inhibitors for the treatment of hypertension. These important pharmaceuticals are manufactured into tablets in Wilson, NC. Vasotec is also highly effective in reducing the death rate of patients with severe heart failure and was the only ACE inhibitor to do this when it received additional approval in June 1988 for use in the treatment of congestive heart failure. This duty suspension, when approved, will help to contain present manufacturing costs associated with Vasotec and Lisinopril.

I urge my colleagues to support this noncontroversial bill as part of any tariff suspension legislation that comes before the House.

BOB McCRACKEN HONORED BY COMMUNITY

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the heritage of the labor movement is rich with the accomplishments of individuals whose dedication to workers in this country has been extraordinary. One such man who has made significant contributions is Bob McCracken, president of CWA's Local 1103. The communications workers are fortunate to have a man of Bob's integrity and strength working on their behalf.

Bob McCracken has had the ability all his life to create positive situations out of adversity. His father died when he was only 2. However, his mother instilled a strength of character which has served him well. Part of that legacy was an emphasis on the importance of unions. Bob has been involved in CWA since 1961, first as an active member in local 1101 for 13 years and later as a member of local 1103. In both locals, he has been a leader, serving in various offices throughout his union career.

As the current president of local 1103, he has been instrumental in promoting workers' interests and objectives in delicate negotiations between management and labor. He has consistently been diplomatic, yet firm. His dedication to the goals of CWA has never wavered and his intrinsic belief in the labor movement as a force for good is apparent in his everyday actions as a union representative.

Besides his work with local 1103, Bob is involved in a number of altruistic causes in our community. He has been a successful fundraiser for the United Way Guiding Eyes for the Blind and the Westchester Burn Center. He has also been a coordinator for the union-management blood bank which has been critical in responding to life threatening circumstances.

On Friday, April 27, he will be honored again, this time, by those in his community from the Anthony J. Tocci Scholarship Foundation who recognize his worth as a human being, a friend, and a steward of his fellow citizens. The Anthony J. Tocci Scholarship Foundation is celebrating its 32d year of coming to the aid of young people who lack the financial means to gain a higher education and improving opportunity for a better future.

Bob and his wife, Carol, have two daughters, both of whom have chosen careers reflecting a desire to serve their community. Maureen is a registered nurse in New York City and Jacqueline is an elementary school teacher in Ulster County, NY.

I would like to congratulate Bob for making a difference in the Westchester-Putnam County area, and for this richly deserved honor.

HONORING JOHN H. DITTFACH

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a man who has dedicated his life to education. John H. Dittfach, professor of mechanical engineering, is retiring May 7, 1990, after 42 years of dedicated service to the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

John joined the mechanical engineering department in September 1948, where he was an assistant professor. He was promoted 9 years later to professor, and for several years now he has served as the associate department head.

Throughout his entire career at the university, John worked diligently to teach his students up-to-date engineering. He spent many summers with companies such as Jacobs Co., Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Co., and Worthington Co. This experience was always carried forward into the laboratory to benefit his students.

Before coming to the University of Massachusetts, John earned his undergraduate and masters degrees from the University of Minnesota. While a student at the University of Minnesota, John was elected to the Tau Beta Pi Engineering Honor Society, the Alpha Chapter. He then was instrumental in establishing the Massachusetts Zeta Chapter at the University of Massachusetts in 1955. He served as this chapter's advisor for 20 years. John received the Tau Beta Pi Special Service Award in 1973 in recognition of his devotion to the society.

Mr. Speaker, John has served not only the students he has taught, but the community and this great country of ours. Prior to earning his degrees, he served in the military. He has been a member of the Society of Automotive Engineers for 42 years, and he served as the southern New England section chairman from 1961 to 1962.

The students and staff at the University of Massachusetts have long admired John Dittfach. He received the Dean's Service Award in recognition of his outstanding service to the College of Engineering and for his devotion to the students. He was also recognized by the university as the recipient of the Distinguished Teaching Award in 1965, which made him the fourth person to ever receive this very prestigious award.

Mr. Speaker, I am truly proud to honor John today. His dedication and devotion to education has been immeasurable. I would like to wish John a very happy and healthy retirement, and hope that he can now take some time for himself to enjoy the things that bring him inner joy and happiness.

MATT THOMPSON, AN EXTRAORDINARY VOLUNTEER

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have the distinct honor of having represented a district in Florida that, over the past 20 years, has had three outstanding people awarded with the top nationwide honors for voluntarism. By coincidence each of them is a black person.

Just recently, Matt Thompson visited me in Washington, DC. He was national volunteer of the year by the Joint Action in Community Service, a nonprofit organization of volunteers who assist former Job Corps students. Job Corps is a Federal job-training program. There are 5,000 such volunteers nationwide, and Mr. Thompson was deemed the best. Few of us can ever claim the distinction of having been called the best at anything. I submit for the record an article about Mr. Thompson that recently appeared in the Florida Times-Union, my hometown newspaper.

In 1987, Mrs. Arnolta (Momma) Williams was given the United Way's Alex de Tocqueville Award for Outstanding Volunteer, another important nationwide honor, presented to her by President Reagan.

And, of course, in 1970 my dear personal friend, the much loved Eartha White, received the Lane Bryant Award for "the person in America considered to have made the most outstanding voluntary contribution to his or her community during the past year," which was presented to her by President Nixon.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have represented such fine people in Congress. All of us in Congress draw strength from such people—people who work long hours to lessen the plight of others. Of course there are thousands of volunteers throughout the Nation, black and white, who don't receive such grand recognition, and I tip my hat to each and every one of them. But they do receive the most important source of recognition—the recognition that comes from within their own hearts.

DUVAL VOLUNTEER JOB COUNSELOR TO BE HONORED AS NATION'S BEST

(By Lilla Ross)

In the past three years, Matt Thompson has befriended and counseled about 700 young men who have left the Job Corps training program in search of new lives.

Some of them have dropped out of the federal job-training program, others have graduated. Some have a high school education and job skills; others don't. They range in age from 16 to 21.

Those who decide to settle in Jacksonville are contacted by Thompson or one or two other volunteers with Joint Action in Community Service, a nonprofit organization of volunteers who assist former Job Corps students.

Among the 5,000 Joint Action in Community Service volunteers nationwide, Matt Thompson is considered the best.

He has been named national volunteer of the year and will be honored Thursday at a luncheon at the Marina at St. Johns Place.

"He really cares," said Judy Collins, assistant regional director of Joint Action in Community Service in Atlanta. "These young people can tell when someone cares and is willing to take the time to talk to them.

"There were times when he was the only volunteer."

Thompson, 39, got involved in the program through his work as an assessment counselor at Private Industry Council.

"It was an opportunity to work with young people, to provide some direction, some guidance," Thompson said.

"Having been involved with social service for so long I had at my command a network of individuals and agencies that might be of help. And it was an opportunity to recruit employment applicants for Private Industry Council."

Thompson, a Jacksonville native who grew up in Blodgett Homes, works with Project Independence, a state program to help get people off welfare and into jobs.

"Over the past three years that I've been working with JACS, I have some way or another worked with more than 700 youths," he said. "I try to assist them with employment referrals, training referrals, or just sitting and talking.

"I think a lot of it has to do with a sincere commitment to making a contribution to the young people—to try to hope that Jacksonville will be made better because these former Job Corps students are making a positive contribution.

"I've heard people say that Job Corps people are losers, but I've seen them go on to get college degrees, graduate degrees and make significant contributions. Job Corps is another option for young people to acquire skills and an education."

He cited a 16-year-old who recently graduated from a Job Corps program with a general equivalency diploma and is eager to start a new life.

"At 16 they're usually dropping out of school," Thompson said.

But at 16, the boy's job opportunities will be limited, Thompson said, so he is hoping to interest him in continuing his education, if he can find a program that will accept a 16-year-old.

The prospects are not always so bright. Thompson works with young men who have dropped out of the Job Corps. They don't like the discipline of the program or they get homesick, he said.

Thompson said he does whatever is necessary to help.

"You're talking about adolescents, young people who may think they have all the answers or may have fear and apprehension about their ability to make smooth transitions into the world.

"That they have adult volunteers to help lead and guide them makes them more relaxed and comfortable. . . . The fact that we are volunteers makes a big difference. We do it because we want to do it not because we have to. It says something to them."

THE GRIM LEGACY OF THE CHERNOBYL DISASTER

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, 4 years ago today, the name Chernobyl became more than the name of a place in the Ukraine. It became a symbol of the potential dangers of nuclear energy when the No. 4 reactor at the Chernobyl nuclear plant exploded and experienced a meltdown. It also showed what can happen when a government takes chances by not providing proper safety measures at a nuclear energy facility, and by not being prepared to react if such an accident occurs.

After the reactor exploded at the No. 4 plant, it took Soviet authorities nearly 72 hours to announce officially to its citizens and the world that a nuclear accident had occurred. Soviet officials have always stated that 31 people died as a result of the accident. However, in November 1989, the newspaper Moscow News reported that 250 people who were at Chernobyl during or after the accident have died.

While Chernobyl has left the front pages of the newspapers and the TV screen, the grim legacy of the disaster continues to unfold. A recent Time magazine article on Chernobyl states:

Large populated areas surrounding the reactor site in the Ukraine and in nearby Belorussia remain contaminated with high levels of radioactivity. The poisoning of the land has created dire health problems and economic devastation. A new study by the chief economist of a Soviet government institute calculates that the cost of Chernobyl, including the price of cleanup and the value of lost farmland and production, could run as high as $358 billion—20 times as much as earlier official estimates.

Health problems continue to be severe. The National Research Council, a U.S. scientific panel, estimates that over 70,000 people can be expected to die from cancers caused by Chernobyl. Soon after the accident, Soviet officials ordered the permanent evacuation of villages within 19 miles of the plant. However, tests indicate that levels of radioactivity are still nine times higher than the acceptable limits in the inhabited towns and villages of Narodichi, a Ukrainian agricultural district that is 37 miles from the reactor. A doctor at the Central Hospital at Narodichi reports that in the past 18 months, there has been a dramatic rise in cases of thyroid disease, anemia, and cancer. Farmers have also experienced a sharp increase in the number of birth defects in their farm animals.

Mr. Speaker, the Chernobyl nuclear powerplant explosion is an ongoing disaster, not a one-time incident that happened 4 years ago. It is incumbent upon the Soviet government to fully disclose all information about the accident and its aftermath so that other nations can incorporate the information into their preparedness programs. Further, it is clear that the world has yet to realize the full number of victims of Chernobyl, and I would hope that the Soviet government is prepared to provide these victims with whatever assistance they may require. Finally, the Soviet Union, as all nations, must abide by internationally recognized standards for the construction and operation of nuclear facilities.

There are great benefits that nuclear energy can bestow upon us. However, Chernobyl has also shown that care must be taken in the utilization of nuclear energy. Soviet officials must meet their responsibilities to the people who still suffer from the Chernobyl incident. They must also share with all of us any lessons learned from the disaster. In this way, meaning can be salvaged for the victims of this nuclear accident.

EXTENSION SERVICE VITAL FOR BETTER BUSINESS ACCESS TO THE $60-BILLION-PER-YEAR FEDERAL LAB NETWORK

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy today to join with my colleagues Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. BOEHLERT, and Mr. BROOMFIELD, to introduce the "National Technology Extension Service Act of 1990."

I'm convinced that this bill will help lift the obstacles faced by many of our small businesses as they seek to identify and acquire technical knowledge from our sprawling, 700-facility, Federal laboratory network. As my friend JOHN LAFALCE already has stated, these technological advances are absolutely necessary to our Nation's industries as they attempt to compete in the global marketplace.

Without these scientific breakthroughs, key segments of our industrial base could falter—or even disappear beneath the tidal pull of foreign competition—competition which too often is more adept than we at accessing and using new technologies.

Technologies on the shelves within these Federal labs can help us design and deliver new products ranging from life-saving drugs to space-age durable metal alloys. They can boost our manufacturers through providing more efficient processing technologies.

In my view, Federal laboratory techniques are the keys to the competitive kingdom for many of our smaller manufacturers—folks who may not have the research capability or the bucks to do it on their own.

But how much of the $60 billion per year we spend on basic and applied Federal research—50 cents of every scientific dollar—is commercialized? Barely a trickle, according to an investigation by the Subcommittee on Regulation, Business Opportunities and Energy, which I chair and on which Mr. BROOMFIELD serves as ranking minority member.

In 1988, for example, patent license revenue earned on that $60 bill investment was less than $4 million. Though that's not the only measure of technology transfer efficiency, it's a dramatically puny return on investment.

Mr. Speaker, technology transfer simply hasn't been a priority at many labs. And beyond the underperformance of individual labs in this area, there's been no action at higher reaches in our Government demanding better technology transfer. Dr. Allan Bromley, director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy—the President's chief science advisor—admitted to my subcommittee last year that transfer efforts at the Federal level were "Byzantine."

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is an absence of political will.

We've got good law on the books encouraging—no, mandating that Federal labs aggressively pursue transfer. Some labs—the National Institutes of Health and the Energy Department complex at Oak Ridge, TN—have put together new, model programs toward this end, although their track records are still relatively thin. And I want to applaud Secretary Watkins' tentative agreement with the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences for a new pilot program to encourage more technology transfer between his agency and this important industrial research cooperative.

But I still believe these programs are the exception rather than the rule within the Federal network. There is no top-down political leadership that operates to ensure technology transfer. Key vacancies persist throughout the administration hierarchy on technology policy. And philosophical battles rage at the highest administration levels as to whether encouraging transfer and cooperative technology agreements between Government and industry are either needed or appropriate.

In short, while Rome burns we fiddle.

Our technology-dependent, technology-driven businesses deserve real services, not lipservice.

This bill creates a system similar to the highly successful Federal agricultural extension services. We would create one-stop shopping through the Small Business Development Centers network, which would have access to a number of computerized databases and expert consulting systems. For a modest investment, business customers pursuing appropriate technologies could easily be connected with providers of that knowledge at Federal labs and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I wish this sort of system weren't so sorely needed. I wish the labs could provide this outreach function on their own. In lieu of that, I think we need this program, and that it will pay for itself many times over in the development of new businesses and jobs. I urge my colleagues to support this project.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NEW YORK STATE ASSOCIATION OF PLUMBING, HEATING, AND COOLING CONTRACTORS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the House Small Business Committee, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize an association of small enterprises which have worked to promote the health and welfare of citizens in the State of New York for 100 years.

On April 28, 1890, the New York State Association of Plumbing, Heating, and Cooling Contractors was founded in New York City. Originally known as the New York State Association of Master Plumbers, the organization has grown through the years to a membership of over 325 plumbing, heating, and cooling contractors throughout New York State. The group is now affiliated with the National Association of Plumbing, Heating, and Cooling Contractors.

I extend my congratulations to the association on its 100th birthday, and I commend all of its members for their skilled craftsmanship, dedication, and years of hard work. I would like to give my special thanks to members of the association's Buffalo chapter, located in my congressional district.

Plumbing, heating, and cooling contractors are not often singled out for praise. Yet we must recognize that their services are invaluable, and, indeed, essential. For the past century these plumbers, heating, and cooling contractors have worked to enhance the safety and comfort of thousands of businesses and households across New York State. For that we owe them our deepest gratitude.

NATIONAL CRIME VICTIMS' RIGHTS WEEK, APRIL 22-28, 1990

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, "What about the victim?" This is a question that has greatly concerned me throughout my career in public service, and it is a question which this House addressed when it passed National Crime Victim's Rights Week for April 22 through 28, 1990.

All of us are concerned about the level of crime—violent crime—in our society. Every day we read about it in the newspapers and every night we watch it on the evening television news. But with increased awareness and attention turning toward the battle against crime, there is often someone who is lost among the headlines, the sound bites and the "tough on crime" rhetoric. That someone is the victim of crime and the victim's family.

Mr. Speaker, the numbers are staggering. Thirty-five million Americans are victimized by crime each year, with 6 million falling prey to violent crime. At this rate the U.S. Department of Justice estimates that five out of six United States residents will be the victim or intended victim of crime during their lifetime. In 1988, according to information published by the Bureau of Justice Statistics, one in four American households—23 million families—were touched by either a crime of rape, robbery, assault, burglary, household theft, or motor vehicle theft. Unaccounted for in this statistic are the grim figures for homicide (20,675), fatalities from drunk driving (18,500) and child abuse (1,225). Nor does it include the catastrophic physical injuries incurred by those involved in drunk driving accidents or unreported domestic violence.

Nineteen eighty-nine also proved once again that crime does not pay—the victim does. Figures recently released by the Federal Bureau of Investigation show that in the past year murder rose 4 percent, aggravated assault was up 5 percent and forcible rape increased 1 percent.

The reasons for the burgeoning crime rate are complex and numerous. The solutions are even more elusive. But one thing is for certain: An overloaded court docket resulting in long pretrial periods, a seemingly endless appeal process, and reduced sentences because of prison overcrowding only compound the suffering of victims.

If the physical pain of a violent crime were not enough, the victim of a brutal assault also suffers through a myriad of emotional pain such as confusion, anger, fear, a sense of being alone, self blame, and helplessness. I know from my experience with victims that those who have never endured this agony cannot imagine it.

If the perpetrator is even caught, the court process worsens the crime by dramatizing and compounding the victim's ordeal. There is the courtroom process, the lineups, the cross-examination, the appeals, and the agonizing waiting. As this drama unfolds the victim of the crime is left feeling isolated and pitiable. By the time this is all over, the victim often feels more like the criminal. Of course, the hallmark of our judicial system is that all accused persons are innocent until proven guilty, but the nobility of that system is no solace to someone who has faced death, felt the impact of a bullet or piercing knife, or known the violation of a brutal assault.

Of course, the real answer is to win the war against a crime, a task easier said than done. However, while the battle to make our streets safe rages, we must make an effort to show concern for victims of crime. That is why I have introduced legislation to designate this week—April 22 through 28, 1990—as National Crime Victims' Rights Week. This week is a time to express support for crime victims, to acknowledge the advocates who serve them, and to endorse the rights of victims and their role in the criminal justice system.

This week was marked by candlelight vigils, balloon lifts, and conferences held by numerous victim advocacy organizations across the country. For instance the National Victim Center sponsored a candlelight vigil in New York City and held an awards ceremony at Texas Christian University, and the National Organization for Victim Assistance [NOVA] held its 10th annual forum for crime victims in Washington, DC.

The highlight of National Crime Victims' Rights Week was a White House Rose Garden ceremony in which President George Bush and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh honored seven people who have made outstanding contributions in assisting victims of crime. Among those honored were Howard and Constance Clery of Bryn Mawr, PA. The Clerys dedicated their lives to preventing future campus victimization since the murder of their daughter, Jeanne, in her dormitory room by a fellow student at Lehigh University in April 1986. They founded the nonprofit organization, Security on Campus, Inc., and spearheaded a national campaign to obtain passage of legislation mandating that colleges and universities be required to publish their violent crime and drug and alcohol offense statistics. Four States have adopted such legislation, and Federal legislation, Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act of 1989, has been introduced in both Chambers of the Congress.

Other award recipients included Milton Cole of Jamaica Plain, MA; Sandra Heverly, of Las Vegas, NV; Dean G. Kilpatrick of Charleston, SC; Emelia "Mimi" Olson of Fort Thompson, SD; and John Walsh of Fort Lauderdale, FL. As President Bush stated at the awards ceremony, these recipients "embody the power of volunteerism, the power of the physically challenged, and the power of a just cause—the campaign to build an America where every victim of every crime is treated with dignity and the compassion they deserve."

Mr. Speaker, many groups and individuals throughout the country were instrumental in securing the passage of National Crime Victims' Rights Week in the House of Representatives. My office had the superb assistance of the Office for Victims of Crime of the U.S. Department of Justice, the National Victim Center, NOVA, and MADD—Mothers Against Drunk Drivers. I would also like to thank the 236 Members of Congress who cosponsored the House resolution, House Joint Resolution 464, to designate this week as National Crime Victims' Rights Week. Their compassionate concern for the crime victim and the advocates who serve them assured the passage of the legislation.

The adoption of National Crime Victims' Rights Week by the Congress of the United States was a pledge to the citizens of this country that we will continue the war on crime, that we will continue to advocate for victims of crime, and that we will do everything in our power statutorily, legislatively, and as individual members of society to curb the scourge of crime that is devastating the people of this great Nation.

FRANK J. COBO, MIAMI-DADE COMMUNITY COLLEGE 1990 OUTSTANDING ALUMNUS OF THE YEAR

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Frank J. Cobo who was honored on April 20, 1990 as the Outstanding Alumnus of the Year at my alma mater, Miami-Dade Community College. I am especially proud of Mr. Cobo, for he is the second Cuban American to be recipient of this award.

Recipients of this distinguished award are graduates or former students of the college who have made distinguished contributions to their profession and have "put something back" to strengthen the institution that was instrumental in helping to achieve their present success.

Mr. Cobo is a 1965 honors graduate of Miami-Dade Community College and as a student on the north campus, he was an honor court justice, vice president of the student body, and president of the student senate.

Presently, Mr. Cobo is president of his own real estate company and has held a number of influential professional positions including executive assistant to a former Mayor Miami.

Mr. Speaker, Frank Cobo is a role model for all to follow for the tremendous contributions he has made to the Greater Miami area as a philanthropist. Helping fellow men, especially those who are less fortunate, is one of the most basic responsibilities we have as American. Mr. Cobo has gone above and beyond the most elementary forms of philanthropy, and has provided leadership and tireless dedication to a host of Florida civic and charitable organizations.

Among these organizations include the Dade County Alliance for Career Education of which he is president, March of Dimes, Theodore R. Gibson Memorial Fund vice president, Miami Youth Museum, and the Coconut Grove Chamber of Commerce. He is also a charter member and past president of the Miami-Dade Community College Alumni Association, as well as a member of the presidential blue ribbon committee for the Endowed Teaching Chair Program. Mr. Cobo has also endowed the Frank J. Cobo chair in real estate.

Frank has shown dedication to many, many other programs and is truly deserving of this special award. I am proud of his efforts which enrich the lives of others, as well as the welfare of the entire community. It is with pride and great pleasure that I congratulate Frank Cobo for his award and thank him for his many years of service to the Greater Miami area.

NATIONAL RECYCLING MONTH

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to turn the attention of my colleagues to Senate Joint Resolution 250 which passed in the House Wednesday, March 28, 1990. Senate Joint Resolution 250, sponsored by Senator CHAFEE, is identical to legislation introduced by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California, [Mr. DREIER,] and myself designating April 1990 as National Recycling Month. The timing of this legislation coincided with the celebration of Earth Day on April 22, 1990. At a time when America's environmental conciousness is on the rise, measures like National Recycling Month give us the opportunity to demonstrate our commitment to preserving our natural resources. With the support of various recycling and environmental groups, the gentleman from California, [Mr. DREIER] and I were able to construct a resolution that addresses the difficulties surrounding solid waste management and the steps we can take collectively to promote efficient methods of waste disposal.

America is facing a solid waste crisis of increasing proportions. However, there is still time to act prudently. We realize that through the efforts of people and communities wasteful consumption can be eliminated and resource conservation will help abate solid waste management problems. Our focus now must be on making every day an "Earth Day."

I thank my colleagues in the House for their assistance in supporting National Recycling Month and encourage all Americans to recycle so that we may fulfill our international commitment to the environment.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY IN THE NEW WORLD ORDER

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Science and Technology Week [NSTW], a nationwide effort to encourage student interest in science and technology sponsored by the National Science Foundation through the financial support of corporate America.

This endeavor is both important and timely. Events in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union this past year give new impetus to the process of global economic integration. And in the world economy that's emerging, the major sources of competitive advantage will be research and technology, and the scientists, engineers, and technicians who make them possible.

As a nation, we must increase our efforts to promote science and engineering education and bolster the vitality and productivity of America's current research enterprise. The NSF Director Erich Bloch described "A Research Infrastructure for International Competition" at a National Academy of Engineering Symposium: "Defining National Interests in an Age of Global Technology."

I insert the following excerpts from Mr. Bloch's remarks in the RECORD:

COMMENTS OF ERICH BLOCH

The overall theme of this meeting assumes a "Global Imperative." I take this as a shorthand term for current historical trends. Three such trends principally concern us:

First, our increasing dependence on technology as the basis of our standard of living. All nations are affected by this trend. Where access to natural resources was once a major source of economic success, today access to technology—which means access to knowledge—is probably more important. Those countries and peoples who can access, generate, and use knowledge efficiently will prosper.

Secondly, the increasing global economic integration brought about by communications, information, and transportation technology. Even large nations must now look outward, and deal with and within a world economy.

Third, the spread of industrialization and advanced technology to many countries that have not previously been serious players in the world economy. Global economic integration has been accompanied by—perhaps caused by—a rapid diffusion of technological capability, in the form of technically educated people.

The United States, in a dominant position in nearly all technologies at the end of World War II, is now only one producer among many. High quality products now come from countries that a decade ago traded only in agricultural products or raw materials.

Finally, I would include the dramatic political developments that have dominated the newspapers this year. The spread of democracy and the break up of the Soviet empire are rapidly creating changed political and economic conditions more rapidly than anyone could have imagined even six months ago.

The long term prospect is a rapid shift from a Cold-War emphasis on military confrontation to greater economic competition around the world. In effect, the organization of world affairs around a bipolar military confrontation is being rapidly replaced by a multipolar structure focussed on economic competition. This new world will provide all sorts of new opportunities, but it is a world in which the sheer size and military power of the United States will be much less important as a determinant of national influence and success. Our technical and scientific strength will be challenged much more directly than was the case in the past.

This, then, is the "Global Imperative"—the environment within which all our institutions must learn to function. And in making these adjustments the United States is at a disadvantage. Because our national attention has been focussed for so long on bi-polar military confrontation, many of our institutions—universities included—may be unprepared to function well in a more complex and fluid multi-polar world of economic competition.

Universities have an additional handicap in making this adjustment in that they have not traditionally thought of their mission in economic terms. They must learn to do this at the same time they try to adjust to the new global environment.

How should universities respond to this situation? If the answers are not clear, we are at least coming to have a good view of the questions. We have a good overview of the status, trends, and issues affecting American research universities—in effect, a baseline and a summary of the specific questions.

During the past two years I have had the privilege of chairing a working group of the Government-University-Industry Research Roundtable, operating under the aegis of the three Academies, to study these matters. The working group issued an interim report just a month ago that summarizes the major questions in a very useful way.

This report traces the post-war history of academic research in the United States, through the period of expansion in the late fifties and sixties, then through a decade of steady state—maybe even stagnation—after 1968, and then a period of growth and diversification in the eighties. This latter trend continues, as the number of institutions with significant research programs increases, and each institution seeks to broaden its activities.

Has there really been growth in the 80's? Yes.

In constant dollars, academic R&D expenditures nearly doubled during the decade of the 80's. It is clear that tightening university budgets are not the result of an overall decrease in federal funding—but that is not to say that tightening budgets are imaginary. In fact, there are real pressures on the university.

As diversification brings more players into the game, the pressures on the existing players continue to increase. These pressures stem from three main factors:

First, the environment within which research universities operate is becoming more complex, while traditional organizing and governing structures makes it hard for universities to adapt.

Second, qualified researchers and faculty people are becoming scarce. Increasing numbers of faculty are nearing retirement, and graduate training programs are producing fewer qualified replacements.

Third, financial resources are spread even more thinly. More institutions and more programs within each institution are competing for the available support, and each researcher costs more to support than in the past. Since support is not growing as rapidly as demand, more competitive pressure results. . . .

A more complex environment, too few people, and not enough money: That is what faces university administrators in the nineties. How does that translate into specific issues? These are some of the issues identified by the Roundtable working group:

What is the optimal role for universities within the overall national R&D effort? This is equivalent to a corporation's asking itself "what business are we in?" Universities can't do all kinds of research. Understanding how university research best fits in with research in national labs or industry—especially as the global environment changes—is a crucial part of defining what business universities are in.

And the answer might very well be different than the last time that this question was seriously asked: when Vannevar Bush wrote his "Endless Frontier."

What are the responsibilities of universities with respect to social problems, on either national or regional levels? This is a key part of the question of defining roles. Beyond a certain minimum level, public support for research is premised on an expectation of public benefit. How much should universities allow social forces outside the university to define their missions? There has to be an optimum balance between the need to stay independent and the need to generate support.

What is the proper balance between education and research? The combination of these has always been a major strength of the American system. No one doubts that it should be maintained. But we have to do better than simply to accept as dogma the idea that students are always better off with more research going on in their departments. Conceivably this is almost always true at the graduate level. But at the undergraduate level it is certainly true less often.

On this I would suggest that we have been drifting away from the proper balance. The pressures are all in one direction. Every university wants to increase the level of its research activity, because that is the way to higher prestige and standing. Most faculty members would prefer to teach less and research more, at undergraduate colleges as well as research universities.

But this cannot be the way to meet the needs of our undergraduate students. From the standpoint of the national interest, we need a better balance between teaching and research, and more emphasis on undergraduate education.

How should universities respond to the evolution of academic disciplines? In 1906, only a dozen or so universities were large enough to organize on disciplinary lines. Today all research universities are organized this way. But the academic disciplines were once well defined. Fifty years ago there was not much overlap between biology and physics. Today the fields are both overlapping and splitting endlessly into subspecialties.

At the same time the problems that research seeks to solve are becoming less well defined in disciplinary terms. This is especially true in industry, where any reasonable problem will require integrated research in half a dozen disciplines. If universities continue to define themselves in disciplinary terms, rewarding faculty and organizing in this way while the rest of the society moves in a different direction, the disjunction between the university and the society it serves can only increase.

How big should the academic research enterprise be? Is there any way to answer this question, either in absolute terms or relative to other advanced nations? In constant dollars, academic research has grown much faster than the economy as a whole in recent years, yet most of us are convinced that it should grow still faster. How can we justify this position? Clearly the academic sector cannot indefinitely grow faster than the economy.

Who should set the academic research agenda? Today we do it by making money available from many different sources for many different purposes, with some of it—NSF's support is mainly of this sort—available solely for purposes set by researchers themselves. Maybe this is the best way to do it. But the system we have developed in an unplanned manner. Maybe we ought to think about it. Other nations use a more directed approach.

Finally, How do we pay for all this? I have put this question last because it is all too easy to put it first, and focus on it to the exclusion of all else. Administrators must pay attention to budgets, but the danger is that one pays attention to nothing else. Surviving the next fiscal year is always the most important thing, because if we fail we won't have to worry about any of the other problems.

But I think it is likely that if we can answer the other questions I have suggested we will find that the budgets take care of themselves. Showing real progress on these issues would strengthen tremendously the case we make before Congress, state legislature and other institutions dependent on research and education.

That, in summary form, is how the Research Roundtable sees the American academic research enterprise and the issues it faces at this point in our history. As always, there are more questions than answers. But just identifying the questions should move us significantly towards some practical answers.

The answers to these questions must come from within the academic community—not from the government, the Academies, or the Roundtable.

TELL US MORE, NEVILLE

HON. CHUCK DOUGLAS

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, America stands tall when it stands for our principle that free elections to decide the future of a people have been our beacon and polestar for the world. The Union Leader editorial by Jim Finnegan today shows how we are straying from that position.

[From the Manchester N.H. Union Leader]

TELL US MORE, NEVILLE

Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis must have felt as if he were being asked to reinvent the wheel.

Landsbergis probably thought it was a settled understanding, at least among democratic leaders of the world, that to the degree that one nation's freedom is diminished, the freedom of all mankind is diminished. And here President Bush, by declaring in effect that he will now sit back and watch the Soviet Union tighten the economic screws on Lithuania, was requiring him to restate the principal lesson of this century—that freedom is indivisible.

Landsbergis, courageous leader of a brave (but not foolhardy) people, was equal to the task, asking plaintively:

"Can the freedom of one group of people be sold for the freedom of another?"

Well, contrary to the lessons of history, especially those presaging two world wars in this century, President George Bush seems to think so.

Any economic sanctions taken against the Soviets now, he said Tuesday, might prompt Moscow "to take action that would set back the whole case of freedom around the world."

That sounded so familiar that Landsbergis could not refrain from invoking the shades of "Munich." He was referring of course, to the 1938 agreement in which Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany forced Czechoslovakia to give Nazi Germany the Sudetenland, consisting of a fifth of its territory and most of its industry, as the supposedly "small price" for "peace in our time."

It is not simply President Bush's carefully-chosen words that offend (mustn't "make the wrong mistake," he quipped in using a Yogi Berra-ism); what offends is the appearance that he was officially giving voice to unofficially declared administration exasperation with Lithuania for seeking independence on its own timetable, rather than Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's.

In gliding over the fact that U.S. policy holds that the three formerly sovereign Baltic states of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia were illegally annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940 pursuant to the Hitler-Stalin pact, which even Soviet leaders now acknowledge, Bush was explicit in expressing his fear that any U.S. economic sanctions taken now against the Soviet Union might prompt Moscow to retaliate.

Which is tantamount to saying that "the whole case of freedom around the world" depends largely on Moscow's mood of the moment concerning what it views as in its own interests.

Well George "Neville" Bush, that sounds to us rather like an open-ended invitation to a thus emboldened Moscow to do to Lithuania what it damned well pleases.

The appearance is that President Bush does not mind so much that Gorbachev is strangling Lithuanian freedom in its crib—but does wish he'd do so quietly.—Jim Finnegan

GOVERNMENT LABS SHOULD SHARE THE WEALTH

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, the Small Business Subcommittee on Regulation, Business Opportunities and Energy, which I serve on, recently held hearings about the problems of transferring discoveries made in Government laboratories to the private sector. I am inserting an article which addresses this important subject. I urge my colleagues to read this informative column.

[From the Salisbury (MD) Daily Times, Apr. 14, 1990]

GOVERNMENT LABS SHOULD SHARE THE WEALTH

(By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta)

WASHINGTON.—The American public doesn't even know what it's missing—some of the nation's most important discoveries are languishing on shelves because the federal government is slow to share its research.

The government spends $60 billion a year funding research and development. That money is poured into labs where scientists try to find cures for diseases, new ways to protect the environment and industrial innovations. The labs make great strides, but few of the discoveries ever benefit the American public.

That is because the federal government keeps private industry from turning these innovations into commercial products. Less than 10 percent of the inventions created in government-owned and operated labs are ever commercialized. Some government labs have ignored federal laws designed to encourage the tranfer of new technology to the private sector. Others have simply not set any guidelines for complying with the laws.

Congressional investigators say the problem has frustrated many government-sponsored scientists to the point that they flee to the private sector where they can capitalize on their inventions.

Three years ago, Dr. Michael Zasloff, a scientist at the National Institutes of Health, discovered important healing properties in the skin of frogs and other amphibians. He used the information to begin development of a new antibiotic.

But Zasloff ran into bureaucratic roadblocks and got little support from his bosses. He had to leave the government, join a university and form a partnership with a drug company to commercialize his breakthrough.

Either through inefficiency, incompetence or just plain over-protectiveness, the government is contributing in a big way to the trade imbalance with countries such as Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. Those nations allow government-financed technology to be mass produced. At the same time, the United States is falling behind in the markets for semiconductors, drugs and other key industries.

The Japanese even capitalize on inventions made in U.S. labs. Video cassette recorders are the most blatant example. They were developed in U.S. labs, but Japan has cornered the production market.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., is leading the effort to force the government to loosen its grip on federally funded technology. Wyden told our associate Scott Sleek that government scientists are frustrated because they can't see their inventions through to fruition. And businesses are disgusted with the government because they can't get their hands on valuable information.

The Lure of Perks—Most U.S. business executives switch from one corporation to another several times during their careers. Usually they are looking for more money, but in some cases the lure is better perquisites—the little and large luxuries provided free of charge by the corporation.

We have seen a survey taken by the National Institute of Business Management. The survey asked executives at small and mid-sized companies about their perks. While millions of Americans would be happy if they could simply wring some health insurance out of their employer, the upper echelon of American workers enjoys a different benefit package.

The survey found that the most common perk is the company car, with 69 percent of the firms offering cars to some of their officers. Entertainment expenses ranked a close second at 67 percent.

Liability insurance and telephone credit cards are frequently included in the perk package. The up and coming perk of the '90s is the cellular phone in the company car. Of the firms surveyed, 31 percent gave car phones to their senior executives.

Another perk to watch is personal computers. Thirteen percent of the companies gave them to top executives so they could work at home.

One perk companies don't like to boast about is the corporate jet. Stockholders consider them to be an extravagance, but corporations are finding that having their own planes saves time and money. And a private jet is less likely to be the target of a terrorist attack when company bigwigs go overseas.

The Federal Aviation Administration says there are more than 3,500 private business jets registered in the United States, compared to 2,028 in 1978. That does not include the planes that are leased from fleet owners.

The used jet market is especially strong, with prices rising 30 percent last year.

The bottom line is that executives like the status of being able to summon a jet as they would a taxi. And it always makes a big impression on clients.

FOSTER CHILDREN

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, April 28, a march is scheduled to be held on behalf of children in Fall River, MA. This march is sponsored by the ORPHANS Foundation, Inc., which is headed by Raymond R. Silvia, Jr. Raymond Silvia is himself a former foster child, and one who understands the many ways in which our society fails to provide fully and fairly for children who are in need of help. He has dedicated himself to working hard to improve the condition of children in our society, and we are all the beneficiaries of his energy and enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker the mayor of Fall River, Carlton Viveiros has proclaimed next week as children's week in Fall River in honor of Mr. Silvia's efforts and I join Mayor Viveiros and State officials in strong support of Mr. Silvia's efforts. We owe him a great deal for his energy on behalf of children. Mr. Speaker, I ask in recognition of Mr. Silvia's work and in furtherance of his mission on behalf of children, that we print here an article by Mr. Silvia in the Fall River Herald News and an editorial about Mr. Silvia's efforts and those of Agnes Silva, the founder of LOVE, another important venture.

The article follows:

TOO MANY CHILDREN CRY IN SILENCE

"In the little world in which children have their existence whosoever brings them up, there is nothing so finely perceived and finely felt, as injustice," observed Charles Dickens, who, in classics like "Oliver Twist," "David Copperfield," and "Great Expectations," recorded the occasional joys and frequent troubles of childhood in 19th century England.

These fine perceptions and deep feelings, which Dickens deftly recognized, are perhaps one of the reasons why the experiences of childhood are so formative in the human personality. Allowing for genetic variations, a healthy, well-nourished childhood, with appropriate challenges to growth and responsibility, is the best preparation for a happy adult life, most psychologists agree.

Adults who suffer from emotional illnesses—from mild neuroses to anti-social or psychopathic behavior—are often struggling with the unresolved conflicts of childhood. Current research into the pathology of child abuse indicates that adults who mistreat children were, in their own childhood, victims of abuse or neglect.

With the social reforms that the industrial revolution forecast, and the ensuing electronic and technological revolutions, society might be expected to assure that no child of the modern age would ever suffer the pain of neglect, abuse, exploitation, hunger, or homelessness.

But, unfortunately, this happy condition has not come about. Human nature is so constituted that the infant is born helpless, and is much more dependent on parental nurture, for a much longer time, than the offspring of their species. High technology may keep a fragile baby alive, but only human love will enable the child to grow and be at home in the world.

On Saturday, two local organizations will join with child advocacy agencies in sponsoring a public march in support of abused and forgotten children. L.O.V.E. (Let Our Voices Enter) and O.R.P.H.A.N.S. (Orphans Rehabilitative Personnel, Health and Nutritional Services) were both launched by area residents.

Agnes Silva, founder of L.O.V.E., advocates more administrative and legislative action to protect and counsel children who have been sexually abused, to insure timely investigation and prosecution of all cases involving sexual abuse, and to provide treatment centers for juvenile ex-offenders.

Sexual abuse of children is not an aberration that occurs in remote or crime-infested areas. Since July 1989, more than 60 local children have been treated and counseled in the Pediatric Sexual Abuse Program at St. Anne's Hospital. Ninety-five percent of the time, the victims knew and trusted the perpetrators.

Raymond Silvia Jr., founder of the O.R.P.H.A.N.S. Foundation notes that "this march is 50 percent about the forgotten children—runaways, throwaways, children abandoned in hospitals, children of alcoholics, and those who move from one foster home to another." Some 3,000 to 4,000 "border babies" are born each year, contracting AIDS or fetal drug syndrome from their mothers.

The march, in which the public is invited to join, will begin at 1 p.m. at Kennedy Park. Agencies will distribute information on services available to children. The marchers will proceed on South Main Street to Government Center, where Mayor Carlton M. Viveiros and other speakers will address the crowd. Then 4,000 blue and pink ballons will be released, to bear aloft the silent pleas of abused and forgotten boys and girls.

[From the Fall River (MA) Herald News, Feb. 2, 1990]

MARCH WILL PLEAD ABUSED CHILDREN'S CAUSE

(By Raymond R. Silvia, Jr.)

We the people of Fall River started a project last year that will be a yearly event. That project is our concern for our children, and all the children in our world community. The event is the O.R.P.H.A.N.S. Foundation 2nd Annual Greater Fall River Has a Heart for Children March 1990 for Abused and Forgotten Children.

There are almost 100,000 people in Fall River, and each city in a 15-mile radius of Fall River has about the same amount of people. Our goal this year is to have as many people as possible to come and participate in this event, either as individuals or in groups.

Again we are asking all public and private agencies, and organizations from the above communities that offer services to children to set up information tables at the end of the march. This way parents and children who may need help from any of the agencies, or groups, can ask questions that day. Also it will give the public a chance to offer their services as a volunteer to our groups. Unfortunately many families within our communities don't know all the services that are available to their children.

Fall River in the last 15 years has come a long way in the areas of community development, commercial development and environmental issues. But we are also striving forward in the areas on the social issues confronting our neighborhoods, and our families. Our Police Department's programs for our children, in conjunction with the School Department's programs, have been model programs for other cities around the state. Programs for youth are directed to preventing sexual and physical abuses, drugs and crime.

As the media reports have shown over the last 12 months the problems and issues that pertain to children are multiplying at alarming rates. Such as sexual and physical abuses, runaways, throwaways, boarder babies. As well as the number of children growing up in poverty, hunger, and homelessness; the increasing numbers of children going into our foster care systems; and the illiteracy of our youth.

We are not saying we can eliminate these problems by walking. But by walking we can show the children in our communities there are people who care and are publicly willing to show our support about their issues. With the state and federal deficits facing our economic systems, we must not cut our children's futures in the process. Children can't vote, but we as adults can have an impact on those cuts in children's programs. Our children are the world's future and ours as society. If, we forget our children today, will they as tomorrow's adults forget us as elderly?

Because in reality we can pay for the needed programs for our children today or pay three tenfold as a society in the years to follow. Paying for more jails, drug and alcohol rehabilitation centers, homeless shelters, or by crime and other social ills. Facts show preventive measures always cost less than curative measures.

This march, hopefully, will also let the individuals and groups in society who don't care what they do to the lives of our children, we will not tolerate their actions in our communities. Some say, how will our walking change things? If we look at history there have been many times when people have gathered together to overcome social problems—one of the reasons this country was founded.

A good example is the courage of the people behind the Iron Curtain who assembled for one day a week for months to show they want freedom for themselves and their families. At the beginning these individuals assembled under the threat of physical harm. But the Berlin Wall came down because of their perseverence.

We in a free society can assemble without the fear of physical harm to show support for your children, so please come and walk and use that freedom. The last week of April is Child Abuse Week. Last year, Fall River was one of the only cities in America that marched for children. Something we as walkers, and agencies were proud of; we hope our city will be proud, too. So let us paint a picture of our children, a picture of freedom—Freedom from abuses, hunger, poverty, homelessness, drugs and other social ills.

We hope that if we turn out in large enough numbers (with your help) here in Fall River every year that eventually, we will be a model for other communities in America. So that some day, we as a society won't have to look back and say: Where has our children's freedom gone?

WILL IT FRY IN PEORIA?

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, until a few years ago, the phrase "fat substitute" brought to mind an overweight basketball player who didn't make the starting five. These days we are aware of the danger of high cholesterol levels, and scientists are seeking fat substitutes of another kind. And, equally, until a few years ago, most folks, when they heard of my hometown of Peoria, immediately thought of the Caterpillar Co., or, as it is affectionately known, Cat.

But the Peoria Journal Star reports that Cat may have to make room in the pubic mind for Fat—a "fat substitute", that is. The Northern Regional Research Center in Peoria has announced the discovery of something called Oatrim, which "could rank among the most marketable products discovered" at the laboratory.

According to chemist George E. Inglett, who developed the product, "Oatrim has a double whammy, a magic bullet. It's a fat substitute and has fewer calories but it also reduces cholesterol."

Given the fact that we may all be eating differently—and better—because of what was discovered in Peoria, the old question might be rephrased and we will have to ask about food: "But will it fry in Peoria?"

At this point I wish to insert into the RECORD, "Peorian Invents Fat Substitute" from the Peoria Journal Star, Tuesday, April 24, 1990.

PEORIAN INVENTS FAT SUBSTITUTE

(By Clare Howard)

Scientists at the Northern Regional Research Center believe Oatrim, a fat substitute unveiled Monday, could rank among the most marketable products discovered at the Peoria laboratory.

"It's conceivable this could become a very substantial market because you can eat Oatrim at breakfast, lunch and dinner, "said chemist George E. Inglett, who developed the product. "It's conceivable it could become a multi-million-dollar or even a billion-dollar industry. I just don't know."

He said Oatrim could upstage Simplesse, the fat substitute announced with much hoopla earlier this year. Inglett announced this discovery in Boston at the 199th national meeting of the American Chemical Society.

"Oatrim has a double whammy, a magic bullet," Inglett said. "It's a fat substitute and has fewer calories but it also reduces cholesterol. Oatrim contains betaglucan, which reduces the bad LDL cholesterol and increases the good HDL cholesterol."

Oatrim is a feathery white powder which, when mixed with water, becomes a smooth, semi-solid gel that looks and feels like cream cheese but has almost no taste. It can take the place of fat in many cold foods including ice cream, frozen dairy desserts, margarine, cheese spreads, bakery products, cereals, yogurt, salad dressing, mayonnaise, peanut butter and beverages.

"It can be added to all the foods oat bran can't," said Inglett, 62. "This should greatly expand the market for oats."

More than a half-dozen major companies have contacted Inglett about the product. Inglett said he applied for his first patent for Oatrim on May 30, 1989, and will file two subsequent patents for improvements in the formulation.

"One very big company is interested. In fact, I have not talked with any company, that hasn't found it of interest," Inglett said. "If we make the right contacts, it shouldn't take long to reach the market."

Oatrim is made by heating oat bran or oat flour in water to 270 degrees Fahrenheit and adding an enzyme. After the betaglucan is released, the enzyme is killed and the solution put into a centrifuge to separate the soluble from insoluble materials. The soluble material looks like a light cream and becomes Oatrim when dried.

"Production is practical and not expensive," Inglett said.

Here is how 4 ounces of Oatrim frozen dessert stacks up against the same amount of premium vanilla ice cream:

Ice cream: 22 grams fat, 85 milligrams of cholesterol and 298 calories.

Oatrim frozen dessert: 0 grams fat, 4 milligrams cholesterol and 135 calories.

"Cholesterol levels are lowered 10 percent to 15 percent by eating 30 grams of Oatrim," Inglett said. "This is not a difficult thing to do. This is very practical. It's comparable to eating 8 ounces of an oat bran cereal.

"This is the real world. You don't have to eat Oatrim for 50 percent of your diet," he said.

A taste panel of 18 people trained to detect cereal flavors evaluated Oatrim-based products and consistently gave them high marks.

"They rated our soft-serve ice cream up there with superior premium ice cream made with lots of cream," Inglett said. "Oatrim is used in foods without changing the taste, texture or appearance."

Inglett said the recent Harvard University study that cast doubt on the ability of oat bran to lower cholesterol was misleading because it was based on subjects who had normal cholesterol levels. Studies have proven that oat bran lowers cholesterol in subjects with abnormally high levels, he said.

No studies have been done to see what effect the product has on people's cholesterol. However, Dr. Rosemary K. Newman of Montana State University tested it on chicks and found that it lowered their blood cholesterol levels 18 percent, the Associated Press reported.

"It certainly was effective in chicks," she said. "I'm excited about it" as a food for people.

Nearly a year ago, Inglett pinpointed Monday's meeting in Boston as the date he would announce his new product.

"If you disclose too soon you hurt the patent," he said. "But if you disclose too late you hurt the country and do a disservice to the agency.

"I would say Oatrim is a much better product than Simplesse. Simplesse is very good, but it doesn't have the qualities of beta-clucan."

Inglett said he has a personal interest in lowering cholestrol consumption in America. His wife had a heart attack 1½ years ago.

"People are not aware of how obese the American society is. The American diet needs a drastic overhaul. Our lifestyles have changed dramatically, but our diet is still back in the pioneer days," Inglett said.

HOLOCAUST ARCHIVES

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues John C. Klotz' article entitled "Holocaust Archives Must Remain Open," which recently appeared in New York Newsday. This article discusses how the rising tide of anti-Semitism, in Eastern Europe could possibly effect access to various archives in that region, especially Germany's Berlin Document Center.

The Berlin Document Center was previously closed to western scholars. Under United States Control, however, it was recently opened and the names of at least a half-million previously unidentified victims of the Holocaust have been discovered. United States control of the Berlin Document center only represents a temporary solution. Future U.S. administrations may not want to continue an exercise of American sovereignty in the German heartland.

I urge my colleagues to look closely at Mr. Klotz' article and note his ideas for the documentation and preservation of the names of the victims of the Nazi Holocaust.

The article follows:

[From Newsday, March 23, 1990]

HOLOCAUST ARCHIVES MUST REMAIN OPEN

(By John C. Klotz)

Two recent events, one promising, the other unsettling, underscore the extent to which civilization as a whole has yet to grasp the enormity of the evil that was the Holocaust.

The promising event was the gaining of access to Nazi archives in Eastern Europe that were previously closed to western scholars. These archives have already yielded the names of at least a half-million previously unidentified victims of the Holocaust.

The unsettling event is the rise of anti-Semitism in Eastern Europe. Some worry that if the present openness of the Eastern European governments succumbs to a rebirth of cultural anti-Semitism, governments might deprive scholars of access to various archives.

That fear extends to prospective German control over Nazi archives stored at the U.S.-controlled Berlin Document Center, a possibility that World Jewish Congress president Elan Steinberg said would be "a catastrophe." Destruction or loss of any of the documents, he has said, "would cause irreparable harm to the cause of justice and historical truth."

But continued American control of the Berlin Document Center is at best a temporary solution. Future U.S. administrations may find it inexpedient to continue an exercise of American sovereignty in the German heartland.

Clearly, the present system of haphazard national jurisdiction of Holocaust archives is inadequate. Any solution must, however, preserve access to the archives without appearing to impose a solution from above on emerging democracies sensitive about their newly independent status.

The answer may lie in an international treaty on Holocaust archive preservation and access. If all states equally surrender sovereignty over applicable archives to a single international authority, then no state can complain that its sovereignty has been arbitrarily violated.

National states have had no difficulty in surrendering portions of their sovereignty for mutual benefit—as, for example, in the NATO and the Warsaw Pact alliances. Preservation and memorialization of Holocaust archives is a fit subject for international legislation. An international convention could establish an appropriate international commission to assume jurisdiction over the relevant archives.

The survival of the names of both victims and perpetrators would not then depend on the whim of transient political regimes but could rely on the force of international law.

Such a commission would complement, not supplant, the painstaking work at Israel's Yad Vashem center and that of Holocaust memorial committees in various countries. By giving the force of international law to the preservation of archives and the public's access to them, a commission would augment the vital work of the present memorial committees.

Our move from the industrial age to the information age has seen increasing ease of access to archives of all kinds and the miniaturization of the archives themselves. For example, the list of the 3.5 million enrolled voters in New York City complete with addresses comprises less than two billion bits of information which, in the new laser disk drives available to even home computers, would require only an inch or so of shelf space.

To make the names of the Holocaust victims as readily accessible to every computer in the world would establish the reality of the Holocaust in the medium through which future generations will communicate and think.

The number of names in itself will be incontestable refutation of revisionists who seek to cast doubt on the fact of the Holocaust.

The human species projects the dignity of the individual through an identifying name. We ascribe near magical qualities to our names and instinctively fear those who would deny dignity by substituting a number for them. Indeed, such a substitution was an integral part of the process of dehumanization intrinsic to the Holocaust. There is power in Name.

The collection, preservation and memorialization of the names of the victims of the Holocaust is a priority not only for the Jewish community but for the whole of contemporary society. Guaranteeing the survival of the victims' identities and memorializing their names for all time in an accessible form would not only prove conclusively that the Holocaust occurred, but also would ensure the ultimate defeat of those who sought to destroy the victims' humanity in the gas chambers.

H.R. 770, THE FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I hope that very shortly the House of Representatives will consider H.R. 770, the Family and Medical Leave Act. This bill has been the subject of intense scrutiny and much debate over the past several years.

One provision of this bill will provide leave to workers to care for seriously ill, elderly parents. The importance of this provision cannot be overstated. Studies have demonstrated time and time again that the availability of family care is the primary factor in delaying institutionalization of the elderly. With a senior population increasing at a rapid pace, we must insure that longer lives for our senior citizens also means independence and freedom, to the greatest extent possible.

I want to commend the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare for lending its support to this legislation and working to create greater public understanding of the importance of elder care benefits. Recently, the National Committee added to its ongoing lobbying efforts an important grassroots mailing in support of the family and medical leave legislation. This mailing underscores the necessity of protecting the entire family—from the very youngest to the oldest. I look forward to working with the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare to insure family care benefits for the Nation's senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I insert an excerpt from this mailing reprinted in the RECORD immediately following this statement:

DEAR FRIEND: No one should be forced to choose between the health of a family member and a job! Yet, every day, many Americans are forced to make this intolerable and painful choice.

At Congressional hearings last year, National Committee member Myra Guski testified to her own personal tragedy when she was forced to resign a job she had held for ten years because her dying father needed her help in his last month of life. Unfortunately, Myra Guski's story is only one of many similar tragedies happening across the country.

Many of America's senior citizens rely on sons and daughters to provide care for them—Alzheimer's patients who need help with eating, bathing, dressing or getting to adult day care; and elderly cancer patients who need transportation to doctors, emotional support, and assistance before and after surgery.

Sadly, some family members who provide care to their aging parents face economic devastation when their employers threaten them with the loss of a job because they are away from their job temporarily.

America's strength depends upon preserving a strong family structure. We must protect wage earners and allow time off to care for sick parents and children if the family unit is to remain strong.

Congress is currently considering legislation, "The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1989", which will require employers to provide unpaid leave to parents when a child is born, adopted or seriously ill. The legislation also requires employers to provide unpaid leave when an employee's parent is seriously ill.

Unfortunately, big business groups are stalling progress on the bill, hoping that it will die. Even worse, business groups are urging Congress to exclude elderly parents from coverage under the bill and allow only personal medical leave or leave to care for young children. We must preserve a bill which protects elderly parents.

Many seriously ill seniors have nowhere to turn for help except to their families! What message are we sending to our young people if they see their parents lose jobs—at a time when they are already physically and financially strained to the breaking point because they are simultaneously caring for both an older and younger generation?

INTRODUCTION OF THE FAIR DISCLOSURE IN TAKEOVERS ACT OF 1990

HON. JOSEPH D. EARLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, today, the economic security of the United States is at risk. In this era of fast-paced corporate takeovers, the United States increasingly finds itself in a position of ignorance regarding who may ultimately be minding the shop and the true status of our economic security. Some of our largest companies have been the target of a frightening takeover strategy by raiders. Under this technique, corporate raiders make a tender offer for the company's shares and, at the same time, enter a proxy fight for control of the company's board. The shareholders are then placed in an extraordinary dilemma. They are obligated to act in the best interest of the company and their own investment with virtually no real knowledge of what the raider intends to do with its new acquisition or what actions the raider has taken with respect to past acquisitions. Unfortunately, for employers, employees, investors, and others who have a responsibility for the economic stability of our Nation, the results can be far different from promises made at the time of the transaction.

I do not believe that current disclosure requirements mandated by our securities laws are adequate. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced legislation to amend the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. The bill would create a new subsection 14(h) to the act. This new subsection provides for increased disclosures by acquirors who are seeking control of a target company by simultaneously engaging in a proxy contest and a tender offer. Under such circumstances, the bill would require the acquiror to, first, file the same information as is required of a public company which has filed a registration statement with the Commission in order to list and trade its securities; second, state the impacts of its past acquisitions on the companies acquired and the community; and third, state specifically any plans it has which will materially affect the business or impact the community of the target corporation. Finally, the amendment also requires that the acquiror's nominees for election to the board state their views and intentions regarding the acquiror's nominees for election to the board state their views and intentions regarding the acquiror's offer and other competing offers or alternative plans concerning the target corporation.

Throughout the 1980's, Mr. Speaker, hundreds of American companies have been the victims of the corporate takeover game. Norton Co., one of the largest employers in my home State of Massachusetts, became one such victim a few weeks ago. Norton's employees and management, along with thousands of constituents in its headquarters of Worcester and the rest of Massachusetts, have been gravely and rightly concerned about the future of this vital company. Norton manufactures abrasives, ceramics, engineering materials, and other strategic control products that have broad industrial and defense applications. Norton Co. has established an unparalleled record in business and corporate citizenship. It has maintained a record of excellent employee relations, and has made substantial educational and cultural contributions to the quality of life in Worcester and the rest of the State.

It was most distressing to witness, in recent weeks, how a company like Norton could suddenly become the target of a rapid-strike hostile takeover; in large part precisely because Norton had been financially conservative and could ultimately be manipulated by a hostile acquiror to generate large amounts of cash. Norton came face to face with an inescapable fact of corporate life. Once put in play, it must satisfy financial expectations of their current shareholders.

There is something amiss when a corporate raider can simply appear on the scene, on the eve of the annual meeting, with a combined tender offer and proxy solicitation, seeking control of its target company. The investment community and the public have a right to know a great deal more about such corporate raiders, via strict disclosure requirements, before such raiders are potentially entrusted with control of the corporate entities which are the financial life blood of our economic system.

The defects in current statutes were apparently a factor in precipating the lightning-quick tender offer-proxy fight which confronted Norton Co. several weeks ago. The experience of these past weeks tells me that we should not leave in place a regulatory regime which is likely to see other financially sound and well managed U.S. companies confronted by hostile takeovers on the eves of their own annual meetings.

Following is a section-by-section analysis of the bill, and I urge my colleagues to act now to support this necessary and important legislation.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE FAIR DISCLOSURE IN TAKEOVERS ACT OF 1990

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

This section provides that the Act may be cited as the "Fair Disclosure in Takeovers Act of 1990."

SECTION 2—PROXY SOLICITATIONS DURING TENDER OFFERS PROHIBITED UNLESS ACCOMPANIED BY ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Subsection (a) amends Section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (Exchange Act) by creating a new subsection (h). The new subsection (h) provides for increased disclosures by acquirors who are seeking control of a target company by simultaneously engaging in a proxy contest and a tender offer.

When such a two-pronged takeover tactic is employed, this subsection requires that the acquiror must file a statement with the Commission which provides the same information as would be required if the acquiror were filing a registration statement which provides for the listing and trading of its securities pursuant to Section 12 of 15(d) of the Exchange Act. (This requirement would only apply if the acquiror is not currently subject to such sections.) In addition, it requires the acquiror to state the impacts of its past acquisitions on the companies acquired and the community. Concerning the corporation currently under consideration by the acquiror, the amendment requires the acquiror to state specifically any plans it has which will materially affect the business or the community of such corporation. And finally, the amendment requires that the acquiror's nominess for election to the Boards state their views and intentions regarding the acquiror's offer and other competing offers or alternative plans concerning the target.

Paragraph (1)(A) of subsection (h) provides, for purposes of the subsection, that the term "acquiring person" means either (i) a person who has made or announced an intention to initiate a tender offer, or (ii) a person, other than a natural person, who owns or controls the acquiring peson described in (i). Subparagraph (B) provides that the term "engage in a proxy contest" means to solicit, or to permit the use of one's name to solicit, any proxy, consent, or authorization in respect to any security registered pursuant to section 12.

Paragraph (2) states that it will be unlawful for an acquiring person to engage in a proxy contest unless such person has filed a statement with the Commission which contains the information required by subparagraphs (A) through (E).

Subparagraph (A) provides that, if the acquiring person does not have a class of security registered pursuant to section 12 or 15(d) of the Exchange Act, the statement filed by such person shall contain such information as would have been required if the acquiring person was subject to the reporting requirements of section 12 or 15(d). The practical impact of this requirement is that the acquiring person would disclose the same information as a public company which has its securities listed and traded on a national securities exchange.

Subparagraph (B) requires that the acquiring person provide specific information regarding acquisitions made within the last fifteen years. Under this subparagraph, the acquiring person must first provide information describing the acquisition, including the identity of the business acquired and the material terms of the acquisition. Secondly, the acquiring person must describe any material changes in the business which took place following the acquisition, including a discussion of any divestiture, recapitalization, disposal, relocation or closing of any part of such business. In addition, a description of any changes in the level or type of employment, employee compensation or benefits, research or development, capitalization, or in the product line or market share of such products must be provided. Thirdly, the acquiring person must disclose any other changes which affected the community in which the business operated, including impacts on employees, suppliers, creditors, customers of the business, and local governments.

Subparagraph (C) requires the acquiring person to describe any plans or proposals which the acquiror has considered over the past two years regarding the current takeover target. The description of such plans or proposals shall include a discussion of the business and community impacts listed in subparagraph (B).

Subparagraph (D) provides that the acquiring person's statement shall include a statement by its nominees for election to the Board of Directors of the takeover target. The nominees' statements shall describe the process and procedures which such nominees shall undertake to discharge their fiduciary duties if elected. In particular, the subparagraph requires the nominees to state whether they intend to accept and assist the acquiring person's offer, or whether they intend to seek or explore other competing offers or alternatives, and to state their reasons for pursuing either course of action.

Subparagraph (E) grants the Securities and Exchange Commission (the Commission) the authority to require any other information of the acquiring person, by rule or regulation, as is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

Paragraph (3) grants the Commission the authority to exempt by rule or order any person from the requirements of this section as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

Subsection (b) provides that the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply to any proxy solicitation on or after the date of enactment of this subsection, including any solicitation that is commenced prior to such date.

TRIBUTE TO ARIZONA'S ROBERTO RUIZ

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the accomplishment of one of my constituents, Mr. Roberto Ruiz, president of Maya Construction Co., upon his selection as 1990 Small Business Administration's Arizona and Region IX Entrepreneurial Success Award.

This award honors businesses that began small, and after receiving Small Business Administration assistance, have grown into large businesses. As the SBA Regional Entrepreneurial Success Award winner, Mr. Ruiz and Maya Construction Co. become part of SBA's Hall of Fame.

Mr. Ruiz established Ruiz Engineering Corp. and Maya Construction Co. in 1977, utilizing his years of experience as a civil engineer both with the State and in the private sector. His plan was to develop the consulting engineering component of his business prior to undertaking construction activity. This enabled him to develop a solid business track record with projects across the entire spectrum of civil engineering. He then utilized the success and resulting profitability of the engineering concern to start Maya Construction Co.

In 1978 Maya was approved for participation in the Small Business Administration 8(a) program. This proved to be a significant and positive turning point in the history of the company. Then, as now, Maya specialized in contracting activities requiring specialized engineering knowledge and skills. These include concrete construction, highway and street construction, sewage and waterworks construction and general building construction.

The Small Business Administration 8(a) program was extremely instrumental in providing continued contract, financial, technical, and management support throughout Maya's formative years. The program enabled the firm to plan and organize for the future, and it provided the business with the needed flexibility to further develop and expand its financial and management resources.

In 12 years, Maya Construction has grown to become the largest Hispanic-owned business in Arizona. The company has experienced phenomenal growth during this period; from sales of $135,000 in 1979 to nearly $60 million in 1989. The firm employs over 350 Arizonans.

Through the guidance of Mr. Ruiz, the business has been able to respond to the many problems encountered by a small and growing concern. During this time, Mr. Ruiz has also found time to actively serve the community and to contribute both his time and resources to help many of those who are less fortunate.

As a result of the early partnership between the Small Business Administration and Roberto C. Ruiz, and the continuing leadership of Mr. Ruiz, Maya Construction Co. continues to grow and prosper.

THE REMOVAL OF CRAIG FIELDS

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in expressing my deep concern over the administration's decision to remove Craig Fields as the director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Ironically, the firing of Mr. Fields sends one of the clearest messages coming from the Bush administration and it is a disturbing one. It says the United States will continue to falter without a focused trade or economic policy.

Mr. Fields was a visionary in an administration dominated by economic advisers who are dangerously shortsighted. While others in the administration refused to admit that Government and industry must become partners in making the United States competitive in high technology, Fields created an oasis for fledgling technologies at DARPA.

Mr. Fields was one of the first to recognize that the United States was years behind in developing a high-definition television industry. DARPA funded research into high-definition display screens for use in the military, and Mr. Fields knew the connection this research had to civilian technology. He also knew the connection between commercial applications for advanced television and driver industries in electronics and semiconductors.

But Mr. Fields was a lone voice in the wilderness. Early on, Commerce Secretary Mosbacher talked about the importance of a Government role in developing advanced television technologies, but he was silenced by ideological purists within the administration.

Those purists argue that the Government shouldn't be providing seed money in industries that are too risky for private investors. What they fail to understand is that United States industry has been burned before, and is often wary of taking on competition that is heavily subsidized by foreign governments. United States television makers watched as television sets from Asian competitors were dumped in the United States, virtually wiping out United States firms. They watched as our consumer electronics industry went down the tubes.

The Chicago School ideologues may have won their battle with Craig Fields. Let's just hope the United States doesn't end up losing the war.

TRIBUTE TO ALFREDA KEMP

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual, Mrs. Alfreda Kemp of Washington Township, MI. Mrs. Kemp is being honored as Mother of the Year by the St. Barbara's Group 481 of the Polish Womens' Alliance.

It is no surprise to me that Mrs. Kemp is receiving this high honor. I can personally attest to what a remarkable woman she is. I have been proud to call her a friend of mine for many years. Her energy, kindness, and desire to help others are legendary.

Alfreda, her brother and her sisters attended Transfiguration School, received the sacraments of Holy Communion, Confirmation and Marriage, and their children were baptized and parents buried at this church. Alfreda has had a longstanding commitment to her faith. She has been a member of group 481 for the last 50 years and continues to participate in many social functions with the group.

Alfreda is a widely traveled individual. The focus of her travels during the past 18 years has been on her roots in Poland. She has sponsored and successfully returned 13 guests from Poland. Her Polish background and culture are deeply rooted—a feeling I believe all of us of Polish descent share.

However, no commitment is more important to Alfreda than her responsibility as a wife and mother. Alfreda was married to Stanley Kemp at Transfiguration Church. They are the parents of five sons, Michael, Daniel, Edmund, Carl, and Fred and grandparents of nine, Susie, Dan, Jessica, Sarah, Tim, Andrew, Scott, Fred, and Stacey. Her strength and drive are surely motivated by these strong relationships.

One example of Alfreda's strength and drive is her upcoming graduation from Macomb Community College [MCC]. At the age of 60, when most people are satisfied with the knowledge they have lived a long and fulfilled life, Alfreda began attending MCC. On May 11, 1990, Alfreda, at age 68, will be receiving her associate degree in general studies.

Currently, Alfreda is serving on the Board of Review for Michigan Property Taxes in Washington Township. I have every expectation that Alfreda will continue to enrich not only her life, but the lives of others in her active community involvement.

I am honored to recognize Alfreda on the floor of the House for her lifetime of giving to others. Her unselfish disposition is instilled in the hearts and minds of those she touches. Alfreda's contribution to our community will not be forgotten. I wish her the very best.

WORKERS MEMORIAL DAY: A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE AND COMMITMENT

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call to the attention of my colleagues that Saturday, April 28, is Workers Memorial Day. It is also the 20th anniversary of the passage of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, which represented this Nation's commitment to a safe and healthy workplace.

The national AFL-CIO, in conjunction with its State affiliates and member unions have chosen this date to remember the thousands of American workers who are killed or injured on the job every year. In fact, more than 10,000 American workers die every year from job-related injuries and disease. That's almost twice the number of Americans killed in the 10-year Vietnam war.

Many of these workers are killed or injured because of unsafe working conditions. They come from every craft and industry; agriculture, firefighting, grain handling, mining, construction, manufacturing, transportation, steel, textiles, and many others. The hazards they face include unguarded machinery, trench cave-ins, explosions, electrocution, asphyxiation, drowning, falls, poisoning, cancer from exposure to toxic and hazardous chemicals, and more.

Aside from actual workplace fatalities, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics every 6 seconds another worker is injured on the job resulting in a total of over 5.6 million injuries annually. Occupational exposures to toxic chemicals and hazardous substances can cause cancer, lung disease, birth defects, nervous system disorders, and other health problems thay may not become apparent until many years after exposure. The vast majority of these workplace accidents and diseases are preventable.

Safety on the job makes good business sense. Occupational injuries and illnesses cost our economy millions of dollars annually. Employees suffer from losing their ability to work and produce. Employers suffer by paying higher workers compensation costs and higher insurance premiums. Indeed, all of us bear the costs of workplace fatalities and injuries through higher costs.

America's workers expect the Occupational Safety and Health Administration [OSHA] to be their guardian in ensuring a safe and healthy workplace. Yet too often, OSHA has become bogged down in endless bureaucratic maneuvers which delay or prevent the issuance of needed safety standards in the workplace. A case in point is the 12-year fight by grain handlers to push OSHA to issue a grain dust standard for elevators and other grain facilities. In the last decade, 60 workers have been killed and 275 injured in grain dust explosions alone. The standard which OSHA finally issued permits up to one-eighth of an inch of dust in some grain facilities; certainly a sufficient amount to lead to combustion under many circumstances according to expert testimony. Therefore it should come as no surprise that this standard is being challenged in court at this time.

Yet even when OSHA may be inclined to act, the agency must constantly look over its shoulder to determine whether the political and financial gurus of the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] approve of their actions. IMB's priority is not safety in the workplace; it is reducing Government spending or regulatory activities that may well mean the difference between life and death in the workplace.

I was pleased to introduce legislation promoting workers' right to know about hazards in the workplace in 1983 and 1985. After much foot-dragging, OSHA finally took administrative action and issued a modest hazard communications standard in 1987. That same year, the House passed H.R. 162, the High Risk Occupational Disease and Notification Act, by a vote of 225 to 186. Unfortunately, the Senate did not act on this measure before the end of the 100th session. Last August, Chairman JOE GAYDOS of the Education and Labor Subcommittee on Health and Safety reintroduced this legislation again as H.R. 3067.

This important legislation would establish a Risk Assessment Board chaired by the Director of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health [NIOSH] to identify classes of workers who may be at risk because of workplace exposures to toxic or hazardous substances. The bill also establishes a protocol for notifying these workers and providing health care monitoring and counseling. Hopefully, this legislation will move forward during this session of Congress.

Workers Memorial Day is an occasion for all of us to remember those who have died working for their livelihood on the job. It is also an occasion for all of us to recommit ourselves to strict enforcement of our workplace health and safety laws.

TOMMY MARTIN PERFECT CHOICE FOR "AMERICAN HERO" AWARD

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I would like all of us today to recognize a man in my hometown who has distinguished himself both with his business success and his community service. That man is my friend, Tommy Martin, of Murfreesboro, TN.

To honor Mr. Martin's years of good deeds for his community, he has been selected to receive the first American Hero Award by the Jerry Anderson Foundation. The award is presented to the individual who best helps meet the foundation's goal, which is to find and nurture troubled and disabled youth, get them into a school environment, build self-confidence and a desire for learing and excellence, help them stay in school through graduation, and help them become productive citizens.

The foundation is named for Jerry Anderson, a former professional football player who lost his life in 1989 while rescuing two young boys from the Stones River.

Tommy Martin has personally helped more than 300 young people find jobs, in addition to many other positive activties.

Tommy began his business career as a grocery clerk in 1931. He soon caught the attention of the head of the Nashville agency for Mutual of New York insurance, and embarked on a career as a life insurance specialist. His career has been outstanding, to say the least.

He was unanimously chosen MONY Man of the Year for 1955, the company's highest honor, and he qualified for 50 company honor clubs and 36 National Quality Awards.

My alma mater, Middle Tennessee State University, has endowed a chair in Tommy's honor to provide instruction for students preparing for careers in insurance. He served as a trustee of the university, as well as of Martin College.

Tommy is famous around Murfreesboro not only for his achievements in the insurance business, but also for the amazing number of community activities that have drawn his help.

He once single handedly raised $32,000 in 5 hours to keep a hospital from closing. He led a drive to help a blind man start a grocery business. He sponsored parole for a prisoner.

Despite all these activities, he still managed to be a pillar of his and my church, St. Mark's Methodist, where he served as a steward, lay leader, and president of the Rutherford County Methodist Laymen's Club.

He has served as president of the chamber of commerce, the Lions Club, the Jaycees, the Rutherford County U.S. Savings Bond Association and as cochairman of the local industrial committee and as a director of Mid-South Bank & Trust Co. He also served as chairman of the board of the county hospital and as leader of the area Boy Scout fundraising campaign.

They call him unsinkable. He is truly unbeatable in his devotion to good deeds. Tommy Martin is the perfect recipient of the first Jerry Anderson American Hero Award.

JUDICIAL BRANCH ENCROACHES ON FUNDAMENTAL POWERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues are aware, the Supreme Court recently issued a decision which provides Federal judges with the power to issue a court-ordered tax increase as a remedy for a constitutional violation. I believe this decision, Missouri versus Jenkins, should be viewed with great concern by all Members of this Congress.

The Supreme Court's April 18, 1990, decision expands judicial power beyond that allowed by the Constitution while at the same time usurping a power which is the sole responsibility of the legislative branch—that power being the ability to levy taxes. Speaking for the four Justices in the minority on this issue, Justice Anthony Kennedy stated that the Court's "casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured Federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions." In my view, the Court's decision clearly violates the intent of the Founding Fathers and the basic understanding that most Americans have regarding the role of the judicial and legislative branches of our Government. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution unequivocally states that "[t]he Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes * * *." In this decision, the judiciary is clearly invading the prerogative of the legislative branch. Even the Washington Post agrees that the Supreme Court has gone too far in this case as is evidenced in the April 20, 1990, editorial which is reproduced at the end of my statement.

Mr. Speaker, Congress must respond to the Missouri versus Jenkins decision, and to this end I have today introduced legislation to prevent Federal courts from being able to levy taxes. My legislation would exercise the power given to Congress under article III of the Constitution to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts. In brief, my legislation would state that "no inferior court established by Congress shall have jurisdiction to issue any remedy, order, injunction, writ, judgment, or other judicial decree requiring the Federal Government or any State or local government body to impose any new tax or to increase any existing tax or tax rate." Such legislation would ensure that in the future Federal courts could not resort to the remedy of ordering a governmental body to raise taxes.

I urge my colleagues to familiarize themselves with this Supreme Court decision if they have not done so already. I am convinced that once the details of this decision are known and its implications appreciated, my colleagues will realize that a congressional response is absolutely necessary. Mr. Speaker, Congress must take immediate action on this matter in order to prevent such constitutional abuses in the future, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor my legislation.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 20, 1990]

COURT-ORDERED TAXATION

The taxpayers of Kansas City, Mo., must be wondering if they have for years completely misunderstood all the civics courses they took in high school: the ones where they learned about the separation of powers and the inequity of taxation without representation. Here they have been going along innocently believing that elected officials—people whose positions must be in some measure responsive to the views of their constituents and whose tenure in office is dependent on those constituents' approval—are the ones who set and impose taxes. But in a case involving school desegregation in their city, a series of federal courts has insisted that these principles are flexible and can be disregarded by a judge who assumes ultimate authority for raising and allocating this burden. This week five justices of the U.S. Supreme Court agreed that the Kansas City judge could order local authorities to double property taxes.

This case is unprecedented in two respects. The first is the scope of the remedies ordered by the judge. He ruled that in order to overcome the effects of previous segregation the Kansas City schools had to be made so exemplary that suburban youngsters would choose to return to the inner city to school. All schools were required to be completely renovated and air-conditioned. Every classroom was to be equipped with 15 microcomputers. Swimming pools, a planetarium and a temperature-controlled art gallery were mandated. And extras such as a broadcasting system, a 25-acre farm, movie studios and a model U.N. with simultaneous translation facilities were found to be necessary to vindicate constitutional rights. The judge, of course, didn't have to consider the cost—hundreds of millions of dollars—or the competing demands for city money for health, social services or law enforcement.

The second astonishing aspect of the case is the expansion of judicial power into an area understood to be the prerogative of a representative body of elected officials. As Justice Anthony Kennedy and three colleagues protested, "[The court's] casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions." The precedent for court-ordered tax increases to provide all sorts of services when constitutional rights are asserted is ominous. Imagine, for example, three separate federal judges in this city resolving cases involving St. Elizabeths, Lorton and Cedar Knolls ordering massive tax increases without regard to overall budget priorities, necessary expenditures not before the courts or even the cumulative impact of these three separate orders.

It is very hard to understand how the Supreme Court could have refused to review the fantastic remedies ordered by the Kansas City judge and why a majority of justices has approved the concept of judicially mandated taxes. There are other ways for a court to compel compliance with even an order like this without imposing a tax to pay for it.

A TRIBUTE TO CROWN POINT, IN, HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS AND THEIR VIDEO AGAINST SUBSTANCE ABUSE

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to 16 Crown Point, IN, High School students who have taken a positive and innovative initiative in educating their peers about the effects of drug and alcohol abuse.

From what originally began as a research paper assigned by their English teacher, Carol Wilson; these 16 high school seniors, Dee Ash, Cathy Benton, Rochelle Blankenship, Jered Dowdy, Debra Feller, Angie Ferro, Jeff Gang, Bill Hawkins, Al Noak, Chris Ortell, Chrystal Phillips, Sally Quasebarth, Chris Rogers, Sheryl Sacek, Tracy Sirbek, and Marcy Thalgott, wrote and produced a video to inform sixth fellow students about the dangers of substance abuse. Their message, which is also the title of the video, is simple yet powerful: "Be smart. Don't start."

The video includes informative and factual interviews with a local law enforcement agent and a doctor. Students learn that long-term use of marijuana can promote emphysema and lung cancer, cause intrauterine growth retardation in females and low-birth weights in newborns, and that excessive use of alcohol damages brain cells, the heart muscle, and the liver.

Perhaps, the most important message presented in the video is the fact that one's life can be full and complete without the influence of drugs and alcohol. Through the use of skits performed by several of the senior high school students and during a brief question and answer period after the video, students learn that they are not alone when confronted by peer pressure to experiment with illegal substances. Above all, students learn to respect themselves and to take responsibility for their own actions.

We so often hear about the negative aspects of alcohol and substance abuse. For example, we know that an estimated 72.4 million Americans, age 12 and above, have tried marijuana, cocaine, or other illegal drugs at least once in their lifetime. Or that in a 1989 survey conducted by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, 60 percent of the high school seniors surveyed have reported drinking alcohol in the last 30 days while 33 percent stated that they consumed five or more drinks in the last 2 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the efforts of these 16 students for their commitment and dedication to educating themselves and their peers about the devastating and life-altering effects of substance abuse. I am proud of their accomplishment and believe that through their actions, more young people will be inspired to "be smart and don't start."

CORPORATE TAKEOVER LEGISLATION

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today for myself and several other members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation dealing with the issue of corporate takeovers.

Mr. Speaker, over the past several months, every member of this House has become aware of increased attempts by foreign companies to take over U.S. companies. Reports of foreign companies doing business in the United States who are not paying their fair share of taxes have captured the attention of Members of the House such as Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and Majority Leader GEPHARDT—as well as the Internal Revenue Service. Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI and Mr. GEPHARDT have both recently introduced legislation dealing with the foreign "tax gap."

In recent days, however, my colleagues in the Massachusetts congressional delegation have reached a fuller appreciation of the problem of foreign acquisitions of U.S. corporations due to a takeover attempt of one corporation—the Norton Co. of Worcester, MA. Norton is the subject of a hostile takeover battle by the British conglomerate BTR. Today, we propose legislation which would address, in a comprehensive, reasoned manner, the issue of foreign takeovers of U.S. corporations.

Let me state for the record, Mr. Speaker, that whereas our legislation is prompted by the Norton case, it is by no means targeted solely to that transaction. Many of the provisions of this legislation have long been recommended by some of the best and brightest corporate tax scholars in America.[1] Another provision of the bill is similar to a provision of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that the Members of this House dealt head-on with the many loopholes in the tax laws which actually provide incentives for foreign companies to take over U.S. companies. In my view, these changes should have been made as part of the 1986 Tax Reform Act; the whole purpose of that legislation was to take tax considerations out of economic decisionmaking.

These many tax incentives are especially troubling when foreign companies take over U.S. companies, shut down U.S. operations, and cost American citizens their jobs. It seems perverse that American workers who lose their jobs are actually subsidizing—through the income tax laws—this type of activity.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that the Ways and Means Committee—on which I serve—take prompt action on my legislation. I insert a technical description of my legislation at this point in the RECORD:

PROPOSAL RELATING TO CERTAIN HOSTILE TAKEOVERS OF U.S. CORPORATIONS BY FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

SEC. 1.—Mandatory Section 338 Election in the Case of Certain Hostile Takeovers

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, a corporation may elect to treat the purchase of another corporation's stock as a purchase of the target corporation's assets under section 338 of the Internal Revenue Code. If such an election is made, the acquiring corporation may be able to obtain a stepped-up basis for the target's assets; the target corporation must recognize gain on the deemed sale of its assets.

If the section 338 election is made, the old target is deemed to have sold its assets as of the close of the acquisition date for their fair market value in a single transaction, and the new target is deemed to have purchased all of the assets of the old target as of the beginning of the day after the acquisition date. Thus, to the extent that the deemed purchase price of the stock exceeds the target corporation's adjusted basis in the assets, the target corporation must recognize gain.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

Under the bill, a section 338 election would be mandatory in the case of a hostile takeover of a U.S. corporation by a foreign person (directly or through one or more corporations or other entities). A hostile takeover is a takeover where a majority of the independent board members of the target corporation disapprove the takeover. Thus, under the bill, the target corporation would have to recognize gain on the appreciation in its assets.

For purposes of determining whether there is a qualified stock purchase triggering the mandatory 338 election, the following rules apply. First, the person who makes the offer to acquire stock of a corporation is treated as the purchasing corporation. Second, any stock acquired by a person acting in concert with the offereror (or any person related to the offeror) is treated as being acquired by the offeror. Third, the purchase is a qualified stock purchase, for purposes of the bill, if (1) the acquiring corporation acquires more than 50% of the target corporation's stock or (2) the acquiring corporation has effective control over the target corporation.

Under the bill, a foreign person can have effective control over a domestic corporation in several instances. As one example, the sponsors intend that a foreign person has effective control over a domestic corporation where the foreign person controls the board of directors of the domestic corporation. This can occur even where the foreign person does not own a majority of stock in the domestic corporation at the time of the acquisition.

For example, if the acquiring foreign person succeeds in replacing a majority of the members of the Board of Directors of the domestic corporation, the foreign person has effective control over the domestic corporation for purpose of the provision. Such a result could occur, for example, in the case of a proxy fight.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision applies to hostile qualified stock purchases, with respect to which the acquisition date is on or after April 26, 1990.

SEC. 2—Additional Limitations on Earnings Stripping

PRESENT LAW

Interest expenses of a U.S. corporate taxpayer are, in general, deductible. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 imposed limitations on interest deductibility, however, in the case of interest to a related party that is not subject to current U.S. taxation.

Under the provisions of OBRA '89, interest deductions are disallowed for interest paid to related parties that are not subject to U.S. tax on the interest received if the corporation's debt-to-equity ratio exceeds 1.5-to-1. The disallowance only applies to the extent that the corporation has "excess interest expenses", which is the excess of the corporation's interest expenses over 50% of its adjusted taxable income for the year.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

Under the bill, no deduction for "disqualified interest" as that term is defined under present law is allowed, regardless of whether the corporation has excess interest expenses. The provision only applies in the case of a foreign person acquiring (directly or indirectly) control of a domestic corporation in a hostile takeover.

The terms "control" and "hostile takeover" have the same meaning as in section one of the bill.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision applies in cases where control is acquired on or after April 26, 1990.

VERDA WELCOME, 1907-90

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, a great American leader from my home State of Maryland died this week. Verda Freeman Welcome, the first female African-American State Senator in American history, died over the weekend at the age of 83.

Verda Welcome was elected to the Maryland House of Delegates from Baltimore in 1958, was elected to the Senate in 1962 and served until her retirement in 1982.

I was fortunate to have been able to work closely with Senator Welcome as a member of the senate and as its president. In particular, Senator Welcome and I worked together on the Maryland Voting Rights Act. She was a special senator, beloved by the people who elected her and by her colleagues.

Verda Welcome's devotion to service in her community is demonstrated in the fact that although she retired from public office in 1982, Senator Welcome continued to maintain an office in the 3400 block of Holmes Avenue in Baltimore to keep in touch with the neighborhood until 1988.

Senator Welcome was a courageous public servant, who banded together a group of black Baltimore women known as "the valiant women" to defeat the Jack Pollack democratic machine in the Fourth district in 1958 when Ms. Welcome was first elected to the House of Delegates.

Senator Welcome was born in Lake Lure, NC in 1907. When her mother died, she stayed in school by taking night classes so she could help take care of her brothers and sisters during the day.

She moved to Baltimore in 1929, and 3 years later graduated from Coppin Normal School as a teacher. She taught in the Baltimore schools for 11 years.

In 1935, she married the late Dr. Henry C. Welcome. Before her political activity began, Verda Welcome was involved in many neighborhood causes.

One can imagine the obstacles in the way of a black female state senator in the 1960's. Once, while attending a legislative conference in Ocean City, then-Delegate Welcome was given a small, windowless room next to the furnace in the basement of the hotel. As a result, she introduced a public accommodations law that opened Maryland's hotels and public places to all citizens. It was my privilege to work with her on that legislation.

And in 1964, Senator Welcome successfully evaded an assassination attempt in front of her Baltimore home.

Senator Welcome had many specific accomplishments in the Maryland general assembly. She successfully sponsored the upgrading of Morgan State College into a university, and she was a pioneer in the earliest fights to ban cigarette smoking in public places.

Verda F. Welcome's compassion, courage, and convictions were a special addition to the Maryland senate and the entire State of Maryland. She will be deeply missed, but her memory will be one which the State takes great pride in for decades to come.

Generations of African-American men and women will be elected to office in Maryland and across the country. They will be standing on the shoulders of Verda Welcome, a quiet trailblazer for justice. It is incumbent on those of us who knew her to make sure that Verda Welcome's legacy is not forgotten.

THE NEED FOR A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

HON. LARRY E. CRAIG

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, today as each Member steps up and says his piece about the budget resolution and calls for affirmative action on our budget deficit, I would like to remind my colleagues that not only do we need to focus on the particular proposals within the budget resolution, but we also need to look at reforming the budget process as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I am referring to enacting a balanced budget amendment to our Constitution. Since I first entered the House in 1980, I have worked diligently with Members like Mr. STENHOLM of Texas to build a coalition on this issue. Slowly, we have done that, and today we have 246 cosponsors on our balanced budget amendment, House Joint Resolution 268. Yet, even with a majority of support for this measure, it has not been considered—indeed, no balanced budget amendment proposal has been considered—by the Judiciary Committee or the full House during this session.

Now is the time, Mr. Speaker. Now is the time to have full debate on the floor of this House on the merits of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. I hope the House leadership will recognize the bipartisan support the balanced budget amendment has and allow House Joint Resolution 268 come to the floor for a vote during this legislative session.

Back in my home State of Idaho, we price ourselves on our fiscal responsibility. We work hard and live within our means. Mr. Speaker, those are values all of us profess to believe in, but Congress has not practiced any such fiscal responsibility in reality. Enacting a balanced budget amendment to our Constitution would move Congress back on to the road of fiscal responsibility. I urge my colleagues to remember that voting for or against the budget resolution and its amendments will not solve our deficit problems. Our deficit problems are caused by the system within which we work. The rules of the game presently encourage deficit spending. We need to change those rules to ensure that they encourage fiscal responsibility instead. Only then will our deficit problems be resolved.

THE INDUSTRIAL DEFENSE ACT OF 1990

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, as we debate the budget resolution today, we are about to begin a new era in our country's national security policy. The events inside the Soviet Union and eastern bloc have changed the shape of history forever. The threat to United States national security from the Soviet Union and its allies is now severely diminished. We can finally start to reap the peace dividend that Americans have worked so hard for.

Yet, we must continue to be prepared for future threats to U.S. national security from all corners of the globe. While we certainly have the luxury to reduce our defense expenditures from massive, cold war levels, we must also maintain our defense industrial base, the very foundation of our military readiness. Unfortunately, it is in sad shape. We have been increasingly losing our Nation's capability to produce defense goods at the expense of our foreign trade competitors. The saddest part of the whole situation is that it is happening with the assistance of our own Defense Department.

In a suit filed by the National Council of Industrial Defense [NCID], the NCID accused the Department of Defense of granting blanket waivers of the Buy American Act of 1933 in negotiating memorandums of understanding [MOU's] with foreign governments. These blanket waivers have come at a huge cost to American workers and business. Currently the DOD estimates that foreign contracts make up close to $4 billion of the Pentagon's annual procurement budget. Yet, the DOD fails to keep track of most foreign subcontracts. When the subcontracts are counted, NCID estimates that between $20 to $30 billion of the Defense Department's procurement budget goes to foreign contractors.

DOD claims that it must be allowed to grant blanket waivers because it gets into political questions that should be decided by the executive branch in handling foreign policy. Yet, it runs contrary to Congress' original intent of the Buy American Act to allow this multibillion dollar farce to continue.

Today, I am offering a bill that would require the Department of Defense to follow Congress' original intent in enacting the Buy American Act of 1933. The Industrial Defense Act of 1990 would require the Secretary of Defense to grant waivers of the Buy American Act on a case-by-case basis, opening up the Defense Department's compliance with the act to congressional scrutiny. I hope you will join me in helping assure American workers jobs and protecting the integrity of our Nation's defense industrial base.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE 1989-90 WALTONVILLE SPARTANS

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, one of my favorite movies is "Hoosiers," based on the story of an Indiana high school team that overcomes the odds to win a State title. It could have just as easily been an Illinois school, because we take no back seat in our enjoyment of the game or quality of its play.

That story is told in real life each year in our State tournaments, and this year a team from my district lived that experience. They did not win the State title, but they did have a magical year filled with thrilling victories and agonizing defeats.

I'm proud to represent the city of Waltonville in Congress and to congratulate the 1989-90 Waltonville High School Spartans on their season. The Spartans were guided to a 20-10 season by Ed Belva, a man with whom I started my brief coaching career. I envy Ed's ability to teach the lessons you learn through team sports.

The Spartans reached the Eldorado Tournament finals, claimed runner-up in the Mid-South Conference, and then came on strong to win regional and sectional championships. Waltonville was defeated in the class A supersectional by the team that eventually won third place in the State.

I congratulate everyone associated with the team for the way they performed throughout the year. I wish them continued success both on and off the court, and hope they will always draw great satisfaction from their accomplishments this year.

I am entering into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the names of the people who played important roles in making this season so successful.

1989-90 WALTONVILLE SPARTANS

JAPAN AND SUPER 301

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, this morning's paper quotes the Trade Representatives as saying it is unlikely that the President will designate Japan a Super 301 country. If the Trade Representative is right, I can only conclude that the President is more concerned about appeasing the Japanese investors who finance our national debt, than about standing up for the American businesses who can help us get back in the black.

Japan is the world's second largest economy with a GNP of nearly $3 trillion. It is the second largest trading partner of the United States and is by far the largest potential market for new U.S. exports. While United States exports to Japan have increased over the last year, they remain far below what they should be, based on the quality and competitiveness of American goods and the size of the Japanese market. Despite intensive efforts by United States Trade Negotiators and United States businesses, our trade deficit with Japan has failed to fall below the $50 billion range.

The simple fact is that even America's most highly competitive industries—semiconductors, telecommunications, wood products, automotive parts, electronics, advanced metals, and many others—have been denied a fair chance to sell their products in Japan. Japan's closed system is the product of economic policies and collusive business practices that have been outlawed in this country for 100 years.

Failure to designate Japan under Super 301 will directly undermine the credibility of United States positions advanced in ongoing negotiations with Japan, such as the structural impediments initiative and signal acceptance of the status quo. For American manufacturers, acceptance of the status quo is in fact surrender.

Our Nation's security depends on a strong America—both technologically and industrially. I, therefore, call on the President to designate Japan as a priority country and its unfair trade barriers as priority practices under Super 301 of the 1988 Trade Act.

SDI NOW MORE THAN EVER

HON. BOB LIVINGSTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, imagine the following: Shortly after Christmas, Moslem separatists in the Soviet Union assault an army depot believed to store nuclear weapons. Taken completely by surprise, Soviet guards are overrun. The Kremlin reacts quickly, however, and dispatches emergency reinforcements who uproot the insurgents and secure the base. That night, Soviet television informs the nation that "most of the material and ammunition has since been recovered."

Unfortunately, this scenario is not the plot of a new Robert Ludlum novel nor a sequel to "The Hunt for Red October." It is a real-life incident, recounted by Robert Fox of the London Daily Telegraph.

That incident reinforces a prospect of great concern to United States strategic planners: that a Soviet civil war could eventually involve nuclear weapons. Should this occur, an internal Soviet dispute could quickly be transformed into a global nuclear nightmare. Even today, if disgruntled elements within the Red army purposely launch a missile toward our shores, there is nothing America could do. Not a thing.

As democracy flowers throughout most of the world, it is tempting to see America's Strategic Defense Initiative—SDI—as spurious at best and anachronistic at worst. "The enemy is gone," we hear, "why spend billions on a weapons system to defeat an enemy that doesn't exist?"

That is a good question—but it is based on a false premise.

The fact that the Soviet Union is pulling troops out of Eastern Europe is irrelevant to the SDI program. SDI was never intended to halt a blitzkrieg invasion of Western Europe. SDI is inherently a defensive weapon. It has no offensive utility and indeed would be used if and only if another country launches a strike against America first.

For their part, despite pulling back from Eastern Europe, the Soviets have renewed their drive toward ballistic missile superiority, modernizing their SS-18's and mobile SS-24's and SS-25's. So while Gorbachev is idling on one front, his overall build-up proceeds apace.

Second and more important, the Soviets are but one of the adversaries against which SDI offers protection. Indeed, for all its imperialist designs, the Soviet leadership still, I believe, understands the true horror of nuclear weaponry. They know—many of them first-hand—the devastation wreaked on their homeland during World War II—estimated Soviet casualties: 20 million. Seeing that sort of destruction from conventional weaponry alone must give at least temporary pause to even the most ideology committed Marxist.

Clearly, the same cannot be said of leaders in, for example, Iran, Libya, and Iraq. Yet, they too will soon be owners of nuclear weaponry.

Look at the news: In late March, United States and British agents arrested 5 people in London for allegedly trying to smuggle 40 nuclear weapons triggers to Iraq. Two weeks later, customs officials in Britain, Turkey, and Greece seized pieces of steel tubing en route to Iraq. Officials believe the tubing was to be connected to form a hardened artillery barrel capable of firing nuclear missiles.

Libya and Syria each dream of being the Arab world's preeminent power, so each is racing to develop long-range ballistic missiles. Brazil, India, and Pakistan are also trying their best. "In all," states CIA Director William Webster, "at least 15 developing nations will be producing their own ballistic missiles by the year 2000."

With all those countries possessing literally thousands of intercontinental missiles, chances of a launch rise exponentially. Perhaps the launch could be accidental. More likely, however, it would be the deliberate work of a deranged mind. Libya's leader Mu'ammar Qadhafi exemplified this when he declared this spring that "if we had had a deterrent force of missiles able to reach New York—during the American raid—we would have directed them at that very moment."

Therein lies the danger that SDI can avert. It is America's insurance policy against both accidental launch and nuclear blackmail. Moreover, with a price not substantially greater than some of the missile programs now debated in Congress, SDI is financially feasible.

Importantly, though, the benefits of SDI do not stop at the ozone layer. Spin-off technology from SDI research is already reshaping our society and the promise of tomorrow's improvements is even greater. Computer engineers have incorporated SDI optical technology to produce a generation of an inexpensive supercomputer that works 1,000 times faster than ordinary models. A laser-treatment process orginally developed for the SDI program is now used to wash blood supplies of diseases such as herpes, measles, hepatitis-B, and AIDS. This could help reduce health care costs.

Even the U.S. auto industry will benefit. Temperature-resistant carbon fiber developed for SDI is being tested for use in car engines. These components are more durable than steel and will likely decrease maintenance costs.

These are but a few of the spin-offs America has already realized from SDI research. Clearly, more impressive spin-offs are coming—but only if we spend the effort and resources needed to reach them.

For 7 years, America's SDI program has been ridiculed by liberal Congressmen, misguided peaceniks and concerned scientists. Yet despite its rocky funding, the program has persevered. It helped prod the Soviets into accepting Ronald Reagan's medium-range missile reduction proposal, which culminated in the 1987 United States-Soviet arms reduction treaty. Owing to its clearly defensive nature, the future of SDI may hold even more arms reduction treaties.

That, however, will only happen if we make it happen. The choice is ours and the time to decide is now.

ENTREPRENEURSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES AND AROUND THE WORLD

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, recent events in Central and Eastern Europe have captured our imagination and inspired ideas as have very few international developments since the end of the Second World War. The burgeoning democracies on the eastern side of what was the Iron Curtain are now actively seeking the aid and counsel of the United States and the American people to help make a successful transition to freedom. The central question before us is this: How can we best help.

On April 8, 1990, an essay offering a thought-provoking approach to the challenges facing Central and Eastern Europe—and the United States—was published by the Los Angeles Times. It's author is Mike Malone, a well-respected contributor to the San Jose Mercury News and the host of "Malone", a syndicated public television program produced by KTEH-TV in San Jose, CA. Mr. Malone argues forcefully, and persuasively, that it is entrepreneurship which will bolster the freedoms achieved in the Warsaw Pact. He believes that the United States should do all it can to foster free enterprise and unleash the creativity which has been welled up these last 45 years.

Mr. Speaker, Mike Malone in his article correctly points to his home and mine—California's Santa Clara County, better known to the world as Silicon Valley—for the model of creativity and free enterprise to help guide the transformation of Eastern Europe. I urge my colleagues to consider the course of action he details, and I am pleased to provide my fellow Members of Congress with the text of Mr. Malone's article.

HOW TO HELP EASTERN EUROPE

(By Michael S. Malone)

Eastern Europe is in a race with calamity.

Our immediate response, as always, will be to send money. But money to whom? To the new governments? For the past 45 years, that's what we've done for foreign governments, both democratic and tyrannical, benign and murderous—and the inevitable result nearly everywhere has been billions wasted on insane public works projects, dead currencies, poorly considered agricultural ventures and blind temporary solutions to serious long-term problems.

Our aid, for the most part, has harvested resentment, intractable debt and misery for its recipients when the initial cash infusion was used up and only the cash demand remained.

Is there any reason to assume that similar efforts towards Eastern Europe, even if made with the purest of motives, won't have identical results? In a country such as Poland, with its combination of ecological destruction, weak infrastructure and obsolete industry, can any amount of money stave off decades of impoverishment and unemployment?

Yes. But only if the money is offered intelligently. That will mean abandoning traditional aid programs and embarking upon radically new ones. Government-to-government money, food, even joint ventures with major U.S. corporations will not be enough.

There is only one proven way to turn an economy around and create thousands of new jobs in the time that Eastern Europe has available:

Entrepreneurship.

We must aid the emerging entrepreneurs in the newly freed republics of Eastern Europe. Only they can save their societies by quickly creating sufficient economic dynamism and employment.

There has been much talk lately about reviving the Marshall Plan. Consider an alternative. Call it the Terman Plan, after the visionary Stanford University professor who created Stanford Industrial Park and helped get Hewlett-Packard (among other great companies) under way.

Fifty years ago, Frederick Terman realized before anyone else that entrepreneurship was essential to the economic dynamo of the modern high-tech world. But more than that, he understood that for entrepreneurship to survive it must be cradled in a complex web of supporting institutions: the science and business departments of nearby colleges and universities; credit lines from banks; equity money from venture capitalists; suppliers and distributions and a whole army of consultants on everything from real estate and office equipment to public relations, law and bookkeeping.

Such an infrastructure is not easy to achieve. But when it works, as it did in Silicon Valley by the mid-1970s, an entrepreneurial community is an extraordinary thing to behold: an unsurpassed generator of wealth and employment.

The goal of the Terman Plan would be to foster such entrepreneurial communities in Eastern Europe. If similar structures can create miracles in a decade's time in South Korea and Taiwan, why not on even shorter notice in Bulgaria and Hungary, starting as they do with better-educated populations?

Unlike Western Europe, which suffers from a class structure that looks with ill-disguised contempt upon "shopkeepers," the countries of Eastern Europe are, for the moment at least, societies of near-equals. It is precisely from such settings that economic powerhouses emerge. In fact, a leavening of Eastern European entrepreneurship might be the one thing that Europe 1992 needs to succeed.

Furthermore, as was the Marshall Plan before it, the Terman Plan is something only the United States can do. Japan certainly can't help: It too is struggling to understand—and imitate—our unique ability to create innovative new companies.

Unfortunately, desire doesn't match ability. No one ever wants to help the entrepreneur. Even here in the United States, a country that was built by entrepreneurs and only retains its economic strength because of them, they are undermined by government and resented by big business. And entrepreneurs themselves, notoriously antisocial and by their very nature antipathetic to bureaucracies, rank and rules do little to help their cause.

Yet at the same time, entrepreneurial start-up companies are the most democratic of institutions. They are indifferent to race, age, class or gender, instead rewarding creativity, pluck and hard work. That's why, with communism effectively dead, and economic and political democracy at last earning its greatest hearing, we desperately need entrepreneurs to plead our case.

Consider the Silicon Valley company Mips Computer Systems Inc. On Dec. 12, just weeks after the fall of the Berlin Wall and days before the revolution in Romania, Mips had its initial public offering of stock. By the end of the day, given the closing price of $19.50 per share, the company was valued at about $400 million. About 20 of the largest shareholders made more than $1 million that day. Perhaps 200 more—nearly all employees—saw their net worth increase by $100,000 to $500,000.

Mips isn't unique. Here in Silicon Valley, we've become accustomed to meteoric companies bursting onto the stock tables. Hewlett-Packard, Intel, Advanced Micro Devices, Amdahl, Rolm, Tandem Computers, Apple Computer, Sun Microsystems—each in turn among the fastest-growing firms in American business history. Two thousand companies, a half-million jobs, scores of life-enhancing products, tens of billions of dollars in revenue—and all of it arose in just 20 years from the minds of entrepreneurs.

You can be sure that there are at least as many budding entrepreneurs in Eastern Europe, notably in retailing, agriculture and consumer products. The thriving black markets in those countries prove that these men and women exist. Freedom and capital are what they need to grow.

With help, the first new start-up firms in Eastern Europe would probably specialize simply in more efficient distribution of domestic and Western goods. But more sophisticated technology and manufacturing companies would appear soon thereafter.

Experience suggests, in this increasingly internationalized business world in which we now operate, that venture capitalists, bankers and professional service providers, if given some guarantee of an enduring free market environment, will quickly be just as eager to work under a Terman Plan with new start-up companies in Prague as they are with young firms in Sunnyvale.

The Terman Plan would have two distinct tasks:

First, it would help create an environment in Eastern Europe conducive to entrepreneurship. This could include providing Overseas Private Investment Corp. insurance against political instability; sponsoring modern labs, student scholarships and guest professorships at Eastern European universities; extending small business loans; providing computer networks armed with inventory control software; building "garage-type" industrial parks; helping underwrite second-sourcing agreements with U.S. manufacturers and even offering courses on writing business plans.

Then, building upon this environment, the Terman Plan could form a venture fund directed by the U.S. electronic industry and venture capital veterans (a surprising number of whom are themselves Eastern European refugees or the children of such refugees) dedicated to the formation of new firms in those countries.

Such a fund would operate as its private counterparts do: soliciting business plans, working with start-up teams and joining up with other venture firms on investments. And, as do other venture capital firms, it might actually make money as its new corporate charges "went public." These gains could be reinvested in the fund or even, remarkably, be returned to the U.S. government.

Such a program would cost no more than $300 million, two-thirds of that for investment. That's a tiny amount compared to our past wasted efforts in the rest of the world. And we might even get the money back; that is, if government officials can resist telling the fund directors where to invest for political, instead of sound economic, reasons.

Would a Terman Plan actually work? Ironically, the closest precedent for such a program was the opening of the American West—a legendary success. Still, success of a Terman Plan is not guaranteed. Every one of those thousands of new companies that would be created might turn out to be uncompetitive and fail. But then again, there might be a Mips or even an Apple in there, growing like topsy, spinning off dozens of other businesses that would sprout like seeds and grow into great plants. That's the thing about entrepreneurs. They are a messy and unpredictable lot.

MEMORIAL TO THE INDIANS OF BATTLE OF LITTLE BIG HORN

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that at last will give recognition to the fallen Indian warriors of the most famous battle ever fought in the Indian wars—the Battle of the Little Bighorn.

Lt. Col. George Armstrong Custer has long been honored along with 268 of his forces who died in this battle at what is now known as the Custer Battlefield National Monument in my congressional district of eastern Montana. In 1881, the U.S. Government erected a monument over the mass grave-site on Last Stand Hill for soldiers, scouts, and civilians attached to the 7th Cavalry who died there.

But the legislation I am introducing today will begin to restore historical balance to the battle. While many members of the Cheyenne, Sioux, and other Indian nations gave their lives defending their families and their traditional lifestyle and livelihood, nothing stands at the battlefield to commemorate those individuals.

My bill authorizes the design and construction of a memorial to the Indians who gave their lives in defending their homeland, who gave their lives in an effort to hold onto their heritage, their way of life.

But this legislation will do more than bring recognition to one group of courageous Indians. This year marks the 100th anniversary of the last battle fought by the Indians—the Battle of Wounded Knee. And, with the theme of "Peace Through Unity," this memorial recognizes that only through peaceful relationships among people of all races can our Nation achieve the unity that is so vital to continued strength and prosperity.

I wish to note that the entire State of Montana stands to benefit from erection of this memorial. Its establishment will further enhance the already worldwide and national significance of Custer Battlefield National Monument, increasing its drawing power as a major historical site in the United States.

Because of its significance in Indian history as the site of the last major victory by the Indians, Custer Battlefield has long deserved the recognition it has received. Now, with the establishment of this memorial, its importance will be fittingly elevated in the pages of U.S. history.

I ask my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

FORMER SENATOR MILLARD E. TYDINGS HONORED BY MARYLAND CITIZENS

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute and pay tribute to the memory of Senator Millard E. Tydings, a former Member of both the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate. His 28 years of congressional service follows many other achievements, most notably his service to the citizens of Maryland whom he served in the Maryland House of Delegates and his recognized bravery during World War II. In fact, his brilliant leadership on the battlefield not only saved lives, it also was the basis for a battle plan that was taught at West Point for years.

I am proud to inform my colleagues that Senator Tydings was a resident of Maryland's First Congressional District. This year would have been Senator Tydings 100th birthday and the mayor and city council of Havre de Grace, MD, have honored this great leader's memory by proclaiming 1990 as Millard E. Tydings Year.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to share with my colleagues a short biography on Senator Tydings during his centennial celebration.

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL, HAVRE DE GRACE, PROCLAIM 1990 MILLARD E. TYDINGS YEAR

The Mayor and City Council of Havre de Grace, Maryland have honored one of their most distinguished citizens by proclaiming 1990, The Millard E. Tydings Year. Senator Millard Tydings was born Easter Sunday, April, 1890, and would have been 100 years old this year.

Senator Tydings served his State and nation his entire adult life, from 1916 to 1950, the first half of the 20th Century. A graduate of the old Maryland Agriculture and Engineering College at College Park, Maryland, he subsequently attended law school at the University of Maryland. He became an engineer and a lawyer, and was elected to the Maryland House of Delegates in 1916 shortly before his National Guard unit was activated.

When the United States declared war on Germany, Tydings' National Guard unit returned from nine months service on the Mexican border. He served in the American Expeditionary Forces on the battlefields of France in Maryland's Blue and Gray 29th Division. He returned home a Lieutenant Colonel in command of the division machine guns. He was decorated with the Distinguished Service Medal, and the Distinguished Service Cross, "for bravery beyond the call of duty." He developed the battle plan for one of the first major machine gun barrages to protect advancing infantry troops at the Battle of Etrayes Ridge. The Ridge was the last German fortification along the middle of the allied lines. The Tydings plan was taught for many years at West Point.

After the war he served in the Maryland legislature where he was elected Speaker of the House of Delegates. During his term as Speaker, he was the author of the bill combining the Maryland Agricultural and Technical College and the University of Maryland Technical School in Baltimore into the present University of Maryland.

In 1922 he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. In 1926, he was elected to the U.S. Senate where he served until 1950.

In the U.S. Congress he was a leader of the Conservative Jeffersonian Democrats. He believed that less government was the best government, that economy in national government was most important, and that a burgeoning national debt would be disastrous. In the early 1930's, he was fighting for pay as you go legislation in the Senate. He believed that World War II was coming as an extension of World War I, and he fought for an adequate navy and armed forces for our national defense. He passed the bill for fifteen new cruisers while a member of the Naval Affairs Committee in the 1930's. He also became Chairman of the Territories Committee, and in that capacity he authored and secured adoption of the Philippines Independence Bill. In 1946 he attended the independence ceremonies in Manila after the war.

Although he supported President Roosevelt and many of his measures to ease the ills of the Great Depression, he opposed a number of the New Deal programs.

In 1938 he was one of the principal leaders in the U.S. Senate in the fight against the "Supreme Court Packing Bill," which would have added four additional justices to the Supreme Court, thus giving President Roosevelt effective control of all three branches of our government.

This led to the famous Roosevelt Purge Campaign in 1938. President Roosevelt and five members of his Cabinet came into Maryland to campaign against Senator Tydings in the Democratic primary. The President did not succeed.

After World War II, the Senator authored the Armed Forces Unification Bill and became the first Chairman of the Armed Services Committee. He was also Chairman of the Senate Democratic Steering Committee, and a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Atomic Energy Committee, and the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Armed Services. He was urged strongly in some quarters for the Presidency. General Omar Bradley said Senator Tydings knew more about the armed forces of the U.S. and its allies than any one in the Congress of the United States.

Senator Tydings was defeated for reelection to the Senate in 1950. The campaign against him that year was condemned by a Senate investigating committee as a "vile backstreet campaign." It featured the use of a "composite photo" in campaign flyers which inserted a picture of Earl Browner, Communist Party leader, close to Senator Tydings. Senator Tydings had, in fact, never met him. Senator Tydings won the primary election in 1956, but shortly after was stricken with illness, and had to withdraw from the election.

He was a fighter for what he believed in and once said to a critic, "I don't want a seat in the U.S. Senate if I can't vote for what my conscience says is right."

His widow, Eleanor Davies Tydings, said Millard Tydings "had three great loves: the U.S.A., the State of Maryland, and the U.S. Senate." His wife said, "I am proud to have been his fourth love."

INTRODUCING A BILL TO RESTRICT LAND EXCHANGE AUTHORITY WHEN AIR QUALITY IS ADVERSELY AFFECTED

HON. WAYNE OWENS

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. OWENS of Utah. I am introducing this bill today because of a glaring inadequacy in the way FLPMA land exchange authority is currently implemented. It doesn't protect our air. Specifically, I intend to insist that the Federal land manager, with the concurrence of the EPA Administrator, determine that a proposed land exchange for construction of a powerplant will not degrade the air quality of a nonattainment area. This determination must be made before the land exchange can be approved.

A 2,000-megawatt powerplant has been proposed just across the border from our two States in northeastern Nevada. Because of prevailing winds and the 450-foot-high stacks which are envisioned, it is apparent that a sizable portion of the 64,000 tons of pollutants generated annually will drift toward areas in our States which are already struggling with air quality. Because of an incomplete environmental impact statement, determined by the EPA as inadequate, the effect of this plant on the air quality of nearby nonattainment areas was not even considered. Our bill will make that determination an integral part of any decision to exchange public lands for the purpose of building a major powerplant facility. The burden of proof will be on the Federal land manager to determine that the land exchange will not adversely affect air quality in a nonattainment area.

Under section 206 of FLPMA, land exchange authority is contingent upon the exchange being in the "public interest." Our bill states that the requisite public interest is not served if the purpose of an exchange is to construct a powerplant which will adversely affect air quality in a nonattainment area.

This is a question which we will address more and more often as the tentacles of energy-hungry, high-growth areas extend to the relatively clean air of the West in order to spread their pollution around and build facilities which would never be permitted in the areas they are designed to serve. But Salt Lake City's future growth should not be negatively affected by a plant in Nevada built to supply power to California. Nor should the cleanest air in the lower 48 States—centered directly on the site of this proposed plant—be degraded simply because its purity allows a permissible dilution of pollution. I do not look forward to the bleak and dreary future of an evenly polluted Nation from coast to coast. We would never allow a 1,000-mile sewer pipe from the West coast to pour effluent into our pure rivers in the mountain West. Neither should we stand by while the same thing happens to our air.

THE NATIONAL MARROW DONOR PROGRAM

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honor to join with my colleagues today to take a simple blood test in order to join the National Marrow Donor Program. This worthwhile effort is a national federal registry that matches unrelated marrow donors with those in need of a life-saving transplant. I applaud my colleague Representative BILL YOUNG of Florida for leading the national registry effort in Congress.

I decided to get involved in this program because of a group of outstanding high school students in the Sixth District of North Carolina. The Science Club at Page High School in Greensboro, NC, has become the first high school in the United States to initiate a drive to locate and register students for possible bone marrow donations. The students call their effort "The BMW Project." BMW stands for Bone Marrow Wanted.

While the students deserve praise for their willingness to get involved in such a noteworthy community project, special recognition must be given to Mr. Jim Woody, a biology teacher at Page High School. It was Jim Woody who first approached his students with the idea of starting a student registry. The idea came to him after watching a television program about how whites have a better chance of getting a marrow transplant than blacks. Only about 7 percent of the 96,000 potential marrow donors registered in a national registry now are nonwhite. While the Page High School BMW Project began as an effort to increase the number of minority registrants, it has grown beyond that to include the entire school.

The students became completely involved in The BMW Project. They went out and solicited funds from the business community. They sold cases of candy. They recruited other school clubs at Page to get involved. Their most important achievement was getting local lab interested in their efforts. Genetic Design, Incorporated, of Greensboro, NC, agreed to do the blood tissue typing at cost. Because this has become a fairly expensive procedure, many people are reluctant to join a donor program. We are grateful that Genetic Design has decided to get involved in this effort, and we commend company officials for their willingness to assist in such a worthy cause.

There is another Sixth District connection to today's registration of members of Congress. One of the labs which is used for the National Marrow Donor Program is located in our district. Roche Biomedical Lab of Burlington, NC, is one of the three labs which will be used to type and test the blood of potential donors. We congratulate Roche Biomedical for its involvement in this program.

As I said, I am honored to participate in this National Marrow Donor Program. We sometimes hear complaints about today's youth, but you will not hear that from me. Thanks to a group of dedicated students at Page High School in Greensboro, NC, someone facing a potential life-threatening blood disorder just might receive a second chance. Congratulations to everyone involved in The BMW Project.

PHIL KALTENBACHER: DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVANT

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, when Phil Kaltenbacher stepped aside as chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey earlier this month, he closed a chapter that was rich in accomplishment for the bi-state agency, for New Jersey, and for the metropolitan region.

Phil is one of those public officials who gives public service a good name; he viewed his duties at the port authority as both a joy and a high calling to contribute to a better future for the 17 million citizens of the region.

During his tenure, the port authority embarked on a complex multibillion-dollar capital plan to modernize our regional infrastructure to meet the global competition of the 21st century. He steered this program through many critical junctures, for which he deserves recognition as one of the region's master builders.

Beyond bricks and mortar, Phil Kaltenbacher helped New Jerseyans come to understand better the opportunities and competitive challenges inherent in the State's fast-growing role in the world economy. At the same time, he assured that the benefits from this growth flowed to the State's urban centers, as well as its suburbs.

Phil Kaltenbacher set a high standard of leadership that I believe will be well-maintained in the capable hands of his successor, Dick Leone. As a friend of both men, I think it is appropriate at this time of transition to pause and take note that Phil Kaltenbacher's years as port authority chairman were years when the public was extremely well served.

FLIGHT ATTENDANT SAFETY PROFESSIONALS DAY

HON. JIM LIGHTFOOT

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to lend my support to legislation recently introduced designating July 19, 1990, as Flight Attendant Safety Professionals Day.

Flight attendants are professionals trained to respond to various emergencies and make split-second decisions in the best interest of their passengers. That, in fact, was the case when United Airlines flight 232 crashed in Sioux City, IA, on July 19, 1989. Thanks to the professionalism and expertise of the United crew, many of the passengers onboard were spared from an untimely death.

It seems appropriate that July 19th be chosen as the day to recognize the courage and dedication demonstrated by individuals who are entrusted with our safety. Traveling to and from Washington, DC, I appreciate the role of our flight attendants. I hope my colleagues will consider my comments the next time they are flying back to their congressional district. You might stop and think how your flights are more comfortable and secure due to the performance and skill of the flight attendants. Please join me in cosponsoring House Joint Resolution 533.

FAIR WINDS AND FOLLOWING SEAS FOR LT. STEPHEN R. CHAPIN, JR., U.S. NAVY

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure today to take this opportunity to recognize and honor Lt. Stephen R. Chapin, Jr., U.S. Navy for his outstanding service as congressional liaison officer for the U.S. Navy with the House of Representatives.

A 1985 U.S. Naval Academy graduate, Lieutenant Chapin was selected for this demanding assignment as a result of his distinguished service as surface warfare officer in USS Doyle (FFG-39). This included several extensive deployments to the Mediterranean Sea, Indian Ocean, and Persian Gulf as part of the Navy's Expeditionary Force to that crisis-plagued region.

During his tour with the Bicentennial Congress, I and many of my colleagues have greatly relied on Lieutenant Chapin's superb knowledge of Navy policy and outstanding assistance covering a variety of military matters. Of particular note, Lieutenant Chapin has been a key liaison between the House of Representatives and the U.S. Naval Academy. He has been instrumental in coordinating Military Academy Orientation Programs for congressional staff members. Additionally, on his weekends and free time both he and his wife, Julie, have been instrumental in supporting the House of Representatives Page Program with orientation programs and tours to the U.S. Navy Academy at Annapolis. During these tours he has served as a positive role model for the congressional pages, exemplifying the highest standards of the U.S. Navy.

It is my understanding that Lieutenant Chapin will be completing his current assignment in May and will be transferring to the Naval Reserve. A man of Lieutenant Chapin's talent and integrity is rare indeed. While his dedicated service will be genuinely missed, it gives me great pleasure today to recognize him before this body and to wish him and his wife Julie, "Fair winds and following seas," as he brings to a close his distinguished service in support of the House of Representatives.

THE PLAINS, VA, CELEBRATES 80TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. D. FRENCH SLAUGHTER, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of the House that today, April 26, 1990, marks the 80th anniversary of the incorporation of the town of The Plains, VA. The Plains, located in Fauquier County, VA, has a long and colorful history.

In these days of rapid urbanization and hurried pace, The Plains is a delightful reminder of the simpler, more pleasant life in a sunny, country town. Farmers no longer send their produce into Washington from The Plains by train. However, the charming old train station is still there. So are the old well-kept country houses with big lawns, lovely churches, and small village shops and businesses. Today, as it was 80 years ago, farms, large and small, border the town and sustain foxhunting in Orange County Hunt territory and an agricultural way of life. These physical characteristics of the The Plains are certainly comfortable to the eye and the spirit.

Even more important are the town's people themselves. The Plains' residents have knitted together a sense of community spirit evidenced by smalltown friendliness and good neighbor practices. Everyone works together in civic endeavors from the town council to volunteer organizations like the Community League. The Plains Fire Department and Rescue Squad is noted for its competent, efficient service to the community. Perhaps one of the most interesting aspects about life in The Plains is that the smalltown library, staffed by volunteers and nicely landscaped, was once the town jail.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the citizens of the town of The Plains as they celebrate the 80th anniversary of their town and their special, rural way of life.

PREGNANT WOMEN TO REFRAIN FROM SMOKING

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, cigarette smoking during pregnancy is one of the major preventable causes of low birthweight births and fetal and infant mortality. It has been estimated that the number of fetal and infant deaths could be cut by 10 percent if all pregnant women would refrain from smoking.

At a hearing held by the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families on April 23, 1990, Dr. Randall Todd described a promising program reduce maternal smoking. Dr. Todd is director of health promption and disease prevention for the Kent County Health Department in Grand Rapids, MI. The Kent County Health Department initiated a test program for pregnant women who were clients of the department's WIC clinic, to encourage and assist smokers in quitting smoking.

Simply by providing a 20-minute one-to-one counseling session including both information about the risks of smoking and a self-help manual to assist smokers in eliminating their smoking, the program was able to achieve a quit rate of 11 percent.

If this approach were replicated across the country, thousands of women could be helped to overcome their tobacco habit and improve the likelihood of a successful birth and healthy infancy for their children.

It has been said that a healthy baby begins with a healthy mother. Smoking hurts both the mother and the child, and Dr. Todd has shown that something can be done about it. I ask that his testimony and an evaluation of this program that appeared in the January 1990 issue of the American Journal of Public Health be printed in the RECORD.

REMARKS BY RANDALL L. TODD, D.H.SC., M.P.H

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on behalf of thousands of infants who are being adversely affected by tobacco use. I understand that one of your primary focuses has been on the effects of illicit drug use among pregnant women. I would invite you, however, to consider the effects of a substance which is completely legal in this country, which is used by more than 25 percent of pregnant women and which has been scientifically demonstrated to have serious adverse side effects on the unborn fetus and neonate.

Smoking of tobacco during pregnancy is an important mofidiable risk factor for low birthweight, (1.2) and is also correlated with increased risk of early fetal loss. (3.4) It is projected that if all pregnant women stopped smoking, the number of fetal and infant deaths would be reduced by 10 percent. (5) An estimate of the average cost of neonatal care is $189 higher (1983 dollars) for infants born to smokers. (6) Smoking in pregnancy has also been linked to postnatal complications. Smoking doubles the risk of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS). (7)

Clearly, attention needs to be given to this problem and methods need to be developed that will help pregnant women quit smoking or a least reduce their consumption of tabacco during their pregnancy. Traditional smoking cessation programs generally utilize multiple educational sessions often spread over a time frame of several weeks. Such programs often impose time and transportation barriers to the pregnant population. Recently, there has been a significant trend toward the use of self-help materials for smoking cessation which can be utilized by an individual without the need for attendance at formal clinic sessions.

These techniques must rely heavily on the ability and motivation of the individual to read the self-help literature.

I would like to share with you an approach to overcoming these barriers which was utilized on a pilot basis in the Kent County Health Department WIC Clinic.

The Kent County WIC Clinic currently maintains an average monthly caseload of just over 6,000 clients. We are presently in the midst of expanding to serve an average monthly caseload of 8,000. At this level we would anticipate approximately 4,000 pregnant women would utilize the WIC clinic over a 12 month period. Approximately 42 percent of pregnant women utilizing KCHD's WIC Program are currently smokers. This compares with an estimated 32 percent of all women of child-bearing age who smoke.

During our pilot, 81 percent of the smokers identified agree to participate. Participants were randomly assigned to one of three groups. The usual care (UC) group received printed information about the risks of smoking during pregnancy and completed the clinic in the traditional manner.

The multiple component (MC) group received a 20 minute one-to-one counseling session which included both risk information and behavior change components. The risk information component employed the "Because I Love My Baby" materials developed by the American Lung Association. These materials include a "flip chart" used by the health educator in presenting the information and a printed brochure given to clients to take home.

The behavior change component of the MC intervention employed a self-help manual adapted from Windsor, et al (5), and from the American Lung Association's "Freedom From Smoking" program. Behavior contracting and self-monitoring were the primary strategies. An individual behavioral contract was developed during the session which specified a quit date and selection of some significant other as a co-signer. Self-monitoring included charts of recording daily smoking behavior, and the development of an individualized plan of action for breaking recorded behavioral chains.

The risk information (RI) intervention was a face-to-face session of about 10 minutes duration. The health educator used the same "flip chart" as the MC group and provided the factual brochures, but did not present behavior change counseling, or furnish the self-help manual.

Of the three groups, those clients receiving the MC intervention achieved the best results. The MC group had a quit rate of 11 percent.

Implementation of the MC methodology as a routine part of WIC care for all pregnant smokers would require the addition of professional staff at a cost of approximately $19,000. This is a relatively small amount of money when compared to our overall County WIC budget of approximately $686,000. Unfortunately, increases in WIC funding are always attached to requirements for increase in caseload thus making it impossible to add even a part-time staff resource to address this important area. Locally, we are already contributing more than $130,000 to the WIC budget just to meet the basic requirements.

I would also share with you the fact that similiar approaches have been tried in other local WIC programs in Michigan with less promising results. I believe it is important to understand some of the differences which led to better results in Kent County. First, our program delivered its intervention during the regular clinic visit. We would not have had an 81 percent participation rate if we had asked smoking WIC mothers to return for a separate session. Secondly, we utilized our own staff to deliver the intervention. A WIC clinic is an extremely busy and often confusing place. In order for smoking interventions to be truely integrated into the WIC program, it is essential that the entire clinic staff understand and be committed to the concept.

In summary, we have seen that smoking rates among pregnant WIC clients exceeds the average rate of the population. There is no recruitment problem to get clients into the WIC program. In fact, we generally have a waiting list. Once in the WIC program a large percentage of smokers will agree to participate in a smoking intervention if offered and if it does not require an additional trip to the clinic. Brief smoking interventions (20 minutes or less) can be integrated into the WIC clinic flow with a minimal but critical addition to professional staffing levels. Such brief interventions can be demonstrated to produce quit rates in excess of 10 percent.

The WIC program should be expanded to include smoking interventions along with the nutrition education and provision of supplemental food that have proven so effective over the last 10-15 years. The additional cost of these interventions should be recognized with appropriate adjustments to the local staffing grants. In Kent County we have had to interrupt our provision of this needed service while we pursue other funding mechanisms.

Thank you for your attention and consideration.

A Randomized Evaluation of Smoking Cessation Interventions for Pregnant Women at a WIC Clinic

(Jeffrey P. Mayer, PhD, Barbara Hawkins, MA, and Randall Todd, HDSc, MPH)

Abstract: Pregnant smokers attending a local health department WIC clinic were randomly assigned to one of two self-help smoking cessation programs or usual care. The multiple component program resulted in larger quit rates than usual care during the last month of pregnancy (11 percent vs 3 percent) and postpartum (7 percent vs 0 percent). Achieving quit rates in WIC similar to those in studies conducted at prenatal care settings, suggests that smoking cessation programs for low-income pregnant WIC clients are feasible. (Am J Public Health 1990; 80:76-78.)

INTRODUCTION

Estimates suggest that 32 percent of all woman of child-bearing age smoke with only 21 percent quitting during pregnancy.[1] Evaluations of self-help cessation programs have demonstrated some success with pregnant women receiving prenatal care at an HMO (health maintenance organization),[2] private practices,[3] hospital clinics,[4*] and local health departments.[5]

WIC (the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children) is an unexplored setting for smoking cessation research. Analyses of matched WIC-birth certificate data for Missouri in 1982 indicated that 45 percent of pregnant women WIC participants were smokers, 50 percent higher than the 30 percent rate observed among all Missouri women that year. Data on 127,512 pregnant women enrolled in several state WIC programs from 1979 through 1985 suggested that smokers were 2.5 times more likely to deliver a low birthweight infant, and that very few participants stopped smoking following their enrollment in WIC.* * *

The present investigation is a randomized trial of a self-help smoking cessation program implemented at a local health department WIC clinic.

METHOD

The study was conducted from August 1985 to August 1986 at the Kent County Health Department in Grand Rapids, Michigan. A brief structured interview was used to characterize an incoming pregnant women as a current smoker (at least one cigarette per day), a nonsmoker, or a former smoker. Current smokers were asked to participate in the study and to complete an informed consent statement and a pretest. Following informed consent, participants were randomly assigned to one of three groups.

The usual care (UC) group received printed information about the risks of smoking during pregnancy and completed the clinic in the traditional manner.

The multiple component (MC) group received a 20-minute one-to-one counseling session which included both risk information and behavior change components. The risk information component employed the Because I Love My Baby materials developed by the American Lung Association. These materials included a "flip chart" used by the health educator in presenting the information and a printed brochure given to clients to take home.

The behavior change component of the MC intervention employed a self-help manual adapted from Windsor, et al,[5] and from the American Lung Association's Freedom From Smoking program. Behavioral contracting and self-monitoring were the primary strategies. An individual behavioral contract was developed during the session which specified a quit date and selection of some significant other as a cosigner. Self-monitoring included charts for recording daily smoking behavior, and the development of an individualized plan of action for breaking recorded behavioral chains.

The risk information (RI) intervention was a face-to-face session of about 10 minutes duration. The health educator used the same "flip chart" as the MC group and provided the factual brochures, but did not present behavior change counseling, or furnish the self-help manual.

During the postpartum WIC visit, the posttest was completed, which included questions about smoking during the final month of pregnancy as well as postpartum. The postpartum self-reports, on average, occurred 4.7 weeks following birth of the infant, a relatively short period. Saliva samples (N=66) were collected from the last one-third of the participants. The correlation between the saliva thiocyanate and self-report measures (r=.25) was similar to correlations found in more extensive analyses with larger samples that showed excellent sensitivity and specificity.[6,7] Saliva samples were equally distributed across groups (28 percent of MC participants, 30 percent of RI participants, and 32 percent of UC participants). Resource constraints did not allow collection of more complete data.

Demographic and health service data were abstracted from WIC program records for study participants and for the women who refused to participate. Agreement rates between different coders, and between the WIC record and prenatal care medical record, for a 30 percent random sample, were 99.2 percent had 87.9 percent, respectively.

RESULTS

Two hundred and seventy-one of 641 pregnant women entering the clinic were identified as current smokers (42 percent); 291 volunteered to participate in the study (81 percent). Of these 219, posttest data were collected from 186 (15 percent attrition rate) (about one-fourth actually refused to complete the posttest; three-fourths either moved from the community, left the WIC program, or miscarried). Those lost to follow-up were treated as continuing smokers in the following analyses.

Diferences between study participants and refusals on variables available from the WIC record were relatively minor for important variables as were study group differences (Table 1).

Table 2 presents the quit proportions and differences by treatment group for both follow-up periods. The MC group quit rate was higher than the UC group at both post time periods. While all UC participants had returned to smoking postpartum, some proportion of the participants in the MC and RI groups remained smoke free.

DISCUSSION

The 42 percent smoking rate among pregnant women entering the WIC clinic was similar to the estimates of Land and Stockbauer, and was indicative of the important need for smoking intervention at WIC clinics. The quit rate for the MC group (11 percent) was just under that found at prenatal care settings serving low-income women. Both Windsor, et al, [5] and Secker-Walker et al,* in studies conducted at low-income public maternity clinics, reported quit rates of 14 percent.

Although limitations of the present formative evaluation study include small sample size, and lack of complete biochemical verification, the findings have preliminary implications for extending health education services to pregnant smokers visiting WIC clinics. The high level of program acceptance among our WIC participants (81 percent) is impressive. Although prenatal care settings see pregnant women more regularly, offering possibility of multiple health education contacts (and potentially improved quit rates), the WIC program, with broader eligibility than typically found at public prenatal care clinics, would seem to offer greater opportunity to reach a larger share of low-income women. Additionally, WIC clinics offer the advantage of a centralized site where health educators and public health nurses can be made available to provide one-to-one counselings.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO LENNA VICTORIA McCARBERY

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen of my community, Lenna Victoria McCarbery, as she completes her third term as president of the Zonta Club of the south bay area.

Mrs. McCarbery's dedication and service to others, sets an example for all of us to emulate. Not only president of the Zonta Club, Lenna has served as president of the San Pedro Business and Professional Women's Club and as Worthy Matron of the San Pedro Harbor Chapter No. 174 of the Order of Eastern Star. Currently, she also sits as a member of the board of directors of the harbor area YWCA and serves that organization as parliamentarian, personnel chairman and by-laws chairman. Furthermore, Mrs. McCarbery is a volunteer docent at Dominguez Ranch Adobe and a member of and by-laws chairman for the Polynesian Society of Los Angeles.

In addition to this impressive list of community work, Mrs. McCarbery has served professionally with the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce and the Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce. Lenna is also a certified medical assistant and radiology technician. Despite her commitment to the community, somehow she finds time to be a wonderful wife to her husband, Dennis, and a mother to three children, Cynthia, Michael, and Margaret.

Lenna Victoria McCarbery certainly deserves our highest tribute. I commend her on her volunteerism and long history of service. My wife, Lee, and I wish her the best in the years to come. She is a caring and giving woman, who has enriched the lives of so many South Bay residents.

HONORING THE 100TH BIRTHDAY OF THE WALDOBORO WOMAN'S CLUB

HON. JOSEPH E. BRENNAN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the 100th birthday of the Waldoboro Woman's Club in Waldoboro, ME.

In 1890, the Waldoboro Woman's Club was originally founded by two women as a literary club in order to pass the time during the cold Maine winters. Since that time, the club has grown to become an organization that provides many important services to its community. Just a few examples of the club's commitment are its assistance in local blood drives, providing scholarships and support for local students and numerous boys and girls clubs, and even providing the insurance money for an oxygen tent that it had purchased for the town.

The Waldoboro Woman's Club has had to work very hard to be able to be so generous to its community. Throughout the year the club sponsors raffles, cake sales, bazzars, and other fundraising activities to support the various projects in Waldoboro.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Waldoboro Woman's Club on the 100th anniversary of its founding, and I believe that they have truly lived up to their motto: "There is only one proof of Ability—Action".

SUPPORT FOR H.R. 770

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support for H.R. 770, the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1989. The provisions of this legislation will guarantee job security, seniority, and health benefits for workers who need to take leave from work to care for a newborn, newly adopted, or seriously ill child. It also guarantees job security, seniority, and health benefits for workers who need leave to recover from a serious medical condition. The act also includes a family leave provision for the care of a seriously ill parent.

American workers should not be forced to choose between having a job and meeting their family needs. Our typical American family, where the father worked and the mother stayed at home to care for the child or aging parent is vanishing rapidly. Currently, less than 10 percent of our families fit this pattern. The majority of families are comprised of two-earner couples or single women raising their children without fathers present in the home. We need to face this reality and have the courage to respond to the changes in our society. There has been much talk about our commitment to family values. The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1989 will put that talk into action.

THE EGALITARIAN DOCTOR, KENNETH SHINE

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with distinct pleasure that I rise today to express my admiration, respect, and gratitude to a good friend and a devoted doctor. Kenneth I. Shine, M.D., is a studious and caring leader who has worked tirelessly to improve the quality of medical care in our country. Dr. Shine currently works as dean of the University of California, Los Angeles, School of Medicine and is an active, practicing cardiologist. In addition to his many academic and professional duties, Kenneth Shine is highly regarded throughout the United States as a strong and vocal advocate of the medical community.

Dr. Shine has made enormous contributions to the advancement of health through his 17-year involvement in the American Heart Association. The first Los Angeles resident to serve as president of the AHA from 1986 to 1987, Ken has been particularly active in working to prevent the incidence of heart disease among minorities. His commitment to improving the quality of life in minority communities is also evident in his work as a member of the board of directors of the Charles Drew University of Medicine and Science, which participates in a joint medical school program with UCLA.

Among his numerous tasks, Dr. Shine encourages State legislators to provide more support of health care to indigent people and other targeted groups. He has also devised several programs designed to educate legislators on such matters as health care cost containment. On the Federal level, Dr. Shine is chair of the Workshop on Effectiveness of Health Care, a committee of the Institute of Medicine. As chair, Dr. Shine advises our Government on such issues as the need to support more research and better health care for those over 65.

A graduate of Harvard University and Harvard Medical School, Ken is also highly regarded as an innovator in medical education, particularly for his work in ambulatory education. Under this approach to teaching medicine, students work not only in hospitals, but also in medical offices, where patients in need of preventive services or with chronic problems are most likely to be found. A loving husband and devoted father of two, Kenneth Shine is a leading proponent of the medical university which would provide a broad medical education, incorporating the fields of law, management, history, and urban planning.

Mr. Speaker, it is for all of these reasons that Dr. Shine has been presented the 1990 Outstanding Achievement and Community Service Award by the Anti-Defamation League's Pacific Southwest Medical Division. I strongly urge my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in honoring my good friend Kenneth Shine for the many years he has selflessly devoted to improving medical care in this country.

ABRAHAM M. SIDORSKY RETIRES FROM NATIONAL SERVICE

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, few men and women in our Federal civil service have compiled a record of achievement and dedication as Abraham M. Sidorsky, who retires on April 30, 1990, from the Headquarters Air Force Logistics Command at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, OH.

Mr. Sidorsky has honorably served his country for nearly 47 years as an enlisted man and an officer in the Army and Air Force; an employee of the Veterans Administration, and finally, a civilian Air Force employee.

As a top specialist in procurement, Mr. Sidorsky has had a major role in planning the logistics support of our worldwide air defenses. His knowledge of contracting administration, management experience, and most of all—ability to work with people—have made him an exceptionally valuable civil servant.

Our national defense depends on the expertise of men and women like Mr. Sidorsky who work behind the scenes to keep our fighting forces ready for combat. Thanks for a job well done.

HONORING DEPARTMENT COMMANDER VINCENT COLASACCO, AN OUTSTANDING LEGIONNAIRE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to avail myself of the opportunity to call to the attention of our colleagues an outstanding veteran, one who has personified the American Legion and all that it stands for.

Vincent Colasacco was born in Mamaroneck, Westchester County, NY, in 1922. From a young age, he was active in many sports, in which he excelled. He married the former Elizabeth Morra of Mount Vernon, NY. Their many years of happy marriage produced a son, James, and a daughter, Janice Vincent and Elizabeth enjoy six grandchildren.

When our Nation went to war in the wake of Pearl Harbor, Vincent Colasacco was quick to volunteer his services. During his 3 years in the U.S. Army, Vincent participated in five major battles in the European theater: The Ardennes; Central Europe; Normandy; northern France, and Rhineland. He received many decorations as a result of his World War II service, including the Bronze Star Medal, the Good Conduct Medal, the European-African-Middle Eastern Service Medal; the American Campaign Medal, and the Army of Occupation Medal.

Upon the conclusion of his distinguished service in the Armed Forces, Vincent became active in the American Legion in his hometown of Throggs Neck. His hometown post, No. 1456, always considered him to be the embodiment of the American Legion Pledge: "devotion to mutual helpfulness."

Vincent's leadership abilities moved him rapidly through the Legion ranks. He served in many offices in his hometown post, which granted him a life membership on May 14, 1981. On the county level, he served as chairman of the military ball committee each year for 20 years, as a chairman of the distinguished guests committee for 12 years, as county vice commander, and finally as Westchester's County commander.

In his District he served as a committeeman for the National Commander's dinner for 25 years prior to his election first as district vice commander, and finally as district commander.

On the department level, Vincent served as the Americanism chairman for 1988 and 1989. Then, he was elected department commander for the State of New York.

This weekend, Vincent's fellow Legionnaires will be honoring him for a job well done. For over four decades, Vincent Colasacco has represented the best in the American Legion. His unselfish devotion is a tribute to all of his fellow veterans, and we are proud to have him represent our State.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all of our colleagues to join with me in saluting American Legion's Department Commander Vincent Colasacco, and his lovely wife Elizabeth, and wish him many productive and happy years to come.

TOP NSF HONOR GOES TO PENNSYLVANIAN

HON. ROBERT S. WALKER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, ever since the days of Ben Franklin, Pennsylvanians have provided the scientific and technological leadership that has made our Nation the economic power it is today. In a continuation of that tradition, yet another Pennsylvanian has been honored for his contributions to science.

Dr. Mark E. Davis, a native of Ellwood, PA, has been presented with the National Science Foundation's prestigious Alan T. Waterman Award. NSF makes this award annually to a single outstanding young researcher.

Dr. Davis is currently a professor of chemical engineering at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. He received the Waterman Award for his work synthesizing molecular sieves with microscopic pore sizes. This area of materials research has produced the magic membranes used to remove salts from seawater and separate out and recover industrial acids that would otherwise pollute the atmosphere. Dr. Davis' work makes a valuable contribution to our efforts to preserve and protect our environment, and allows us to better use Earth's resources to sustain human life.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize this important work, and I congratulate Dr. Davis for his achievement.

SIX UNIVERSITIES CLOSED ON THE WEST BANK

HON. HOWARD C. NIELSON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 years all six Palestinian universities on the West Bank and Gaza Strip have been closed. As a result, some 15,000 university students as well as 40,000 high school graduates have been left stranded. The Palestinians have always taken pride in being the most educated group in the Arab world. The closing of the universities has had a devastating effect on the morale of young Palestinians and is fostering an atmosphere of resentment against the Israeli Government.

Today I am introducing a resolution that both acknowledges recent steps taken by Israel to reopen some of the schools, and urges them to continue in this direction by reopening the universities.

Reopening the universities would be an important step toward improving relations between the two parties and fostering an atmosphere conducive to peace. This is an education issue. Education should not be held hostage to the complex politics of the region.

METHOD OF SELECTING THE CHIEF JUDGE OF THE COURT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would conform the method of selecting the chief judge of the Court of International Trade with the modified seniority method established in 1982 for selecting judges of the circuit court of appeals and the district courts.

The present method for selecting the chief judge of the court was established in 1980. It provides that the President is to designate one of the judges of the court who is less than 70 years of age to serve as chief judge. The chief judge so designated continues to serve as chief judge until he reaches the age of 70 years and another judge is designated as chief judge by the President.

Recently, in the report of the Federal Court Study Committee, appointed pursuant to the Federal Courts Study Act, it was recommended that Congress should not change the current modified seniority method of chief judge selection in the circuit court of appeals and the district courts. The report of the committee concluded that the current method "operates well in practice and is preferable to any other method. The statutorily specified term for chief judges is a definite improvement over the previous pattern of very short or very long periods of service".

The reasons supporting the recommendation not to change the current method for selecting the chief judges in the circuit court of appeals and the district courts also provide the reasons why the current method of Presidential designation for selecting the chief judge of the Court of International Trade should be changed to conform with the modified seniority methods applicable in the other courts. I urge my colleagues' strong support for this important legislation that modifies the term and succession procedures for the chief judge of the Court of International Trade.

TRIBUTE TO JASON AND SUSIE DITTLEMAN

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Jason and Susie Dittleman, of East Greenwich, RI, who have been chosen as the 1990 Small Business Persons of the Year by the East Greenwich Chamber of Commerce. Jason and Susie were selected for their outstanding entrepreneurial spirit as well as for their generous community service.

Jason and Susie first opened their business in 1976. East Greenwich Photo began as a very small business, with Jason and Susie as the only employees. Through their hard work and enthusiasm, Jason and Susie made East Greenwich Photo expand and grow from its humble beginnings into a thriving store with a staff of over 20 employees. They have also expanded their goods and services for their customers over the last 15 years. Jason and Susie now have their own film processing lab and custom frame shop. They also carry a full line of cameras and accessories, VCR's, Fax's, and cellular telephones.

Their entrepreneurial spirit and activities are certainly impressive yet equally impressive are their activities outside of their business. Jason and Susie raised two children during these years and have contributed countless hours to their community. East Greenwich Photo sponsors a Little League team each year. They also donate photo materials to a local camp for their photography classes. Jason serves as a member of the board of directors of the East Greenwich Chamber of Commerce as well as the East Greenwich Rotary Club. Susie does all the photography for the East Greenwich Chamber of Commerce at no charge. Their largest charity is the Rhode Island Special Olympics for whom they do photography for free.

It is with great pleasure that I salute Jason and Susie Dittleman for their outstanding entrepreneurial and civic spirit. Their contributions to their community not only in dollars but also in time and commitment are a tribute to their love of their community. I wish them, their family, and their business continued prosperity in the future.

A TRIBUTE TO TERESA AMATURO

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a bright, talented, and determined young woman from Reading, PA. This young woman is a member of junior class No. 633 of the Girl Scouts of America, and she is actively involved in making the life of her community better.

On June 27, 1990, a special ceremony will be held in honor of this young woman at Camp Woodhaven in Schuylkill County, PA, to recognize her successful completion of all requirements for the Girl Scout's Gold Award. Her hard work and constant effort to serve her neighbors and fellow Scouts makes her a deserving recipient of the Gold Award, which is the highest honor any Girl Scout can receive.

This young woman has been involved in scouting for many years, and has proven her abilities and climbed the Girl Scout ranks. Her achievements simply reflect her concern for humanity, which has been cultivated by the troop leaders who have helped this outstanding Girl Scout earn the Gold Award.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to recognize Teresa Amaturo before you and other Members of the House of Representatives, as well as the rest of the Nation. There is no doubt that the Gold Award will be the first of many awards for this young woman. Let us take this moment to commend Teresa for her accomplishments and to wish her the best of luck and success in all of her future endeavors.

RECOGNITION FOR THE EFFORTS OF GARY CLINGER

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the outstanding efforts of Mr. Gary Clinger, a mail carrier from Lucasville, OH. His willingness to serve above and beyond the call of duty has saved the life of a young infant.

While delivering mail, one of Mr. Clinger's patrons solicited his assistance. He was handed a baby whose hysterical mother had indicated that it had stopped breathing. He attempted to first revive the baby with a slap on the back with no success. Next, he tried the Heimlich maneuver, again without any success. Finally, he initiated mouth-to-mouth resuscitation which opened the child's lungs so that it could begin breathing on its own.

Mr. Clinger remained with the distraught mother and monitored the child's progress until an ambulance arrived to take the child to the hospital. His eagerness to serve the patrons of the U.S. Postal Service demonstrate a desire to live up to the tradition of care and reliability the Post Office desires to maintain.

Mr. Speaker, as a public servant elected to serve the needs of our citizens, we can all greatly benefit from Mr. Clinger's example of service. I hope you, and all our colleagues, will join in commending the efforts of Mr. Clinger as I believe that we can all benefit from this fine example of service.

SOUTH DAKOTA REMEMBERS AND HONORS AMERICA'S GRAIN WORKERS—APRIL 28

HON. TIM JOHNSON

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 26, 1990

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, grain workers all across America have set aside tomorrow, April 28, as a very special day to remember and honor their fellow workers who have been killed or injured in the line of work, while engaged in helping to bring America's bountiful grain harvest to the tables of Americans and hungry people throughout the world.

The workers in our Nation's grain mills, elevators, and processing facilities take on essential tasks with courage and commitment to a job well done—but it is dangerous work and we need to do more to minimize the risks our grain workers face. In the last decade alone, 60 workers have been killed and 275 have been injured in grain dust explosions. In my home State of South Dakota, five such explosions took place during the past decade, resulting in four deaths, numerous injuries and untold family suffering. A 1985 explosion in Marion, SD, resulted in three of these deaths.

But explosions are not the only risk faced by our grain workers: asphyxiation, exposure to pesticides, drowning, and construction accidents also too often result in illness, injury or death.

Simply honoring and remembering the dead and injured is not sufficient. Grain workers and Members of Congress must commit ourselves to addressing the job site health and safety laws needed to prevent such tragedies in the future. For instance, accumulated grain dust is a deadly explosive, but reducing the amount of dust allowed to accumulate would substantially minimize risks to workers.

All Americans owe a great debt of gratitude to our grain workers, and it is my hope and expectations that tomorrow will be a day of remembrance and honor, but also a day of political commitment.

SENATE—Friday, April 27, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.—Matthew 11:28.

Gracious Father in Heaven, we thank Thee for the provision Thou has made to help us maximize the effectiveness in our labors. We thank Thee, Lord, for this generous invitation to come to Thee for rest—not the rest of idleness, but of efficiency; not the rest of laziness, but of power. The quiet rest of Him in whom dwells all power in Heaven and on Earth. Dear Lord, when our labors seem in vain, when no matter how hard we work we experience frustration, when we find ourselves uptight, help us to respond to Your gentle invitation to come unto You and find perfect peace.

In Jesus' name who invited us to come. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 27, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBB thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 4404, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4404) making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for disaster assistance, food stamps, unemployment compensation administration, and other urgent needs, and transfers, and reducing funds budgeted for military spending for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD] is recognized to offer an amendment on foreign aid and U.S. investment abroad on which there will be 20 minutes of debate.

The Chair recognizes the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

During the markup of this supplemental measure, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] and I authored a provision to allocate a modest portion of the aid going to Panama, which we believe could not be productively used in the balance of fiscal year 1990, for the beginnings of the United States Bilateral Assistance Program of the countries of Eastern Europe. We would have begun with aid to Poland and Hungary in this supplemental, and then expanded to other East European countries, such as East Germany and Czechoslovakia, when the authorizing committee expanded our European SEED Program for fiscal year 1991.

The concept we had in mind in our provision was a $150 million program to be administered by the Export-Import Bank which is an American institution, and the concept was to get America in on the ground floor in Eastern Europe serving a broad, twofold policy:

First, Eastern Europe desperately needs Western capital. There is no debate about that. It needs American capital in particular areas which are in dire emergency shape, particularly the environmental and energy sectors.

The second prong of the policy would be to start reorienting our foreign assistance policy away from the simplistic one-way transfer of cash. This is a simplistic one-way transfer of cash—c-a-s-h, plain old greenback, backed up by Uncle Sam and the American people. We are already shouldered with a $3 trillion debt—to traditional client states, which is not particularly oriented toward increasing American competitiveness. "Just hand out the cash, boys." It is a one-way street. I believe we need to pursue the development of this two-pronged policy in the foreign assistance program for the 1990's. It is something new.

There can be no serious doubt that Eastern Europe needs Western capital, and that it most desperately needs it in the energy and environmental areas, which are, of course, closely interlocked. The news is rife with stories about countries, particularly West Germany and Japan, moving into Eastern Europe as fast as they can get there.

In a Washington Post piece dateline Leipzig, East Germany, February 16, 1990, the piece indicated that:

> West German companies are pouring into neighboring East Germany, sewing up business partners, and announcing cooperative ventures and other deals at a feverish pace. It is the selling of East Germany * * * a potential market of 17 million new customers, a reservoir of relatively skilled but cheap labor, a jumping off point for ventures farther east—and a chance to freeze out rivals from the rest of Western Europe, the United States and Japan.

There was another roundup piece from the Wall Street Journal dated March 25, 1990. It outlined how, "from Berlin to Belgrade, politicians and economists are drawing up blueprints for the construction of Eastern Europe's economies." The article continues, "Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and East Germany are leading in creating what Westerners consider positive environments for doing business."

So, Mr. President, not only the West Germans but the Japanese and nearly everybody else are trying to get in on the act—except, it would appear the greatest foreign aid giver of them all, the United States of America.

There is growing concern in the United States business community about inadequate Government support for its trade and investment activities in Eastern Europe, as compared with the extraordinary efforts by Western European countries and Japan on behalf of their business sectors. Data on aid to all countries of Eastern Europe show that United States assistance—excluding debt rescheduling—is less than one-fourteenth of the total. In the all-important area of export and investment credits, United States assistance to United States business efforts to establish markets and presence is one-sixth that of West Germany, one-third that of the European Economic Community, one-third that of Japan, and less than France or Italy.

One of the highest quality programs to assist United States businesses to compete more equitably with officially assisted Western European and Japanese firms is the direct loan program of the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. LEAHY and I attempted to have $150 million of the money that was otherwise going to Panama—and which is needed as of now all in this great big hurry—go to the Eximbank, something to help the emerging East European countries, democracies, and to help United States businessmen to get in on the ground floor so that we can compete with West Germany and Japan and the other countries. But the Leahy-Byrd amendment went down to the tune of 15 to 14—a solid Republican vote against the amendment. Two Democrats joined the solid Republican vote in the committee. There was $150 million for the Eximbank, something that would help our people, and our U.S. businesses.

Japan has already signed two loans from its own Eximbank in Poland and Hungary for over $1 billion. Think of that. Japan has already signed two loans from its own Eximbank in Poland and Hungary for over $1 billion to support activities by Japanese countries. They are smart; they are shrewd, and I take my hat off to them. I wish we would catch up a little. We could use a little more brains than guts. I take my hat off to the Japanese. They already signed two loans from its own Eximbank in Poland and Hungary for over $1 billion to support activities by Japanese companies.

For the entire world—get this—the U.S. Eximbank has only $612 million available for its Direct Loan Program. It has no funds specifically available for United States business activities in Eastern Europe.

The consequence of inadequate support from Eximbank for United States commercial activities in Eastern Europe—by the way, if I were to offer that amendment here today on the floor, I have a feeling it would get knocked down. The Senate indicated yesterday it was more interested in taking care of unjustified needs in Panama right at this moment than in taking care of justified, flagrantly justified, needs here in this country. So I have a feeling if I offered that amendment here today in the Senate, it would get knocked down, if it took money away from Panama. If it took money away from some other domestic program, it might sail through and it might not.

To see that the United States has no funds, Eximbank has no funds specifically available for United States business activities in Eastern Europe, that was one of the thrusts of the amendment that was offered in the Appropriations Committee. Let us help our own businesses. The consequences of inadequate support from Eximbank for United States commercial activities in Eastern Europe are loss of short-term economic advantages and long-term loss of penetration in the hottest export and investment market of the next decade.

The need for United States Government help in the race for East European markets is urgent. In the words of Frank P. Doyle, senior vice president of General Electric, in testimony before the Senate Small Business Committee, "Can American technology, at the same time it helps American's international competitiveness and balance of trade, actually help where it is most needed, in Eastern Europe? Eastern Europe's environment is a total disaster. The Senate arms control observer group recently visited Leipzig and reported to me that the once stately buildings are collapsing from the acidic action of layers of ugly grime that cover everything. It is not only buildings that are coated with grime, but the lungs of the people. Parts of Poland are nearly uninhabitable, according to recent reports. Ailing individuals have to go down in mines"—think of this now—"ailing individuals have to go down in mines to get clean air, or use respirators during the worst days. Children and women are being devastated."

The New York Times of April 8, 1990, reports that "Central Europe's pollution is more dangerous and widespread than anything they have seen in the Western industrial nations," and that it occurs on a far greater scale than in the developing world, which does not have nearly as much industry.

A study of new mothers in the industrial region of Krakow in southern Poland showed concentrations of lead, mercury, cadmium, and other toxic metals in the placenta of every woman. Infant mortality, premature births and stillborn children occur at alarming rates. In the Katowice area, 21 percent of children under the age of 4 "are sick almost constantly." The water is contaminated, but since the Communist authorities hide the problem, the extent of the disaster is only now becoming understandable. In areas of Poland, the growing of food is banned because the soil is too poisoned. Much of this is due to the burning of extremely poor quality coal without any emission control whatever.

We have the kinds of technologies in this country that can help. As Flora Lewis wrote in the New York Times of April 10, 1990, this ecological disaster fueled by Eastern communism is an "area where Western experience, Western technology and Western help will have to be supplied to enable the East to dig itself out of its pits."

I have here on my desk a thick green book just produced by the Department of Energy entitled "The Directory of U.S. Coal and Technology Export Resources." DOE has just begun a program with Poland and a $10 million project for coal emission technology is getting underway. The possibilities are literally endless. These countries need 100 times, 1,000 more of this kind of assistance to even begin the lifesaving technological improvements needed to cure their poisoned environment.

Two hundred U.S. companies responded to the first Directory of U.S. Coal and Technology Export Resources. There is a substantial U.S. business base to roll up our sleeves now.

There are those who argue, incredibly, that Eastern Europe is not really America's business. There is an argument developing that we should leave Eastern Europe to Japan and West Germany, while we concentrate on our own backyard and take care of Central America. Here is a New York Times editorial from March 20:

> Western Europe and Japan are already addressing Eastern Europe's needs. These donors have less reason than Washington to put significant resources into Central America. And the Bush administration believes, reasonably, that Eastern European development is best helped through private investment rather than direct governmental aid.

Are we ready to sign up to the proposition that the development of Eastern Europe, with its great problems, but also its great potential, is for the Japanese and Western Europeans, but not us? We need to be busy in Central America. But the two cases are totally dissimilar. In Central America we have a situation where we are providing a traditional American assistance program, primarily a transfer of resources, one-way from here to there. Eastern Europe, as I have indicated, presents a different set of opportunities. Why does this have to be an either/or proposition?

Other nations do far more than do we in tying their foreign aid programs to their industrial and business interests. A recent report by the Center for Strategic and International Studies late last year, entitled "The Tied Aid Credit Issue: U.S. Export Competitiveness in Developing Countries," concluded that during the 1980's, U.S. trade competitors were enhancing their exports by tying economic aid to export sales. The United States, however, has continued to focus its aid on balance-of-payments support to strategically important governments, and direct basic needs to the poorest peoples. The impact of these practices on the U.S. trade position has been substantial, estimated in the report of $2.4 to $4.8 billion a year in losses to American exporters. Thus, the challenge to us is to somehow interweave our development assistance with our export competitiveness.

Mr. President, the amendment I propose on behalf of myself and several colleagues is one which would require a study of the mechanisms by which we might enhance United States competitiveness through our foreign assistance programs, an approach which seems to be ideally suited to the tremendous opportunities we see available now in Eastern Europe. The study would be conducted by the Secretary of Commerce, to provide us with a commercial perspective that is surely missing in our foreign aid approaches, with the consultation of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Administrator of AID, the Secretary of Energy and other relevant officials. It would also explore the ways in which other countries tie their aid programs to their commercial and industrial sectors and attempt a comparison between our program and those of Japan, West Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and other donor nations.

Other nations do far more than we do in tying their foreign aid programs to their industrial and business interests. The United States has continued to focus its aid on balance of payments support, to strategically important developments, and direct basic needs to the poorest peoples. The impact of these practices on the U.S. trade position has been substantial, estimated in the report to which I have referred at $2.4 to $4.8 billion a year in losses to American exports. Thus the challenge to us is to somehow interweave our development assistance with our export competitiveness.

I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain articles to which I have referred in my statement.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CROSSING THE GERMAN BORDER: FIRMS SPEED ECONOMIC UNITY—DESPITE UNCERTAINTIES, QUICK DEALS ARE CUT

(By Glenn Frankel)

LEIPZIG, EAST GERMANY.—They cannot buy property. There are no taxation agreements or investment protections, nor even a stable currency. Yet, West German companies are pouring into neighboring East Germany, sewing up business partners and announcing cooperative ventures and other deals at a feverish pace.

It is the selling of East Germany—a form of economic reunification moving along a parallel track and sometimes far outpacing the speed of political unity.

Despite the chaos and the uncertainties surrounding East Germany's future, West German companies see a potential market of 17 million new customers, a reservoir of relatively skilled but cheap labor, a jumping off point for ventures farther east—and a chance to freeze out rivals from the rest of Western Europe, the United States and Japan.

For their part, East Germany's firms see the deals as a way of staying alive while making the painful transition from Stalinist stagnation to capitalist hyperactivism.

"We are being forced to learn the ropes of the market economy and if we don't learn it fast enough, we're dead," said Karl-Heinz Schroder of Mansfeld, an East German industrial and mining conglomerate. "There are certain companies that will survive in the world market and some that won't."

The new atmosphere of wheeling and dealing was on display this week at the Leipzig Trade Fair. During last fall's edition of this biannual event, the king was Communist potentate Erich Honecker and the atmosphere was sedate, cautious, even fearful.

Now that Honecker is gone, the new kings of Leipzig are West German businessmen and bankers, offering technical assistance and infusions of investment capital.

Everything here seems new and vibrant, from the 9,000 exhibitors from 60 countries—nearly 20 percent more than last year—to the West German beer and ice cream on sale at sidewalk stands. Even the portable toilets imported from West Germany sport signs reading, "We are looking for partners and employees for our operations in the GDR [East Germany]." A West Berlin phone number is displayed.

"It's a field day for the West Germans," said Walter Stock, a political scientist and adviser to several East German firms. "Our people are jumping at the first offer, and the first offer is usually a West German one."

The most feverish dealing has been in the automobile industry, where West Germany's Big Three—Volkswagen A.G., Adam Opel A.G. (a subsidiary of General Motors Corp.) and Daimler-Benz A.G.—have all announced joint ventures and sales agreements with their East German counterparts.

But others also are dealing. Robotron, East Germany's largest electronics conglomerate, announced it had made agreements with 15 "cooperative partners." The West German airline, Lufthansa, said it would buy 26 percent of East Germany's state-owned airline. And Siemens A.G., the giant West German communications firm, announced deals with three East German partners.

In most of these deals, say Stock and other experts, the term "joint venture" is largely a euphemism. East German law does not yet allow for corporate takeovers, and in any case, no one wants to pay for assets until it is clear what the East German mark is worth. This won't be known until after today's election and an ensuing monetary union between East and West.

Still, analysts say, the deals being signed today are certain to become the takeovers of tomorrow and many here have resigned themselves to the role of supplicant in the coming market economy.

"We've got to draw the conclusion that 40 years of socialism didn't deliver the goods, not just in the GDR but all over the East," said Werner Reinhold, a senior manager at IFA, the state-owned East German auto manufacturer. "We are the losers—you have to look at it that way."

Others warn that the pace is too fast and that East Germans are selling out too quickly and cheaply.

"I can understand the rush—our managers have no choice but to open up and find partners," said Stock. "But there is too much panicking. I encourage them to compare offers and not to jump at the first one, but it's very difficult to educate them."

On the surface, East Germany's economy, emerging from 40 years of rigid Stalinist centralism, is a disaster area; crumbling infrastructure, outmoded equipment, featherbedding, built-in inefficiencies and environmental negligence are only some of the problems. A massive set of legal restrictions on profits and the movement of capital is another.

Still, where some see disaster, others view opportunities.

"These are bright people and good workers and with a little hardware and some training they can leapfrog overnight," said Dana Robinson, trade expert for Intraco, a small American computer company based in Boca Raton, Fla. "The West Germans would like to keep us out of this market and keep it for themselves. But if the East Germans are smart, they won't sell so easily. They can hold out for better offers."

The $2.9 billion IFA deal with Volkswagen illustrates some of the promise and the pitfalls of the shotgun marriage of East and West. Reinhold said IFA received offers from Fiat, Citroen and Mitsubishi, but decided on Volkswagen both because the money was "acceptable" and because of special ties of language and heritage.

Under the joint venture, VW hopes to begin producing small-bodied Polo cars at IFA plants by year's end, and eventually to manufacture some 250,000 of them per year. For IFA, the deal means new technologies, cheaper component parts and modernized facilities. But the new equipment is certain to mean major layoffs: One IFA manager predicted up to 100,000 of the 215,000 workers employed at IFA's plants and in related electronics and supplies industries.

The deal also means the death of the Trabant, the small, two-cylinder car that came to symbolize both the hopes and the problems of East Germany. Many East Germans headed for the West in their Trabants, which sell new for as little as $3,000.

The cars provided mobility and an opportunity for freedom but are environmental and safety nightmares. Some at IFA tried to save the Trabant, arguing it was a distinctive and indigenous product, but VW's managers reportedly insisted that it be scrapped.

Like the Trabant, much of East Germany's economy is on a one-way ride to oblivion. Few business people will shed tears, but some believe that even though the country will gain in the long run, something distinctive may be lost along the way.

"The problem is we can't take the good things of socialism and capitalism and put them together," said Mansfeld's Schroder, 44. "Our generation has achieved some good things, but the young people really want this market economy. I am optimistic but there are some hard times ahead for us."

EAST BLOC LEGAL OVERHAUL LURES INVESTORS

(By Craig Forman)

LONDON.—From Berlin to Belgrade, politicians and economists are drawing up blueprints for the reconstruction of Eastern Europe's economies.

Scores of laws to foster restructuring are in the works. But consensus is elusive. In such nations as Hungary and Poland, Western participation is considered more vital than in others, such as Bulgaria. Conflicts abound over foreign investment, private property and state planning. "There is an enormous difference of opinion on what should be done," says David Roche, a London-based strategist and Eastern Europe expert at Morgan Stanley Group Inc., the U.S. investment bank.

Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and East Germany are leading in creating what Westerners consider positive environments for doing business. General Motors Corp. has agreed to invest up to $150 million in a Hungarian car-making venture. General Electric Co. will buy a majority stake in Hungarian light-bulb maker Tungsram for $150 million. Renault is establishing a Czech truck venture. Publishers Rupert Murdoch and Robert Maxwell each have acquired stakes in Hungarian newspapers. And West German companies are stampeding to invest in East Germany.

Of course, with antique communication systems and bloated bureaucracies, Eastern Europe is no place to get rich quick. But amid the rapid legal changes, here is a businessman's Baedeker on what Western investors can and can't do in the more-aggressively restructuring nations.

HUNGARY

This is the most attractive Eastern European market because of new legislation that frees foreign investors to make investments they couldn't a year ago.

Private Property. Individuals and organizations can buy equity in formerly state-owned private enterprises. Foreigners can own real estate through majority-owned Hungarian affiliates. The new corporate law lets companies compete.

Foreign investment and Currency Convertibility. Approval is automatic for investments totaling 50% of a Hungarian enterprise. A permit is required for over 50% ownership, and 100% ownership is possible. Government review must be completed in 90 days. Overseas investors can repatriate profits in hard currency. But getting rid of forints, Hungary's currency, can be troublesome.

Privatization. The government expects to privatize up to a third of state enterprise. A state-property agency is being organized to supervise sales and establish competitive-bidding procedures.

POLAND

Poland's economic and legal transformation is short on specifics; while draft regulations are circulating, details of many are unavailable. But the foundation is a proposal to stabilize the economy this year and then restructure it.

Private Property. The government promises laws to reorganize the economy, introducing greater competition and free enterprise. But new legal protections for private property are unclear. Foreigners can't directly own real estate, and leases must be officially approved.

Foreign Investment and Currency Convertibility. Foreigners can own the majority of capital in a joint venture and establish wholly owned Polish units. But the government has restricted foreign investors' ability to repartriate hard-currency profits by outlawing hard-currency profits by outlawing hard-currency accounts in Polish banks. Officials say the curbs are temporary. Meantime, Poland is pioneering limited convertibility.

Privatization. The goal is to develop an ownership structure akin to that of industrially developed nations." The government aims to sell such state assets as housing and small enterprises through public auction. Investments by foreigners and public sales of equity in the largest compaines are foreseen.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Though Finance Minister Vaclav Klaus is among the strongest free-marketeers in Eastern European government, internal government differences are likely to water down new legislation.

Private Property. Legislation is expected to remove barriers to private business while boosting private property rights. The government is expected to reduce the role of central planning.

Foreign investment and Currency Convertibility. New laws are expected to allow foreign businesses greater power to hire and fire and establish joint ventures with Czech firms. Foreigners can own up to 99% of joint ventures. Unlike Hungary, the Czechs will limit hard-currency repatriation to a share of hard-currency earnings. It isn't clear the extent to which foreigners can directly manage the venture, according to consultants at Peat Marwick McLintock in London. Currency isn't fully convertible; foreign-currency accounts must be kept at the national bank.

Privatization. Expected in the future, though specific new legislation is still uncertain.

YUGOSLAVIA

Prime Minister Ante Markovic's government is introducing a sweeping austerity plan to halt economic decline and bring down four-digit inflation.

Private Property. New legal protections for private property were introduced in 1988 and strengthened in 1989. Foreigners can own real estate through Yugoslav affiliates.

Foreign Investment and Currency Convertibility. A law last year permitted foreign majority shareholders in joint ventures and wholly owned foreign entities incorporated in Yugoslavia. Companies can be established as joint-stock companies, limited liabilty companies, or partnershps. Fledging stock exchanges are under development. The currency, the dinar, is fully convertible.

Privatization. The government intends to sell an undetermined portion of state-owned assets through direct sales, employee-share schemes and competitive bidding.

EAST GERMANY

The government has taken only plodding steps toward free-market reforms, but further moves are likely after this weekend's elections. The prospect of German unification may accelerate progress.

Private Property. Government intends to stick to a "social-market" economy, dimming hopes for a quick boost to protections for property rights. Foreigners can't own real estate.

Foreign Investment and Currency Convertibility. A new joint venture law allows foreigners to own 49 percent. Permits can be given for a 51 percent stake, but generally only in small enterprises. There is no legislative limit on repatriation of profits, but administrative obstacles are possible.

Privatization. The government intends to sell stakes in some of its giant industrial enterprises, or kombinat, to workers and other investors, but it's uncertain whether majority control would be sold to foreigners.

RISING IRON CURTAIN EXPOSES HAUNTING VEIL OF POLLUTED AIR

(By Marlise Simons)

KATOWICE, POLAND.—In the depths of a salt mine in Poland, men, women and children lie in bed, bundled in coats and tugging at heavy blankets. In an upside-down world, they have come to this underground clinic to breathe clean and healing air.

Above ground, in more conventional clinics, doctors using portable inhalators administer moist and purified air to children. "Whenever the smog is heavy, the wards fill up," said Dr. Henryk Kowalski, a laryngologist at a regional children's hospital.

Clean air has become a luxury here and in the industrial zones of Central Europe, where poisonous gases and toxic dust roam freely. As the secrets of the Eastern bloc's formerly Communist nations become known, this one may be the saddest. In the years when Soviet-bloc rulers claimed that they were forming "a new socialist man," they were in many instances condemning this man and his family to severe lung and heart disease, cancer, eye and skin ailments and, often, sickly children and shorter lives.

AVOIDING THE TRUTH

In much of Eastern Europe, comprehensive health surveys are not yet available because Communist Governments hid or ignored many of the medical statistics.

But from East Germany to Bulgaria, physicians, biologists and other health specialists are now eager to talk. And visiting experts from the United States and Western Europe have said that Central Europe's pollution is more dangerous and widespread than anything they have seen in the Western industrial nations, and that it occurs on a far greater scale than in the developing world, which does not have nearly as much industry.

Health specialists throughout the region said that diseases traceable to a poisoned environment were consuming a large portion of public health budgets and boding ill for future generations. Similar problems from pollution affect many parts of the Soviet Union as well.

A study of new mothers in the industrial region of Katowice and Cracow in southern Poland showed concentrations of lead, mercury, cadmium and other toxic metals in the placenta of every woman. The study's author, Dr. Josef Niwelinski of the University of Cracow, said more than half of the 1,000 placentas examined were deformed or damaged, "most likely by the high level of carbon monoxide and sulfur dioxide in the air."

The findings were all the more worrisome, he said, because "we studied only the most healthy mothers with normal births."

Another group of doctors is studying why in this region so many babies are born prematurely or die in the womb. Its preliminary conclusions are that at least 50 percent of the cases are caused by chemical changes in the mother's blood that leave the child short of oxygen.

NEW TECHNOLOGY IGNORED

In the former East bloc nations as well as in the Soviet Union, the quality of air, water and food has deteriorated sharply over the past two decades as heavy industries and vehicles multiplied. To Western experts, the polluting practices seem all the more ruthless because they increased at a time when their dire consequences were already widely known.

Experts said the technology to control pollution from antiquated installations was well known and in some Eastern European countries was even produced for export. Yet there are only minimal controls on much of Eastern Europe's industrial emissions, or none at all.

Poland's pollution is widely described as the worst. The Polish Academy of Science said a third of the nation's 38 million people live in "areas of ecological disaster." It said conditions were most hazardous in the coal and steel belt of Cracow and Silesia.

A HOSPITAL BEARS TESTIMONY

The Chorzow hospital in the sprawling industrial zone around Katowice, an area of extravagant pollution with more than 1.5 million inhabitants, seems to bear witness to the degradation.

Almost across the street from the hospital is a vast steel mill that has left the air dry and scorching. It forms a hellish circle with a power station and a chemical plant. The stink and smog from the plants were unmistakable inside the hospital wards.

Three members of the hospital board, eager to share their grievances with a visitor, cited a litany of ills. They said that there had been a sharp rise in cancer, heart disease and emphysema and that too many men were dying in their 30's and 40's. While general statistics for adults were scarce, the board said it was widely accepted that the life expectancy for adults in this region was four years less than the average for adults in the rest of the nation. They said public health was degenerating to a level of the postwar years.

"We have been telling the authorities about this for 20 years," said Dr. Jan Kern, director of health services. "They always told us they were doing research, that they were putting in new technology. But they cannot fool us. We get the patients."

BABIES WITH A BAD START

If the environment is harsh for adults, it is harder on the children. Dr. Bozena Cichos, a pediatrician in the children's hospital at Chorzow, said that in her nine years here she had seen a sharp rise in chronic bronchitis, asthma, pneumonia, meningitis and rickets. Underweight babies are becoming common, she said, and pregnancies of just 36 weeks—three or four weeks shortened—"are so normal now we don't even consider them short."

"Quite a few of these babies keep coming back," she said.

A new study in the Katowice area said 21 percent of the children up to 4 years old are sick almost constantly, while 41 percent of the childen under 6 have health problems, including hearing or seeing disabilities, anemia and low weight and height.

Some health experts in Eastern Europe say that as the environmental disaster is debated, there is a tendency to attribute all illness to pollution. They note that many adults and chidlren eat unhealthfully, with high-fat or unbalanced diets, and that heavy smoking is common. But even those habits are aggravated by smog, said Dr. Marion Glowacz, an internist.

SOIL UNFIT FOR PLANTING

While levels of pollution in Eastern Europe vary according to the type of industry, it is clear that wind and water spread the hazardous substances over large areas and that sulfur from coal burning affects the breathing of millions of people. Unsafe levels of heavy metals in drinking water and on land used for agriculture are widespread. In Silesia, the Polish authorities have banned the growing of vegetables in the widely contaminated soil.

The Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences recently disclosed that 50 percent of the country's drinking water does not meet even its outdated, lenient norms. In Prague, a city plagued by smog, many people complained of permanent headaches, asthma, nausea and intestinal trouble. And in northern Bohemia, home to many power plants and chemical works, officials said infant mortality was 12 percent higher than in the rest of the country; they said schoolchildren had to be sent to the mountains with their teachers at least one month a year.

"Fifteen years ago we knew our forests were dying, the children were losing immunity and water stopped being drinkable," said Pavel Seifer, a spokesman for the Czechoslovak Green Party. "But there was a party directive that the media should avoid information about the environment."

Mr. Seifer, who at the time was a journalist, added: "We were told we have to fight the efforts of the West. They want to bring us to our knees through ecology."

THE RISK OF SPEAKING OUT

Several physicians in Hungary and Bulgaria said that warning of the degenerative effects of industry on people's health was frowned upon, perceived as an attack on the system. When Dr. Nikolai Ivanov complained two years ago about a copper plant in Shrednogorie, Bulgaria, that was causing arsenic and lead poisoning among his patients, he was publicly criticized by the local Communist Party leader.

Although health officials in East Germany are still reluctant to respond to questions about public health, new unofficial reports indicate that in the industrial cities of Leipzig, Halle, Dresden and Karl-Marx-Stadt, rates of deaths caused by cancer and lung and heart diseases were 15 to 25 percent higher than in Berlin.

Even in the mountain towns of northern Czechoslovakia and southern Poland, long famous for their spas, smog has set in and acid rain has killed large stretches of forest.

Dr. Tereas Sregorczyk, a lung specialist in a sanitarium in Karpacz in southern Poland, said that her clinic was still operating effectively but that smog was hampering treatment in the sanitariums of the Jelenia Gora valley nearby. She said she often wonders what will happen to her little patients—220 children at the moment—who already need prolonged treatment for asthma, bronchitis and tuberculosis. "Most have been exposed to terrible pollution," she said. "I know we are too, but at least we developed our vital organs under more healthy conditions."

THE UNDERGROUND TREATMENT

Curing was less orthodox in a nearby uranium mine where about 500 adults were descending for regular breathing sessions. On a recent morning in the salt mine at Wieliczka, near Cracow, adults and children were resting in the dim light, surrounded by gray salt rock. The air 650 feet below the surface felt chilly but moist and exhilarating. Dr. Isabela Wroblewska pronounced it "as good for you as sitting in a strong sea breeze."

Stanislaw Pasierbeck, a factory worker from Zywiec who said his asthma attacks became unbearable five years ago at age 49, seemed accustomed to the alien world as he slipped off his blankets, fixed his miner's lamp and walked toward the nurse's station. "This is very good air," he said. "It is the only place where I can breathe deeply."

THE RED GRIME LINE

(By Flora Lewis)

PARIS.—Along with the other problems of uniting Germany, there are mountains of garbage. Literally, garbage. During those years behind the wall. East Germany indulged in a sneaky form of cooperation with West Berlin: waste disposal.

For Berlin, it was cheap, reportedly 1 percent of what disposal at mandatory standards would have cost. But then the East didn't bother with standards, just piling up 400,000 tons of detritus and 40,000 tons of toxic waste a year at unlucky sites in the countryside. And it was paid in hard currency, an estimated $700 million between 1975 and 1989.

Environmental degradation, far worse than had been estimated, is another dirty secret of Communist regimes now coming out, and another serious handicap in long-range programs to revive the economies and societies of the East.

There is special irony in this particular failure of Communism. The ideology never claimed to put rights and needs of the individual first—"bourgeois" notions, its advocates said disdainfully. But it asserted superiority in caring for the collective. Capitalists, by definition the argument went, are only concerned with their own profits. Communists put the community's interest first.

There is scarcely a human requirement that depends more directly on organized community responsibility than the environment. Individuals acting alone can't do much. And yet this has been one of the most spectacular failings of the centrally planned economies, seriously undermining the health services they once boasted about and making a nightmare of their development programs.

Marlise Simons of the New York Times reports that in the industrial region of southern Poland, adult life expectancy is four years less than in the rest of the country, because of air pollution. A clinic for people with respiratory ailments has been installed in a salt mine, where the air is clean. A study of 1,000 new mothers showed concentrations of lead, mercury and other toxic metals in every placenta, and half of them were damaged.

Health workers in the East have been aware of disaster for years, and now they learn that some of their countries even produced control technology, for export only. All are seriously affected. The Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences said 50 percent of the country's drinking water didn't meet it low standards. The Soviet Union has huge disaster areas. This year for the first time it appealed to the U.N. environment agency for help in stopping its secret self-destruction.

Officials have trouble explaining it. One reason is the way the plan worked, requiring only quantity of output. Investment and production goals were set in ways that discouraged maintenance and disregarded living and working conditions. "We lost contact with the people," one German Communist said "We focused on statistics."

Most important was the destruction of civil society, imposition of the one way systems that sent orders down the hierarchy and never allowed answers back. Degradation was gradual, so it didn't provoke the widespread horror of an explosive accident like the Chernobyl disaster.

In Hungary last year, even before the Communist collapse, mass demonstrations forced abandonment of plans to build a huge power producing dam on the Danube that would have been an ecological monstrosity. But that was exceptional.

After all, markets cost-consciousness, the need to please the customers, turn out to be more effective than central command even on such a basic social question as pollution.

And the right to associate, voice grievances and launch initiatives turns out to be as important for keeping the neighborhood livable as it is for freedom and self-expression.

Industry and man-made changes of nature were causing environmental damage before there was Communism. Indeed, it was the dreadful conditions of the Industrial Revolution that led Karl Marx to expound his ideas of wiping out private property. The ecological results were just another of his miscalculations.

But they are results that affect not only the people concerned. This is another area where Western experience, Western technology and Western help will have to be supplied to enable the East to dig itself out of its pits. Even though it is now evident that pollution was also linked to ideology, it doesn't respect borders.

When the East-West divide disappears, there will still be the grime line to overcome in cleaning up Europe and its atmosphere.

FIRST, AID FOR CENTRAL AMERICA

"They're wrong," President Bush says of Senate Democrats who want to take half of the $800 million he has just earmarked for emergency aid to Panama and Nicaragua and give it to Eastern Europe's new democracies. and he's right.

Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont argues that $800 million is "simply too much money" for "two countries of slight economic, security and foreign policy importance to U.S. national interests." Senator Robert Byrd of West Virginia agrees. By pitting off a good cause against another, the Democrats serve both poorly.

Granted, Republican Administrations have oversold the strategic significance of Central America. Ronald Reagan's obsession with ousting the Sandinistas, and George Bush's with arresting General Noriega, vastly distorted U.S. priorities.

But the record only reinforces the case for speeding emergency reconstruction aid to both Nicaragua and Panama. As Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger told a Senate subcommittee last week, the U.S. owes immediate help to both, and risks recurring crises if it fails to follow through. Too often in the past, apparent successes in the hemisphere turned sour because new governments couldn't establish their legitimacy through economic gains.

Even more important, both the new Panamanian government of Guillermo Endara and the Nicaraguan Government-elect of Violeta Chamorro inherit substantial U.S.-inflicted damage. In Panama, two years of sanctions were followed by a U.S. military invasion that led to about $1 billion in losses from pillaging by looters. In Nicaragua, an even longer period of sanctions plus the massively destructive contra war compounded the cost of Sandinista economic mistakes.

Views still differ on the wisdom of past U.S. policies. But to walk away from today's moral debts would dishonor America.

Eastern Europe's democracies also need help, but in different ways. As economic reforms take shape, foreign support can usefully underwrite specific aspects, like currency stabilization. But most Eastern European countries are just now beginning reforms. Effective help can be more sensibly designed in the debates over next year's budget.

Western Europe and Japan are already addressing Eastern Europe's needs. These donors have less reasons than Washington to put significant resources into Central America. And the Bush Administration believes, reasonably, that East European development is best helped through private investment rather than direct governmental aid.

Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki of Poland, now visiting the U.S., is not even asking for additional direct assistance at this point. He and President Bush last week signed a treaty to encourage U.S. business investment in Poland. And Mr. Mazowiecki also asks help in rescheduling Poland's $40 billion debt to Western banks and governments.

No other East European country is as far along the economic-reform road as Poland, nor as ready to receive aid. The others, too, surely can wait for reasonable consideration in the 1991 fiscal year, only about six months away. By then, Washington should produce additional help for them. Central America can't wait.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there are to be 20 minutes on the amendment. I have not yet submitted it. I expect the time to have begun running, and I ask unanimous consent that even though the amendment has not yet been submitted, the time be charged.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. I see the time is up. I would like to have an opportunity to speak for 3 minutes on this subject in support of his amendment, if that is possible under the time situation.

Mr. BYRD. Does the opposition need that time?

Mr. KASTEN. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not, if the time were to start now, the 20 minutes would begin. Was the Senator saying we should say half of the time has been—I did not understand the request.

Mr. BYRD. I started reading before I recalled what the agreement was. I did not want to cheat on the agreement. So I said let us start it running as of the time I began.

Mr. KASTEN. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. President, if I could facilitate things by saying I would like to speak on behalf of the amendment for 3 minutes, somewhere in this process, and any other agreements he would like to agree to with other Members, I hope we can proceed quickly. I wish to speak in favor of the amendment for not to exceed 3 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on this amendment be set at 9:30 and that the time between now and then be equally divided.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senator BOREN.

Mr. BOREN. I thank my colleague from West Virginia, and I will be brief. I want to compliment the Senator from West Virginia on the remarks that he has made this morning. I think he has sounded an alarm that every single Member of this Senate should heed.

Just look at the facts, as the Senator from West Virginia has indicated. Japan and West Germany, as of January 1, 1990, have given $3 billion in aid to Poland—$3 billion. How much of it was in the form of direct grants? Seventeen percent. How much of it was in the form of credits that could be used only to buy products produced in their countries? Eighty-three percent. Turn around and look at what we did with $800 million that we gave.

As the Senator from West Virginia has indicated, most of it was cash. Most of it was cash. In fact, 78 percent of ours went in the form of cash. We desperately need to have new markets for our manufacturers. We need to create jobs here at home. We have a great opportunity, as the Senator from West Virginia has indicated.

These countries are building their infrastructure. Let us aggressively move in so that those factories will have American equipment in them produced by American jobs and American transportation systems and American produced telecommunication systems. And when they need spare parts, they will be buying American spare parts, and when they need service, they will be entering into relationships with our firms. Let us develop a market there. It will help them by providing these credits and by giving aid in the form of credits and create jobs here at home.

We desperately need a "Buy American" program. Other countries have increased their tied aid from $4 billion to $12 billion from 1984 to 1987. Some experts claim that last year we lost $4.8 billion in exports because we do not give aid in the form of credits to buy our products produced here at home.

The Byrd amendment will force a study of the positive impact of our foreign aid on the U.S. economy. Currently our Agency for International Development does not even have an accounting system that can tell us how many contracts and how much money ends up coming back into America from the foreign aid that we are giving overseas. This initiative is long overdue. I commend the Senator from West Virginia for it. Let us have a "Buy American" program.

I ask unanimous consent that I might be added as a cosponsor of his amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, and I will add his name.

AMENDMENT NO. 1540

(Purpose: To require a study and report on how United States foreign assistance programs may promote United States economic competitiveness)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I now send the amendment to the desk. I am offering this amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BOREN, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BOREN, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes an amendment numbered 1540.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title III of the bill, add the following new section:

COMMERCIAL ASPECTS OF UNITED STATES FOREIGN ASSISTANCE

SEC. . (a) The Secretary of Commerce, after consulting with the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of State, and appropriate United States business organizations, shall conduct a study which examines and explores the foreign assistance programs currently engaged in by the United States through the Agency for International Development and other appropriate departments and agencies of the United States government and explores mechanisms by which the international economic competitiveness of the United States may be enhanced through such programs. In undertaking this study, the Secretary shall—

(1) examine the foreign assistance programs of Japan, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and such other international aid donors as the Secretary may designate, for the purpose of determining what mechanisms are in use to tie foreign assistance to the industrial and commercial interests of the donor nations, in particular, the programs currently being engaged in and planned by such countries in the East European countries of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary; and

(2) determine, as far as possible, for each of fiscal years 1989 and 1990, and requested for fiscal year 1991, the dollar amounts and percentages of current United States programs which include United States business investment, exports, or other business-related activities, and shall compare that assessment with a similar assessment made for each of the other international aid donors examined by this study, on a region-by-region basis, with particular attention paid to the comparable efforts in the East European countries referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) Not later than September 1, 1990, the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on Foreign Relations and Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs and Appropriations of the House of Representatives a report setting forth the findings of the study conducted under subsection (a).

Mr. BYRD. How much time remains on this side?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 2 minutes 36 seconds remaining; 5 minutes remain on the side controlled by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment. I am pleased that I have been added as a cosponsor of this amendment. What the Senator said, and also the Senator from Oklahoma, is exactly right. It is not only in Eastern Europe. We have looked at what the Japanese in particular have been doing in the developing countries of this world, in South America, in Africa, in other areas, and they are linking their development assistance directly to Japanese business. This is something the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee, has pointed out, and he is precisely right.

I think it is also important, Mr. President, although some of my friends at the Department of State might disagree, that this study is being directed by the Secretary of Commerce. I think that is important that it is directed by the Secretary of Commerce, who will work along with the Secretary of State and the Agency for International Development and also the Treasury in terms of putting together these programs.

I hope that along with this study some of the ideas which were included in a report which the former Director of AID Alan Woods put together, a report entitled "Development in the National Interests, U.S. Economic Assistance Into the 21st Century of Man." Some of the ideas incorporated in that report would be utilized in the process of the study. A number of those ideas were correct. It shows that the attitude at AID is not necessarily in opposition to the concerns expressed by all of us here this morning, but the fact is they just have not done it aggressively enough. I hope that this study will help in that way.

Specifically, we need to do more with Exim. Specifically, we need to do more with tied credits. And specifically, we need to do more in terms of the overall targeting of help to American companies in specific kinds of markets. I think that a number of these issues will be raised by the committee.

So I am pleased to be in support, and I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment.

Just one word on Exim programs in Eastern Europe. I believe that the Eximbank can operate adequately in Eastern Europe on existing appropriated funds. We believe that, as of right now, there is no need for additional appropriations at this time, and this study is not calling for it. I simply want to point out to my colleagues that Exim is open for business in Hungary; it is open for business short term only, in Poland; that is going to be expanded. It is also open in Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. We are making important inroads through Exim in Eastern Europe.

There are credit problems and a number of other issues with regard to our ability to determine creditworthiness of different kinds of facilities. But the banks are open. As of this point, there is no need for new money. And I can say, as a person who has been a strong advocate and supporter of the Eximbank even at times when the previous administration refused to fund the Eximbank, we took those dollars out of other places in the 150 budget, and Senator LEAHY and I will continue to be strong supporters of the Eximbank.

One word, Mr. President, about the environment. In our report on this emergency supplemental bill, we have included important language and important law with regard to the environment. The examples the chairman of the committee was listing are real and they exist not only in Eastern Europe but also in the Baltic States. I myself was in Riga, Latvia and saw for myself children who were born with defects and other kinds of problems because of the environmental situation that existed in the Baltic states, and that is true throughout the Ukraine, but it is also true in Eastern Europe. We need to help.

Also, this could be an example of where our technology can be used and effect a win-win situation. It will be American companies, American businesses, that will be providing environmental health and environmental equipment and cleanup equipment that can be used by Eastern Europe. So it could not only help the environment, it could also help U.S. business.

I simply want to say that we not only have no objection to the amendment on this side, we strongly support this amendment, and we strongly support the efforts of the chairman of the committee to move toward this study on how the U.S. foreign assistance programs may promote U.S. economic competitiveness.

Mr. President, how much time remains?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time controlled by the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

The President pro tempore controls the remaining 28 seconds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think I will just let the 28 seconds run so Senators will have almost a half-minute longer in which to get here to vote. It is an important vote. It could be adopted by voice, but let the Senate go on record, unanimously, I hope, in support of the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has expired. The hour of 9:30 has arrived. The question is on agreeing to the amendment numbered 1540, proposed by the President pro tempore, the Senator from West Virginia. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 96, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 66 Leg.]

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 25, LINES 17 THROUGH 21

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the excepted committee amendment on page 25, lines 17 through 21. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes Senator HELMS.

Mr. HELMS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, shortly I am going to offer an amendment but first I want to discuss it so that in the process there will be an explanation from some Member of the Senate about a matter in Nicaragua that not only puzzles me but gives me great concern.

Specifically, I wonder if any other Senator found the news from Nicaragua yesterday morning as confusing as I did. I am making no positive declaration about this matter. I am just raising questions.

Is it possible that, even as we are debating the question of providing aid to Nicaragua, President Chamorro has announced the appointment of General Humberto Ortega as Commander in Chief of the Army? Does that name sound familiar? She has appointed General Ortega as Commander in Chief of the Army.

I know the answer to the next question. Is not General Ortega the brother of Daniel Ortega, and a member of the nine-man directorate of the Communist Sandinista Front? For whatever reason he has been appointed; there may be a good reason. If so, I want to know what it is. But for whatever reason President Chamorro took this action, she sure did disappoint a lot of people in Nicaragua on her first test. The people of Nicaragua voted the Sandinistas out, and they did it overwhelmingly to the utter astonishment and perhaps to the dismay of the New York Times and the Washington Post. That happened on February 25. Yet on April 26, the Sandinistas still control the massive military apparatus that has kept them in power since 1979. Is this action by Mrs. Chamorro not a betrayal of the people of Nicaragua?

Indeed, President Chamorro's own political allies, are astonished. Two of the persons she intended to appoint to her cabinet have refused to serve—Mr. Jaime Cuadra, the proposed Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. Gilberto Cuadra—no relation—the proposed Minister of Construction and Transportation. Their names were announced, but they refused to serve because of the appointment of General Ortega.

Let me say right now that if any Senator has an explanation for this, do not hesitate to interrupt me because I just want to know the answer.

Mr. President, is this an act that will promote reconciliation? If so, what kind of reconciliation? Or is it an action that will block the process of reconciliation? Will other political leaders decline to serve? Or will it make it unwise for the Nicaraguan Resistance to lay down their arms? I am talking about the freedom fighters.

Frankly, Mr. President, if I were a member of the so-called Nicaraguan Resistance—and I prefer to call members of that group, "freedom fighters"—I would think twice about giving up my arms while the Communist Sandinistas still control the armed forces which have waged war against freedom in Nicaragua.

I have been in conversation with the leadership of the freedom fighters. They were dismayed early on when Daniel Ortega, as one of his last acts, shipped out tons of weaponry to his people in the boondocks of Nicaragua, arming the Communists with government weaponry. That was just before Daniel Ortega surrendered the office, after his defeat.

And the freedom fighters did not like that. And they certainly did not like it when the suggestion was made that they lay down their arms and come back into Nicaragua, while their opponents had no obligation to disarm.

As one of them put it to me, "I like my head attached to my body. I do not want to be assassinated when I am coming home." But Mr. Ortega's crowd already had the weaponry, and, now, Mr. Ortega's brother is in charge of the military. What is going on?

Of course, Mr. President, it is fortunate that the agreements signed by the freedom fighters strees that the laying down of arms is strictly voluntary. They were smart to put it that way and insist on that. Obviously, it would have been very dangerous for them to lay down their arms while the Communist Sandinistas are still fully armed and under the command of the idelogical hard-liner who conducted the war against the freedom fighters all along.

Question: Do Senators really believe that the American people will agree to the provision of aid to Nicaragua so long as the Communist commander is still in control? The American people are opposed to foreign aid in any case. I think my friend from West Virginia has made that point clear. They wonder about this budget being shipped overseas and to other countries, and they have been wondering about it for a long time. Every poll, I want to say to Senator BYRD, has said that. So he is exactly right, as is his custom.

But will the American people who are opposed to the concept of foreign aid in ordinary cases approve of giving foreign aid to a country whose army is controlled by Communists?

Mr. President, the taxpayers of the United States and this Government have no obligation to provide aid, and Nicaragua has no obligation to accept it. But I believe it would be a sound policy for us to made clear to President Chamorro that the United States will not and cannot support Communists in control of the army. Why should we tax the miners in West Virginia to support a situation like that?

We cannot dictate to her. I am not suggesting that. But I am suggesting that we Senators have a duty to examine precisely what it is that we are doing.

No, we cannot dictate to her. But we are not obliged to give any money either. If we give money, we can state the conditions under which it is being made available.

I do not consider conditions of that kind to be an interference in the internal affairs of the recipient country, or the recipient government.

President Chamorro is a charming lady. I wish her well. But as far as this Senator is concerned, at least, she needs to understand that it should be a basic premise that freedom requires an army that is not beholden to totalitarian ideology. For that reason, I have an amendment which I have drafted and which I shall in due course propose.

The amendment would prohibit any aid in this bill being made available to the Government of Nicaragua if Ortega or any member of the nine-man directorate to the Sandinista National Liberation Front on February 25—the day of this election—holds any nonelected civilian or military post in the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. President, perhaps some Senators may not be entirely familiar with the powers that are being conferred upon General Ortega, Daniel Ortega's brother. First, we must understand that this post is a new post that was not created until February 23, 2 days before the election. On that date, a new law governing the organization and administration of the EPS, which is the Sandinista Army, was passed by the Sandinista-controlled National Assembly. Does that give anybody any concern?

It does me. The term army under this law is equivalent to armed forces. It means, therefore, that General Ortega becomes the highest-ranked individual in the military and director of the general command.

His duties are broad and sweeping. His first duty is, and let me quote, "to guard and respect the political Constitution, national laws, and military laws." That comes even before his military duties. Take note.

It must be remembered that the Constitution to be guarded is, guess what, the Sandinista constitution; and the national laws, guess what, are the Sandinista laws passed by the Sandinista National Assembly. And since Mrs. Chamorro's coalition, UNO is already falling apart, it is not clear who will control the new National Assembly.

Thus, if General Ortega has a mind to do so, he could assert his interpretation of the Sandinista constitution and laws over and above that of President Chamorro.

Does that give any Senator any concern? Am I the only one?

Moreover, and let us go a little further, General Ortega has the power to command and administer the army, including the navy, air force and whatever. As such, he will appoint the chief of general staff and the entire echelon of the military. He is the head of the military council, which is the highest decision-making body in the army. He decides upon the granting power of military rank, the program of training, the organization of forces, and the military divisions of the country.

Mr. President, he is even responsible for the personal security of President Chamorro.

I ask again: Am I the only Senator concerned about all of this? What does the State Department have to say about it? What does the administration have to say about it? They are silent in seven languages.

It is also interesting that General Ortega, Daniel Ortega's brother, has broad powers to distribute favors to his friends and to the friends of the Sandinistas. He has the power to arrange the acquisition and production and conservation and improvement of arms equipment and other necessary items for the conduct of the army. He will let out the contracts for buildings, fortifications, air bases, naval facilities, and other military installations.

Should we not assume, therefore, that, as one of the major sources of government contracts, he wields tremendous power to reward the friends of the Sandinistas and to punish its enemies through denial of contracts?

So I ask again: Am I the only Senator bothered by this? Where is the State Department? What do they have to say about it? Maybe they have an answer.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the Sandinista army law of February 23, 1990, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. Of course, when you get one Ortega, you really get two. Both Ortegas are members of the nine-man directorate of the Sandinista National Liberation Front that is responsible for the Communist domination of Nicaragua. The heart of the Communist Sandinista power is in the military might that is under their command and control. Through this military power the Communist Sandinistas have brutally terrorized and oppressed the Nicaraguan people. The Sandinista regime has been a ruthless military dictatorship, supported and encouraged by Cuba and the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a list of the Sandinista directorate be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SANDINISTA DIRECTORATE AS OF FEBRUARY 25, 1990

1. Bayardo Arce—Vice-Coordinator FSLN and the Sandinista Executive Commission.
2. Thomas Borge—Minister of Interior.
3. Luis Carrion—Minister of Industry and Commerce.
4. Carlos Nunez—President of National Assembly.
5. Daniel Ortega—President of the Republic.
6. Humberto Ortega—Minister of Defense.
7. Henry Ruiz—Minister of Foreign Cooperation.
8. Victor Tirado—Member of Party Apparatus.
9. Jaime Wheelock—Minister of Agriculture—Livestock Development and Agrarian Reform.

Mr. HELMS. Therefore, Mr. President, the crucial question is whether the Nicaraguan people will be free. The question is, Who controls the military? How can Nicaragua be considered free as long as Humberto Ortega or any other member of the nine-man directorate retains any post, civilian or military?

If Mrs. Chamorro, for any reason, had to cave in to communism before she even began to rule, much as I respect and admire the lady, how can we expect her to be strong after making such a concession, which may very well be fatal?

On February 25, the people of Nicaragua overwhelmingly rejected the Communist regime of Daniel Ortega and all of the other Communists. They may have been voting for Mrs. Chamorro nominally. I do not know. That would require me to be able to read the mind of each and every voter. But in reality, the sum total of it was that the people of Nicaragua overwhelmingly voted to get rid of a totalitarian regime forced upon them 10 years ago.

I remind the Senate that I watched in dismay and astonishment when this Senate voted overwhelmingly to give the Communists in Nicaragua the seed money to set up shop. I raised some questions that day and the Senate said, "Down, boy, this will work out. We are experimenting with freedom."

Mr. President, citizens of the United States cannot imagine how deeply the Communist apparatus permeates the governmental structure in Nicaragua. The Sandinista Front and Sandinista army are tightly unified, both in ideology and in command structure. That is why I fear that if Humberto Ortega controls the army, he will control the new Chamorro government. That means, therefore, the $300 million proposed in this bill—may be or may not be, I do not know which; I am asking the question—could or could not be simply aid to Communists?

This money may not help President Chamorro in the long run. It may only help the Communists consolidate their control and undermine the freely elected government.

As I said a minute ago, I remember well the similar debates which were heard on this Senate floor in 1979 and 1980. At that time, we were voting on the proposition of $75 million of the American taxpayers' money; today, it is $300 million. And back in 1979 and 1980, as I said earlier, I opposed the aid to the Communist regime that took over. And I did my best to point out that it would be used by Communists to consolidate their power. That is not some after-the-fact, "I told you so." This is a matter of record. So that is exactly what the U.S. aid did in 1980—helped the Communists consolidate their power. It provided the seed money for them to do it. As Paul Harvey says, "Now you know the rest of the story."

The $300 million we are being asked to appropriate today will have exactly the same effect, unless there is a real power change. The Communist Ortega brothers should not be in a position to get one dime of the American taxpayers' money.

I think we ought to ask ourselves this question: Unless President Chamorro repudiates the Ortega brothers—incidentally, she embraced Daniel Ortega on election day, and told him she loved him—and unless she shuts them out of the government, does she not run the very risk of becoming a figurehead at the very start of her administration?

I am aware, in case anybody wants to bring it up, that Mrs. Chamorro claims that she is going to take the post of Defense Minister and, therefore, will be able to control Humberto Ortega. If that is correct, why does she not control him now by stating clearly that no member of the Sandinista Communist directorate will have any place in the government?

I am old enough to remember what the allies insisted upon after the close of World War II. We insisted on a process of de-Nazification. We insisted that the Nazi leaders and their key followers could not have any role in government or in the news media. We realized that when a totalitarian regime is overthrown, the propagandists and ideologues of that regime cannot be expected to change their habits, any more than a leopard can change its spots.

By the same token—and I think Daniel Ortega has been candid enough to make this clear in statements that he has made over and over again in recent days—the Sandinistas, in the judgment of this Senator, cannot be allowed to retain any position of power or influence in a free Nicaragua. We have already seen that, in the 2 months since the elections, the Sandinistas have not only taken every step to consolidate and hold their ill-gotten gains during the past 10 years, but they have poured enormous quantities of weaponry into El Salvador to destabilize that country and strengthen the hand of the Communist guerrillas there.

And with Humberto Ortega as Commander in Chief of the army, President Chamorro would be hard put to control or prevent Humberto Ortega's clandestine operations.

Just for the record, and I will conclude momentarily there are 65,000 active troops in the Communist Sandinista armed forces—65,000. This is by far the largest in all of Central America. The armed forces have not been a part of the Nicaraguan Government—they have been an instrument of the Communist Sandinista Party. That is the case today and, unless I miss my guess and unless my information is totally wrong from Nicaragua, that is the case that will continue to be unless the new government acts promptly to change the situation.

Bear in mind that this is the same army that has received more than $5 billion in military aid from the Soviet Union, $5 billion as compared to what? This Congress fell all over itself fussing and fuming and excoriating the President and everybody else and we coughed up $227 million for the freedom fighters.

Five billion dollars from the Communists in the Soviet Union to this very army in Nicaragua, as compared to $227 million—million—that the freedom fighters in Nicaragua received from the United States.

This is an armed force that has received the most modern Soviet weaponry, such as tanks and self-propelled guns, such as the T-54 tank and the 122 mm artillery guns. They have Soviet light armor, such as the PT-76 amphibious tank and BMP armored personnel carriers. They have received missile attack boats. They have received attack helicopters such as the MI-8 and the MI-17 HIP assault helicopters, and the MI-25/35 HIND attack helicopter.

They received surface-to-air missiles, such as the shoulder-launched SAM-7, which, as every Senator knows, are used for air defense. They received some mobile SAM launchers.

In 1989, the Bush administration acknowledged and disclosed that the Soviet Union had shipped 12,000 tons of war-fighting materiel to the Communist Sandinista army.

But the regular army in Nicaragua is by no means the only problem. The Sandinistas, in addition to that 65,000 I was telling you about, the Sandinistas have built a reserve army of 200,000, again one of the largest in all of Latin America, organized in what are called the local militias. These local militias have been armed with the most modern Soviet weaponry and these militias exist in every part of Nicaragua.

Now does it become a little clearer why the freedom fighters are hesitant about laying down their arms? Just like one of them told me on the telephone, he said, "I like my head attached to my body. We need freedom in order to turn in our weapons." And I do not blame him.

Finally, there is the third force, which is the smallest but the most important, perhaps. It is not clear who will control these forces in the new government. They are the troops of the Ministry of Interior, the MINT troops, some 5,000 of them, highly trained, deeply motivated Communist agents, ruthlessly dedicated to the survival of Sandinista communism. This is the very same type of force that we have seen in operation in other Communist countries in transition, in Romania, in Georgia, in Armenia, in Azerbaijan, and so forth.

So we must assume that in Nicaragua these forces are likewise prepared to perpetrate murder and destruction for the survival of Marxist power. The Nicaraguan secret police operate in every block. Even our State Department has acknowledged that, grudgingly. The Nicaraguan secret police are in every workplace, in every school, in every organization. They have at their disposal groups of paramilitary gangs trained to harass individuals and break up peaceful gatherings.

So if I may make a suggestion to that delightful lady, the President of Nicaragua, President Chamorro would do well to examine what she has inherited. The last thing she needs is a stable full of Trojan horses poised to undermine and destroy the hope of freedom for which the Nicaraguan people overwhelmingly voted.

As long as the Sandinista Party controls these forces, the Communist Sandinistas have an enormous bargaining tool to demand—what? Cabinet posts and government control of the economy. I mention those just for openers. The mere changing of the head of government will have little impact on these forces, which are deeply rooted in the Communist society. There will be little impact, I emphasize, unless and until the Sandinista's command and control system is broken.

There is no surprise in the postelection statements of the arrogant and devious Brothers Ortega. The depth of this problem was revealed in the statement by the feared Thomas Borge, director of the secret police, in his capacity as Minister of the Interior, who is also another member of the nine-man junta controlling the country. On February 7, Thomas Borge stated flatly that the army would not allow the revolutionary structures set up by the Sandinistas to be dismantled. His exact words:

This electoral coalition cannot govern because there have been deep transformations in Nicaragua that it would try to reverse, causing serious social consequences.

For example, with the existing Revolutionary Armed Forces * * * and the Interior Ministry * * * how can the officers obey hare-brained orders imparted by those who are appointed by UNO as ministers of defense and interior?

Since these structures are revolutionary, UNO will attempt to destroy them, causing chaos in Nicaragua. This will be a country without a government.

What he meant is that the revolutionary command structure will refuse to obey any orders by the new government that would dismantle the revolution and restore freedom. What he is saying to Mrs. Chamorro is, "You may have the job, but we have the power."

The civilian government, of course, particularly with this development, is pitifully weak and will have no countervailing force unless, perhaps, the freedom fighters of the Nicaraguan resistance are not demobilized and are brought in to defend the people against the Sandinista revolutionary power.

So I am raising these questions, Mr. President. I apologize to the Senate for having taken so much time. But we must ask ourselves the question, if we approve these funds and allow them to be given to a government that is only nominally in control, to a government that is beholden to a massive and malevolent military force nestling in the heart of the Nicaraguan society, will not a grave injustice have been done?

Mr. President, in just a moment I am going to send an amendment to the desk, but I suggest the absence of a quorum just momentarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have just been advised that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] is on his way to the floor, desiring to address himself to the amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1541 TO THE EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 25, LINE 17

(Purpose: To prevent the provision of foreign aid to Nicaragua as long as certain Sandinista leaders maintain government or military posts)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 1541,

On page 25, line 21, add before the period the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds provided for under this subsection shall be made available to the government of Nicaragua as long as any person who was a member of the Directorate of the Sandinista National Liberation Front on February 25, 1990, holds any non-elected civilian or military post in the government of Nicaragua".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wonder if with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina on the floor—I do not intend to be long, but I wonder if he would be willing to answer a couple of questions?

Mr. HELMS. Well, I thought I was the one asking the questions, but I will be glad to answer any question I know the answer to.

Mr. LEAHY. I was just curious, to be able to answer some of the questions asked by other Senators here who have come to me and asked what they thought the schedule might be. I do not want in any way to suggest any restraints or anything else on the time the distinguished Senator from North Carolina may want to discuss this issue, but I was just curious if he has some idea of what we may be voting in this particular amendment.

Mr. HELMS. I am through now, but I ask no action be taken, as a matter of comity to Senator SPECTER. I did not know he was interested, but he called the Cloakroom. I will say to the Senator I have said all I am going to say.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, that is true. I was actually looking at something else. The Senator did mention Senator SPECTER earlier and, obviously, we want to do that. I hope he is on his way.

Mr. HELMS. If the Senator will yield, I am advised that Senator SPECTER is on his way.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator is through, maybe I could make a couple of comments on the amendment itself. If the Senator has more to say, it is his amendment; I do not want to cut in.

Mr. HELMS. No, I do not. I thank the Senator.

EXHIBIT 1

SANDINISTA LAW ON DUTIES OF THE ARMY

The law governing the organization and administration the EPS—Sandinista Popular Army—was passed by the Nicaraguan National Assembly and went into effect on 2/23/90. It includes broad and sweeping powers for the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, a post now held by General Humberto Ortega, brother of former President Ortega and Minister of Defense under the Sandinista government.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Army, besides being the highest ranked individual in the military and director of the General Command, has the following duties inherent to his post:

To guard and respect the political Constitution, national laws and military laws;

To command and administer the Army;

To arrange the acquisition, production, conservation and improvement of arms, equipment, and other necessary items for the conduct of the army;

To perform acts of military protocol and make private contracts for the army;

To assign the officer who will occupy the chief of the General Staff (Estado Mayor) and the entire command echelon of the military;

To determine the military division within the country, and the organization of forces;

To arrange the acquisition, construction, maintenance and improvements of buildings, fortifications, air bases, naval facilities, and other military installations;

To decide on proposals from the military council in relation to composition of the staff of the army, definition of staff, granting of military rank, general plans for training, work, exercises, etc.;

To issue ordinances, orders, indications, directives, dispositions, instructions and methodology that regulate the government, organization, instruction, distribution and administration of the army;

To conduct inspections of the army or any facet thereof;

To represent legally the army;

To create businesses of supply and services for the army;

To direct the armed militias and armed reserves;

To decide requests of foreign troop transits over Nicaraguan territory;

To direct and control the Sandinista Navy;

To formulate a budget for the Sandinista Army;

To appoint officers to the positions of military attaches;

To appoint officers to represent the army before international groups.

The following major positions in the armed forces are subordinate to the Commander-in-Chief:

Chief of the General Staff (Estado Mayor);

Chief of major military units and commands;

Chief of the Sandinista Air Force;

Chief of the Sandinista Navy;

Chief of the Central Rearguard;

Chief of the Areas and Directorates; and Chief of the High Command of Reserve Units.

The Commander-in-Chief also is the director of the Military Council, which is the highest decision-making body in the army. The Council reports directly to the Commander-in-Chief, and he has the power to appoint additional members to this council, over and above those who sit statutorily.

Finally, the Commander-in-Chief organizes the military group that is responsible for the security of the President of the Republic.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, sometimes within our foreign aid we tend to micromanage just a tad. I have spoken clearly on assistance to Nicaragua. I have said that I thought the amount of money we are talking about for Nicaragua, $300 million, seemed like a great deal in such a short time and that the United States' interests and Nicaragua's interests might be better served by stretching that out for a period of time so they could absorb it.

Yesterday, in answer to one other's Senator's question about the schedule on foreign aid to Nicaragua, I said in effect the $300 million is as good as money in the bank. They know they are going to get the $300 million. And then I added, parenthetically, that $300 million is actually more money than Nicaragua has in all their banks, literally, put together. I understand I am correct on that. It is a great deal of money.

Incidentally, the $300 million is approximately all the aid that we have given to Nicaragua in over 40 years. We are going to do it, and we are going to send this out in about 40 days, but it is about the amount we have given Nicaragua in 40 years. So it is a considerable amount of money and there may well be a temptation with it to say now we are going to step in and tell you how to run your government.

I do not think we can have it both ways, Mr. President. The United States Government has spent nearly 10 years trying to destroy Nicaragua. We have had the contra policy, which I think was one of the most disastrous policies in the postwar period in this country. It was an attempt to substitute a covert action policy for a foreign policy.

There has never been a time in our history that it has worked. This is just one more demonstration, for those who want to have historical axioms and lessons we can usually go by. We got one of that. We cannot substitute a covert action policy for a foreign policy, especially not here in our own hemisphere.

It was a colossal mistake and disaster. We have seen members of the past administration humiliated by it. Some were more than humiliated; they were indicted and convicted as a result of this.

The spectacle of a former President saying that he was not involved in the Iran-Contra illegal transfer of funds—we will take him at his word. He was under oath and maybe he does not remember it. He did say as former Commander in Chief he did not remember the man who had been the Chairman of his Joint Chiefs of Staff for a number of years, even though they used to meet quite regularly.

The fact is, though, it was a disastrous policy.

We ended up humiliating ourselves worldwide when it came out what was being done. It was kowtowing to the Ayatollahs of Iran, paying of ransom for hostages, hostages who are still being held today. It shows us how successful that was.

What came of it? The destruction of poor Nicaragua. This is a poor country. Some of the people live in devastating poverty. A combination of the Contra war, combination of some of the mistakes of the Sandinistas, a number of other things, the devastating hurricane in the Bluefields area, all these things, and we have a country now prostrate, just devastated by all this.

I have been down there many, many times and one can see a totally worthless currency, people cannot be adequately fed, machinery that is broken down and cannot be repaired, cannot be run, and an export market that is gone.

So now the United States has said, in effect—they have spent 10 years trying to destroy Nicaragua—we are going to try to do something to bring it back together. There is a democratically elected Government. To the credit of the past Government, they turned over power. We saw the former President, who seized power in a revolution, turn over the sash of the Presidency to the incoming President who won it by election. I cannot think of an historical analogy where a government, having seized power by revolution, has turned it over in such a democratic fashion.

Then President Bush announced that with this there would be a $300 million aid package, the embargo against Nicaragua would be lifted, sugar quotas would be adjusted, medical care would be sent and agricultural help would be given. I have said earlier that I thought that aid could be stretched out, but I agree with the other members of the Senate Appropriations Committee and with our distinguished chairman who felt as I did, felt it could be stretched out. We felt, in making this gesture, we backed the President of the United States in saying the $300 million would go to Nicaragua.

Having made that gesture, Mr. President, and not an insignificant gesture—this is, after all, almost as much aid as we have given Nicaragua in 40 years, total, cumulative—let us not say, by the way, we are going to pick your Cabinet for you, because after we pick the Cabinet, might we not also say we will tell you what laws to pass? After we tell you which laws to pass, maybe we should tell you which judges to appoint to enforce those laws. By the way, maybe your national assembly should meet only in these particular weeks. Maybe the makeup should be this way and maybe it should be that way.

Mr. President, we tried this in Nicaragua. We know the the local U.S. Marine commander was in effect the President of Nicaragua for many years. Do we want to go back to that way? I think not, not in our own hemipshere, not when we are telling other countries, the Soviet Union and others, to allow freedom to those they have dominated in the past.

We have to make our decision as a country. Do we accept the democracy and the elections in Nicaragua or not? If we accept them, then we make a further decision: Shall we send U.S. foreign aid or not? Our decision in sending U.S. foreign aid should be based on these kind of considerations: How will it be spent; will it be honestly accounted for; will there be waste and fraud? Those are legitimate questions to ask.

If we decide we want it as aid to the people, we make sure that it goes out to such things, as the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania mentioned yesterday, as planting. Should it go to emergency food? Should it go to energy uses? It is legitimate to talk about where we want it directed, if we are going to send it, and then the country can either accept it or not. But to say with it we will also tell you how to run your own government, who to appoint, who not to appoint, then I think we step over the line, way over the line. I oppose this amendment.

Many of us are not happy with the choice of the head of the armed services, but Mrs. Chamorro won the election and it has been the policy of this country and this Congress to say we want democratic elections in Nicaragua. We have had them. Now we accept it. We might not like everything that comes out of it. I cannot imagine anybody who can say they are totally satisfied with every decision made in a democracy. That is really the reason for it. You make the decision. You have the elections. People get elected. They decide where to go. If you do not like what they do, next election you vote them out. But this "colossus of the north" should not tell this poor little country how they are going to run their own democracy.

Because of that, I will oppose the amendment. I spoke because I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania was on his way over here. He is in the Chamber, so I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER].

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I oppose the pending amendment because I believe that it is vital that the United States send aid to the new Government of Nicaragua in order to promote democracy and give that newly elected Government and President Chamorro a chance to survive.

The issue raised, however, is a very troubling one because it is very much in the U.S. interest to see Humberto Ortega out of the army and out of control of the army. But we are faced with a difficult decision, recognizing the sovereignty of Nicaragua and recognizing the ultimate right of President Chamorro to make her decisions, and the option of withholding aid in such a circumstance.

All factors considered, I believe that we should not withhold aid.

Mr. President, I am concerned that the United States Senate may be partly responsible, perhaps responsible, although not intentionally so, for what has happened in Nicaragua. I expressed this on the floor very briefly yesterday, because at one time, President-elect Chamorro said she would not retain Humberto Ortega in the army. Then as events unfolded and U.S. aid was not forthcoming, her decision was changed. So she now will retain Humberto Ortega as head of the army.

It may well be, although this is not subject to any kind of proof, that she was forced to make accommodations within Nicaragua because she did not have the requisite strength with the kind of solid prompt backing that the United States should have given Nicaragua by appropriating this money and having it in hand before she took the office.

I had occasion to visit with President-elect Chamorro on April 6. At that time, I raised the concern which has been very aptly put before this body by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. I said to her, "Mrs. Chamorro, we are concerned in the United States, certainly in the U.S. Senate, and absolutely on the part of this Senator, with a retention of Humberto Ortega in the Army." I said, speaking for myself, We will not tell you what to do because that is your choice, but I think it is fair for us to express a view. And our view is that Humberto Ortega ought not to remain in the Army. A principle reason for that view is that in giving aid to Nicaragua, we do not want to see the Sandinistas retain military control so that they will export military weapons to El Salvador." So that we will be trading, so far as the United States perspective is concerned, one Central American war for another. No issue has torn apart the Seante in the 10 years that I have been here as has the Nicaraguan issue, with vote after vote after vote on aid to the Contras. I do not know of any issue that we have spent more time on in this body. I, for one, do not look forward to the future controversy on aid to El Salvador, if the guerrilla forces are strengthened by the Sandinistas.

So I made that presentation in a very soft way to Mrs. Chamorro. She did not make a commitment to me in the course of that meeting. And when I was exiting, the President-elect of Costa Rica came in to visit Mrs. Chamorro. At the conclusion of that meeting, as I later read in the press, Mrs. Chamorro had a press conference, and at that press conference she announced that Humberto Ortega would not be retained as commander of the army——

Mr. McCAIN. Will the Senator yield on that point for a clarification?

Mr. SPECTER. I was on a semicolon, but I do yield.

Mr. McCAIN. The announcement was, I might tell my friend, that Mr. Ortega would not remain as minister of defense. His present position, to which he is appointed, is the head of the armed forces. President Chamorro has assumed the position of minister of defense.

Mr. SPECTER. The distinguished Senator from Arizona is not correct on the facts. The facts are that she had earlier announced that Humberto Ortega would not be minister of defense. Then her son, who was her campaign manager, said in the media that the question was open as to whether he would remain as commander of the army. It was the position of commander of the army that she announced, as I was in midsentence in saying, that he would not be retained, at her press briefing on April 6. I was just about to read a communique which appeared on the wire services and put it into the RECORD on this precise point.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my presentation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. The text reads as follows:

Managua, 6 April. Nicaragua President-elect Violeta Chamorro today said that general Humberto Ortega, current defense minister and chief of the Armed Forces, will not be a part of her administration or continue in the army.

That he would not continue in the army. And that received considerable notoriety. Then, a few days ago, the question appeared in the media that there was some doubt as to what the status would be, that she might be in the process of changing her mind, and then in fact she has changed her mind.

The nagging question on my mind, Mr. President, is whether the failure of this body to act promptly and forcefully and show support for the newly elected Government of Nicaragua led President Chamorro to say, "Well, the check is supposed to be in the mail. But we know about checks in the mail, and I have to deal with the Sandinistas here. I have a lot of Senators coming down to visit me and they sing sweet songs but I need the money. We have a planting season and the planting season has to be accommodated by the end of April. And I have the Sandinistas. There are a lot of votes that Daniel Ortega has in the legislative body, and I may have to make an accommodation here to survive in this Government."

That is a very nagging consideration, because I know of no valid reason why this bill could not have been passed at least before the inauguration.

There is another factor, Mr. President. Had this amendment been put before the Senate in advance of her inauguration, and in advance of her assuming the powers of President, and in advance of her decision to put Humberto Ortega in as commander of the army, it would be a different position because in voting in favor of such a condition we would not have been trying to get her to change her mind. We would have been trying to influence her decision on a condition.

I am not saying that it would have been a right condition but tactically it would have been a very, very different position. So that we do not act after she has acted. We do not impose a condition which requires a change in a decision that she has made. It would be much easier for her to be in a position of thinking about it and hearing an expression of opinion by the Senate and then making the decision. She does not have to then say, "Well, I followed the direction of the Senate." She can say, "I heard them, but that was one of many factors, and it was not the reason for my decision." So I think now, if we are to enact this amendment, it would be pretty hard for her to change her mind for this aid. But I think this body has a certain degree of responsibility in the matter.

Yesterday, the distinguished Senator from Vermont and I—and he is on the floor at the moment—had a discussion about whether this aid would be forthcoming. I asked him a question. I said, can you personally vouch for the fact that no Senator among the other 98 will offer an amendment to delete the aid to Nicaragua? The question was not answered, and of course one Senator cannot vouch for what is on the mind of every other Senator. None of us can make a survey and be absolutely certain what is going to happen.

I did not anticipate the amendment by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, but the amendment is on the floor. Contrary to the assurances that the distinguished Senator from Vermont expressed yesterday, who knows what is going to happen in any amendment which is pending on this floor? I oppose the amendment, and I am hopeful it will not be accepted. But it may well do. So that anybody who has said heretofore that President Chamorro had every expectation, conclusively knew the money was coming, simply is not the case. Too many things happened between the start to finish, especially given the vagaries and complexities of action in the Senate.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPECTER. I will.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I began my remarks—and my distinguished friend was in the Chair at that time as well—by saying my purpose was to raise questions in the minds of Senators. I think the distinguished Presiding Officer will recall that. I will relieve the mind of the distinguished ranking Member of the Appropriations Committee. I am not going to pursue the amendment. I think I have sent a message by proposing it, and I am going to withdraw it.

I do not have the floor in my own right, and I cannot withdraw it until I do have the floor in my own right, but I would advise my friend from Pennsylvania that I agree with him. As always, he is eloquent, and even if I had not been persuaded at the outset not to press the amendment, he would have shaken me a little bit. I thank him. I thank him for his comments.

If I can get the floor, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I shall yield within 1 minute, but I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for his graciousness. No one in the Senate excels Senator HELMS on grace. As I frequently say, if there were two Senator HELMS in an elevator, no one would ever leave. You cannot leave after Senator HELMS leaves from an elevator. You cannot top him in graciousness on the Senate floor.

Substantively, I would conclude with just this comment on what Senator HELMS had commented earlier, and I agree with him, as he articulated, the crucial question is, Will Nicaragua be free? My answer is—and I am glad to have his concurrence—the chances are much better with the U.S. aid.

The second concern he raised is, Will this aid go to the Communists? I quite agree with him that it must not, but that at bottom the best way to see to it that Daniel Ortega does not become President again and the Sandinistas do not control Nicaragua is for this aid to go to Nicaragua and for the United States to support this democratically elected Government to make sure it succeeds. I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

CHAMORRO SAYS NO TO HUMBERTO ORTEGA IN HER CABINET

MANAGUA, April 5 (ACAN-EFE).—Nicaraguan President-elect Violeta Chamorro today said that General Humberto Ortega, current Defense Minister and Chief of the Armed Forces, will not be a part of her administration or continue in the army.

She also said that none of the nine commanders who make up the national directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN), in power since July 1979, will be a part of her government.

In brief remarks to ACAN-EFE at her residence, minutes after meeting with Costa Rican President-Elect Rafael Calderon, Chamorro said 49-year-old Gen. Humberto Ortega, brother of Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, will not remain in the Nicaraguan Armed Forces.

"He will not be a part of my government or remain in the army in any capacity," stressed Chamorro, who will take office on 25 April.

A protocol signed on 27 March by representatives of the incoming and outgoing governments calls for the high-ranking commanders of the armed forces to resign from party positions and stop being active militants of the FSLN.

At the beginning of this week, Gen. Ortega said at the Montelimar peace resort on Nicaragua's Pacific coast, during the seventh Central American summit, that he was willing to resign from his party's leadership in order to remain in the army as a professional military man.

Gen. Ortega's possible retention in the Nicaraguan Army has provoked a storm in Nicaragua, and there are even plans to hold a protest demonstration on 22 April.

The Workers Permanent Council (CPT), made up of four labor federations that supported Violeta Chamorro during the February elections, today announced a demonstration to protest the possibility that a top Sandinista official will remain in the new government.

Chamorro today met with the Costa Rican President-Elect who is on a Central American tour to strengthen diplomatic and cooperation ties.

Calderon, after meeting with current President Daniel Ortega also, said that the transition in Nicaragua is "making remarkable progress" and that "democracy is spreading" in this country.

The President-elect has already visited Guatemala, Belize, El Salvador, and Honduras. He will wrap up his tour in Panama tomorrow.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, again I thank the Senator for his gracious comments. I know no more gracious Senator than he. I withdraw the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1541) was withdrawn.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I will be very brief. My good friend from Pennsylvania, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, has once again raised the question whether the money will go to Mrs. Chamorro. This, of course, is a matter of judgment. His judgment apparently is—he can speak for himself—that $300 million may be in jeopardy. My judgment is the $300 million will go to Nicaragua. All I can say for those who are watching the debate who want to keep score they can wait to see whether the $300 million gets passed by the Congress or not. If it does, I am right. If it does not, he is right.

I yield the floor.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I do not know if $300 million will go to Nicaragua. I happen to share the view of the Senator from Vermont that it eventually will. But looking over a list of the many amendments that will be proposed, it may be some time.

I find it somewhat bizarre that on this very important legislation we have wetlands regulation amendments, drought disaster assistance, MX rail garrison amendments, housing development grants.

When are we going to be able to move on this? I do not think it does this body great credit when we have a bill which clearly is a dire emergency supplemental to Christmas tree the bill to such a degree that not only is the bill in danger but it also loses a great deal of its meaning. At least, we ought to change the title of the bill. I can think of some rather colorful titles, but I will reserve those depictions.

I see my dear friend, the revered chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who yesterday admonished me to lay on Macduff, a quote from "McBeth." My response in all due respect to him is once more into the breach, dear friends, or fill up the gap with our English dead because we do intend to pursue the line-item veto.

Mr. President, I also rise to thank my friend from North Carolina for withdrawing his amendment. I think it would have been a mistake. I do, however, share his deep and sincere and informed concern about the appointment of Humberto Ortega as the head of the Nicaraguan Army. I have been a consistent and devoted critic of the two Ortega brothers for a long time.

I was flattered upon my arrival in Nicaragua recently for the President Chamorro inauguration to note that I was described in Barricada, the Sandinista newspaper, as the ultra-right-wing reactionary Senator from Arizona. That was one of the greatest compliments that the Sandinistas have paid to me amongst the many that they have bestowed on me in past years.

Mr. President, the fact is Mrs. Chamorro was elected. She was elected by the people of Nicaragua, not by the United States Senate, and not by the American people. One of Mrs. Chamorro's greatest vulnerabilities is the accusation by the Sandinistas that she is the puppet of the United States who will implement policies that are not necessarily in the interests of the Nicaraguan people—that she is at the beck and call of the United States Government.

As I said, I strongly disagree with Mrs. Chamorro's decision. But the fact is Nicaragua remains a sovereign nation. It has just experienced, I am overjoyed, to repeat, a free and fair election. She is the elected head of government and, in my view, she has every right to choose whoever she wants.

I am very concerned though, Mr. President, about the impact of this decision. I think it may cause severe problems. It may cause problems to the Contras. It may interfere with their desire to reintegrate into Nicaraguan society.

I am concerned about the dismantlement of the Sandinista army. I am concerned about a lot of issues that this raises as to who is influencing the new President.

But I would like to remind my colleagues that when the ARENA won the last elections in El Salvador, there were some Members who wanted to reduce assistance or abridge our involvement in El Salvador because of their displeasure at the ascendency of the ARENA Party in El Salvador.

I resisted those efforts at that time as I do this effort today. I think that what was correct in El Salvador when a fair and free and fair election was held is also appropriate in Nicaragua today. Again, I would like to express my appreciation to the Senator from North Carolina, not only for his withdrawal of this amendment, but for his continued advocacy and lifelong dedication to democracy and freedom throughout the world, especially for his long and deep involvement in Central America.

So I hope we can move forward with this package. I was in Nicaragua along with many of my colleagues. They wonder whether the United States is willing only to help arm people and not willing to help provide the economic wherewithal necessary to restore an economy of a country where tragically the per capita income has fallen below that of Haiti.

I think we need to move forward with this aid package. I hope we can get this done as rapidly as possible.

I yield the floor.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 25, LINES 17-21

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I hope now the Senators are prepared to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, 1 minute.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the amendment and within 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Very briefly, Mr. President, I just want to commend my colleague from Arizona for his comments on this matter. He has said it very well. The Chamorro government was elected February 25. They are putting together a government and certainly they are going to make decisions which all of us are going to have trouble with from time to time as we observe. But the fact is they have the right to chose the cabinet, Mrs. Chamorro and the people who serve with her. I do not know if she made a right or wrong decision. She could make a good case one way or the other. Time will tell. It may in fact have been a brilliant decision in terms of trying to reach and bring into her government the opposition of the people she fought with the most.

So I regret deeply the amendment of Senator from North Carolina. I think it would be tremendously harmful. It is somewhat ironic that, in the case of Chile where President Aylwin has been recently elected, he has no choice about his defense minister. General Pinochet will be the head of the Chilean Armed Forces because there he cannot be removed.

I do not find anyone standing up suggesting we ought to withhold aid to Chile because General Pinochet is going to be running the armed forces. I find it is somewhat inconsistent that we are going to cut off all aid to Nicaragua, this new government, after the years of debate because Mrs. Chamorro makes a choice we do not like.

So my hope would be that this amendment would be resoundingly defeated and send a very important message that we do not tolerate this kind of approach in dealing with newly elected democratic governments.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment has been withdrawn. The Senate is about to vote on the committee amendment. I think we ought to wake this place up a little bit around here. This is Friday. It is 10 minutes after 11 o'clock. We have been talking about an amendment that has been withdrawn.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the committee amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So the result was announced—yeas 96, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 67 Leg.]

So the committee amendment on page 25, lines 17 to 21, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 57, LINE 5 THROUGH LINE 10

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I call up an amendment to the committee amendment that is presently pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 5, insert new language as follows:

SEC. 312. Section 117 of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 1990 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 117. None of the Federal funds provided in this Act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term.".

AMENDMENT NO. 1542 TO THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 57, LINE 5 THROUGH LINE 10

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I request the amendment to the pending amendment which I have at the desk be read. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington, [Mr. ADAMS] proposes an amendment numbered 1542 to the committee amendment:

On page 57 at line 10 strike the first period and insert the following: "Provided, That District of Columbia shall cause a study to be conducted on the need, in the District of Columbia, for a system of early childhood educational development programs which address the needs of pre-school and school-age children, and of working parents and parents on welfare seeking work.".

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will be very brief because this is a committee amendment that was adopted in the Appropriations Committee on a voice vote. What the committee amendment does, and I hope everyone here will support it, is to state that no Federal funds provided in this act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be in danger if the fetus were carried to term. It is an amendment to allow use of local funds, as in every State and every jurisdiction; to allow them to make their rules as to how they will spend their local funds.

I state to my colleagues there are segregated bank accounts that account for this. This is a dire emergency for the people of this area. It is a committee amendment. I hope it will be adopted. It is germane to the language in the bill, and I am very familiar with this particular provision on page 36, which provides for HCFA program management.

This was a bill originally sponsored by Senator MIKULSKI and myself for the regulation of clinical laboratories, and in particular it started because Pap smears and other examinations of women patients were being improperly performed throughout the United States. This particular act, and the funds that are in it, are the only way by which you can deterine pregnancy, you can determine the status of the fetus, you can determine whether or not a woman is in a position of having her life endangered.

So the amendment I have offered, and which was adopted by the Appropriations Committee, is not only relevant, it is relevant to the legislation that was put in by the House. This is House language on page 36. We have placed in the bill language that is relevant to the language in the House bill and it is also germane. The tests are that both be legislated, which they are, and that both be conceivably germane, and this is more than conceivably germane; it is an amendment that deals with clinical laboratories, the testing, and I hope my colleagues will adopt this committee amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I strongly support the initiative of the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], the chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, to repeal the unfortunate restriction that Congress permitted to be enacted on last year's District of Columbia appropriation bill.

I want to congratulate the Senator from Washington for his efforts to correct the great injustice that we have allowed to be inflicted upon the residents of the District of Columbia—citizens of the United States who are denied representation in the Congress of the United States.

As a result of the rider attached to the fiscal year 1990 appropriations bill, the government of the District of Columbia is the only local elected body in this country which has been denied the right, by an act of Congress, to provide local, non-Federal funds to help pay for abortion services for low-income, indigent women.

During the hearings on this measure last year, local health organizations describe indigent women, like one HIV-positive woman, who were suffering as a result of this cruel policy. They describe the circumstances which forced indigent women to delay obtaining an abortion until it became more costly and more dangerous because public institutions were barred from providing them.

This provision should never have been enacted and should be promptly repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair very much. Let me take just a moment, if I may, to explain the events that are now transpiring.

This is a replay of what happened last year and is going to result in a veto by the President of the United States of this bill. He has already made that clear. So we will delay and take up the time of Senators this day. If you want to add 4 or 5 hours to your working day today and miss your planes, that is up to you.

Shortly, I am going to raise a point of order under rule XVI of the Senate that the abortion language, which is contained on page 57 of the bill, lines 5 through 10, I will say to the distinguished Parliamentarian.

I tried to do my homework on this. I have consulted with the Parliamentarian both as to whether the point of order will lie and the germaneness aspect. Someone on the other side may appeal the ruling of the chair and there will go the tin soldiers marching up and down again in what is going to be an exercise in futility insofar as the bill with this provision in it escaping Presidential veto. Whatever suits the Senators suits me.

So, Mr. President, I make the point of order that the pending committee amendment to which I just referred and which my good friend BROCK ADAMS proposes to amend with a second-degree amendment, is legislation on an appropriations bill in violation of rule XVI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I raise defense of germaneness stating the House has opened the door to legislation by incorporating a provision on page 36 at line 9 dealing with health care financing. The committee amendment, likewise, deals with the restriction on financing of health care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian has advised the Chair that the threshold test has not been met. The Chair does not think the amendment at issue is conceivably germane to the proffered House language.

Mr. ADAMS. The Chair has agreed the provision on page 36 is arguably legislation, as I understand it, and, therefore, I appeal the ruling of the Chair that its interpretation on germaneness, of what is conceivably germane, is too narrow in this instance, and I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is this on the point of order? Otherwise, there is no debate.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent I may proceed for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Two minutes?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, but I ask unanimous consent at the same time that I be accorded an equal 2 minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the unanimous-consent request, as amended, is agreed to.

The Republican leader is recognized for a period of 2 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Ohio. I want to try to get back to what we were supposed to do out here on this particular legislation.

This was an urgent request by the President of the United States for emergency aid to Panama and Nicaragua. We can now see abortion is involved. We are going to have the death penalty. We are going to have some other amendments that are not particularly relevant to the subject matter. I say to my colleagues on both sides, I think it is the chairman's intention to finish this bill today, if possible. We never know what is possible in the Senate.

So I want to encourage my colleagues to try to be as cooperative as we can. This is an important issue. I do not deny that. But this is not the only piece of legislation where we are going to have an opportunity to raise this question.

I just say, to get back to the original purpose, if we want to help the Panamanians and Nicaraguans who have been looking forward to our assistance, let us try to move on and dispose of some of these matters. If we can dispose of this, we can eliminate about four, five, six, or seven amendments on this side and then we can go back and get an agreement on the total number of amendments, maybe finish this bill today and then we can raise these very important issues at a later time. I do not know how many people want to debate the death penalty today on this bill. I do not, but it is going to happen. I hope we can reserve any debate on abortion and any action on abortion until some later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] is recognized pursuant to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think there is merit to what the Senator from Kansas is saying, the minority leader, that on these appropriations bills, supplemental appropriations bills we get into a host of different areas. I am concerned that the thrust, with respect to the question of germaneness, will be directed at the issue of the District of Columbia and its concern for its women in need of abortion and that that same thrust and that same effort will not be raised in terms of the issue of capital punishment.

Mr. DOLE. It will be raised.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The Senator from Kansas indicates that it will be. I think that is reassuring. I hope that at some point the U.S. Senate will get to a point where when we have an appropriations bill, we stay on appropriations issue, period. I will never forget when Senator Magnuson would come to this committee and come to the floor and say, "Why is it every time I have a bill on the floor, I have abortion, I get this issue, that issue, but nobody wants to talk about the subjects that are in the bills themselves?"

I understand that point of view, but too often I find that we make a rule going one way for some issues and not the same way with respect to other issues. I think that if there were some rule to take all the stuff out, I would have no difficulty with it. But I am very concerned that my friend from North Carolina will be there supporting a capital punishment amendment and will not be nearly as worried about the germaneness issue and will be there with respect to some other issues as well.

Under those circumstances, I intend to support the Senator from Washington. But if he is defeated, then I hope that will set a pattern for the defeat of all allegedly nongermane amendments.

Mr. HELMS. Parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DOLE. I am willing to make that pledge if we get the same treatment on both issues. We do not want to treat one issue one way and another issue another way. I agree they ought to be treated alike. I hope we can resolve it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS].

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I learn something new early day. Now I know a point of order is not debatable, but can the Parliamentation, through the Chair, inform the Senator from North Carolina where there is a precedent that germaneness is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under rule XVI, questions of germaneness are to be submitted to the Senator without debate.

Presently, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the question before us is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. HELMS. The Chair is absolutely correct. I was referring to an appeal. When was there a precedent that an appeal of a ruling of the Chair was not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that appeals from nondebatable questions of germaneness are also not subject to debate.

Mr. HELMS. But germaneness has not been submitted, I say to my friend in the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the body is a question that derives from an assertion of germaneness or a lack thereof.

Mr. HELMS. Let me disagree agreeably on that, and we will not take up the time of the Senate. I will continue my education on germaneness and appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REID). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—3

Domenici	Inouye	Riegle

So, the ruling of the Chair was overturned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair is not sustained. The threshold has been established. The Chair now submits to the Senate whether the amendment is germane.

Mr. HELMS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be excused from attendance in the Senate after 3 o'clock today until the commencement of business on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate can proceed with business. I understand that the quorum call may last an hour. I hope that will not be the case. There is much business to be done on this bill. I hope that we would get on with the vote on germaneness.

I have to say that I am very supportive of the substance of the committee amendment. I voted to uphold the Chair. It was a difficult vote for me, but I was the one who established the precedent several years ago requiring House legislation in the appropriation bill to which an amendment could be germane. I am not going to argue that point here. I am simply saying that I voted to uphold the Chair. I do not quarrel with anyone who voted otherwise. But I hope, now that that matter has been decided by the Senate, that we will not have an hour-long quorum.

I urge that we let the Senate get on with its business. The question of germaneness has been raised. There is no time for debate on that, and I am abusing the rules of the Senate in saying what I am. I have said enough, and I shall sit down.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicated earlier I wanted to be helpful to the leadership to try to expedite this bill, but apparently the leadershp did not want to expedite the bill. If we are going to try to change some minds, we need a little time in a quorum call. If we want to get into legislating on an appropriation bill, and there is no time agreement now, we can dream up a lot of things to do.

But the bottom line is that this is supposed to be an urgent supplemental for Panama and Nicaragua. That has been forgotten now, because we want to debate abortion all day and the death penalty for a day or two, and then something else. We need some time to convince some of our colleagues on this side to join us to try to expedite the completion of this bill.

We have a responsibility to the President of the United States on this side of the aisle. I understand there is no responsibility on the other side to the President's request. We feel strongly that we have waited long enough for final action on this bill. If we are going to have to get into all these different amendments, we are going to be here in the next week sometime.

We are trying to accommodate the leadership, and maybe we can do that if we have enough time to talk to some of our colleagues on this side, to encourage them that this is not a vote on the issue of abortion; this is a vote on trying to expedite this bill. There will be plenty of time to debate abortion and the death penalty and some of the other issues that will be coming up. So, unless the majority leader wishes to speak, I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum so we can try to go to work before we have another vote the same as the last vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I share the view of my colleagues wanting to see prompt action on this bill.

The distinguished Republican leader indicated that there was concern on that side for the President's wish to act on this bill, and referred to the large number of amendments. Last night when I read the list off, there were about 60 amendments, and my recollection is about 30 of them were Republican amendments; about 30 were Democratic amendments.

I do not think either side has displayed any restraint in suggesting amendments to be offered that constitute legislating on an appropriations bill or that raise controversial matters.

I hope that we can proceed to final action on this bill as soon as possible. I once held out what has obviously been proven to be a vain hope that we could finish it by late last night. It is becoming increasingly likely that we are going to go late tonight and beyond.

I have no objection to a period of time that the distinguished Republican leader wishes to consult with his colleagues. I would like to have some indication of a specific timeframe on it so that we know that it is not merely a dilatory tactic to prevent action on the bill, because I know the Republican leader himself has stated he wants to move on the bill.

That is obviously what we want to do, and we want to proceed and continue to vote on amendments as they come up. If that means we have to vote on several amendments with respect to the subject of abortion, perhaps the best thing to do is go ahead and have those amendments and have the votes on them, and dispose of it in that way.

But I am pleased to accommodate whatever reasonable request the Republican leader may have in that regard.

Mr. DOLE. If the majority leader will yield, it just seemed to me it is in our mutual interest to complete action on this bill. We have a lot of different things we have to do. We are prepared on this side to try to convince one or two of our colleagues to sustain the Chair.

A lot of the amendments on this side are going to disappear if the Chair is sustained. I guess a good third of the amendments would go very quickly. Once the Chair is sustained on legislation on an appropriations bill, I am certain that that might set a precedent for most of the other amendments.

But in any event, if we want to spend the rest of the day and tonight arguing over abortion, we can spend the rest of the day and night.

The point I want to make again is the President would like us to pass this emergency aid bill. He wanted that a week ago, and he wanted it 2 weeks ago. But first we had to get a reauthorization. Then we had to get the CBI bill. Then we had to dispose of child care. Now we have to debate abortion and the death penalty and who knows what else before the day is out. We are prepared to do that. There is some indication maybe if we do not finish the bill, it may end up on the calendar next week. So we are not going to complete action on this bill, unless the leadership joins together and says, OK, let us finish the bill. Let us sustain the Chair.

Maybe, if I can persuade three Republicans who did not vote to sustain the Chair, to sustain the Chair, unless there were some other switches, that would let us proceed with the bill. So we need a little time to do that.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. I just would like to make one comment in response. It is not new but it appears to be increasingly the approach that if one does not get his or her way on a particular provision, then there will be a large number of amendments to delay action on a bill.

Obviously, any Senator has that right, in any event. But I must say that if we begin to accede to that approach, then of course the possibilities for all Senators are limitless. If Senators begin to sense that in order to get your way here, you make clear that if you do not get your way, you are going to indefinitely delay and offer an unlimited number of amendments to any pending bill, that will then become not an occasional tactic, but a regular and daily tactic. We will face it every time. It will not be one Senator or two Senators or three Senators; it will be 100 Senators.

So insofar as I am concerned, I hope we can resolve this. I have been trying very hard to persuade our colleagues, with little success so far, not to offer amendments, particularly not to offer amendments that are going to generate a lot of lengthy controversy and delay.

But I must say, at the same time, I do not accept the approach that says that if a particular position does not prevail, then there is going to be 1, 2, 20, 30 amendments. Anybody has that right, in any event. So I hope we can resolve it. I hope the Senator is successful.

But whether or not a delay ensues I do not think it ought to be a controlling factor in terms of what our decision is.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator from Maine yield me just 1 minute?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I concur with the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished Republican leader that we must move forward.

As chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee on Appropriations, I hope that the impression will not be left here that only one side of the aisle feels a sense of responsibility in supporting the President on his foreign aid request.

We spent a great deal of time on both sides of the aisle to help the President on his foreign aid request. I had some disagreements with the specific amounts and the way it is going to be spent, but it is clear from both the committee and on the floor that the majority of the Senate feels differently.

I am prepared immediately to vote on final action to bring about the foreign aid request that the Administration now supports, the $300 million for Nicaragua, and the $420 million for Panama. I just hope that the RECORD is very clear that there is not a sense of responsibility for the President's foreign aid package only on one side of the aisle. I do not think that was intentionally made, but that impression might have been left.

There are a great deal of Senators on both sides of the aisle who are, of course, united in trying to have a successful foreign policy in this country and help it to be successful.

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield to me for 30 seconds?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, so that Senators 50 years from now will not labor under the misunderstanding that when the question of germaneness is raised that it is a debatable question, I ask unanimous consent that debate be allowed to continue for another 5 minutes, equally divided between the two leaders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like to make a suggestion. I accept and I think it is appropriate the Republican leader's request that he have a period of time to talk with Senators to see if he could persuade some to switch their votes and dispose of this matter. He also indicated he wants to move forward on the bill, which we all want to do.

May I suggest that we lay this committee amendment aside for a specific period of time, and then take up the next committee amendment so that during that consideration, the Senator could be engaging in these discussions and we could simultaneously be making progress on the bill itself. That would enable us to proceed in that fashion.

No one would be prejudiced on this. It would be for a period of time, or until we dispose of the next committee amendment. Then we can come back to this amendment. In the meantime, we could be doing both things at one time, so we are not wasting time.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection to that procedure. However, I believe the procedure more correctly to be followed—and I do object to it being put over unless we have the vote on germaneness which ordinarily, as the President pro tempore has pointed out, is automatic. It follows with no debate.

The vote occurs on germaneness now, and then, if the majority leader and the minority leader wish to set this amendment aside until a latter time and then at that point to set a time limit on it, I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MITCHELL. But the distinguished Republican leader wants the time prior to the vote on germaneness, so if the Senator would permit, we could take up the other committee amendment. The Senator from Washington is not prejudiced in any way.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, the Senator from Washington is prejudiced by that in that it is an effort, of course, to undo the vote that has just occurred, and that is absolute prejudice to the Senator from Washington, as much as could be.

Therefore, I was calling for the regular order as the President pro tempore was; that we have the immediate vote on germaneness as under the precedents you do. Once the opinion of the Chair has occurred, there is no debate, there is an immediate vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will yield, the distinguished Republican leader is entitled to request a quorum call prior thereto.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what he was indicating he was going to do.

Mr. ADAMS. He can establish a quorum call. In fact, I might say to the majority leader, it used to be the Allen rule—it could be used by ADAMS—put in a quorum call, answer to your name, and tie the thing up forever. I never used that rule here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the suggestion made by the majority leader is the correct one, which is we pass this issue, we put it in the bill. Then, if they wish to have a series of abortion votes we will vote them one, two, three, four, five, very quickly and move on.

We did not delay this bill. This was in the original appropriations bill. They delayed the objections of the other side. We have been trying to get to this. We just want to have a vote on it and, after we have had the vote, proceed on. If they want to vote four times on it, we would agree to quick time limits to vote on them immediately, Mr. President, so we could expedite the bill for the majority leader.

But I did want to point out this is prejudicial to do it this way. And, yes, I think our people are believers and will stay where they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the two leaders that both leaders this morning reserved their time, which is an appropriate use at this time.

Mr. DOLE. I would like to say one more word. I do not need any more time, and I know this is an important issue to the Senator from Washington. I have a feeling we are going to be able to address it later on, if not next week, the following week, whenever.

But I indicate there were certain promises made, at least indications made to the President of Panama, who will be here to see the leadership next Monday or Tuesday, I guess it is, and to Mrs. Chamorro, who was inaugurated on Wednesday, that we were moving with dispatch so we could get some aid to those two countries. We have had the debate on whether or not it should be reduced. I am just trying to find a way to make certain we can complete action on the bill.

I think it is in our mutual interest—rather than to try to sustain one controversial issue, rather than say we shoot now for another controversial issue—just do away with this issue right now. The issue is aid to Panama and Nicaragua plus some related matters that are important to the chairman of the committee and the ranking member and others. So I hope some on the other side will reconsider their vote. This is not a vote on the issue; this is a vote on sustaining the Chair, in this case on the issue of germaneness.

One way to expedite it would be to find four votes somewhere. I am going to do the best I can in the next few minutes to do that. If we cannot, we will vote.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the Republican leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I will be happy to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I know the majority leader wanted to speak. I do not wish to interpose myself, but I wanted to speak before we moved on to something else, Mr. President. I want to remind my colleagues that the President—the White House, I should say—has stated unequivocally and adamantly this bill will be vetoed if the Adams language remains when it reaches the President's desk. So all the effort to be put into this bill in the next day or two or three is almost certain to be wasted if the Adams language remains.

The second point I want to make is this. The majority leader understandably expressed regret at finding himself in the situation where, because one thing happened, he finds himself faced with four or five amendments which otherwise would not be offered. And I can understand that. But, the suggestion seems to be that those who are prepared to offer those additional amendments, and I am one, are the unreasonable parties when, in fact, the situation is this: The Adams language is so lacking in germaneness, so utterly lacking in germaneness, that even the Chair, which after all is in the hands of the Democrats, advised by the Parliamentarian, who, after all, is hired by the Democrats, refused to put the question of germaneness to the body. The Adams language is so utterly lacking in germaneness, the Chair refused to put it to the body. So, then an appeal from that ruling was raised and here we are.

It seems to me the unreasonableness is on the part of those who insist it is germane when even the Chair will not put it to the body. So we do not accept the onus one bit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from New Hampshire, he has made a statement that creates an unfortunate and inaccurate implication. When the Senator from New Hampshire says, "after all, the Parliamentarian is hired by the Democrats," he is obviously seeking to create an implication that the Parliamentarian's rulings are such as to favor the Democrats. That is inaccurate and unfair. I have been majority leader for a year and a half, and I have never once on any occasion of any kind sought to influence the Parliamentarian on any ruling.

I told the Parliamentarian when I became the majority leader that I expected one thing and only one thing of the Parliamentarian. That is that each and every ruling made by the Parliamentarian should be made squarely on the merits. It is not the responsibility nor the role of the Parliamentarian to be involved in political determinations or to weigh political factors in any way. I have tried very hard to conduct this Senate in a very fair and balanced way for all concerned, and I want the Senate to know that any implication that the rulings made by the Parliamentarian have been influenced because the Democrats are in the majority of this body is most unfortunate, most inaccurate, and most unfair.

I say to the Senator from New Hampshire and all the Members of the Senate, as long as I am majority leader that will be the case. I think it has been unfortunate that in the past there have been circumstances where that implication has been created, but that is not now the case, and it is my hope that, if nothing else I accomplish in this job, it is to depoliticize the office of the Parliamentarian and the rulings of the Parliamentarian.

I just want that to be clear so there is no implication whatsoever that, on this or any other ruling of any kind, there has been any effort to introduce that.

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield to me on this point?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Apostle Paul said, "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man."

I hope that my speech will be with grace and seasoned with salt.

Mr. President, the Parliamentarian does not rule; he advises the Chair. It is the Chair that rules.

We all seek the advice of the Parliamentarian, but it is not the Parliamentarian that rules. And when we imply that the Parliamentarian, through the Chair, is ruling on a question of order, we are implying that the Chair is abusing its position as well.

I happen, by the grace of God and the support of my colleagues here, to be the President pro tempore of the Senate. And I can walk up right now and take that chair if I wish to do it, and do that against anyone other than the Vice President of the United States. But I will never be guided by the Parliamentarian if I think that Parliamentarian is wrong and if I am in that Chair. But I also must recognize that, for the Parliamentarian, his is a full-time business. And I must concede, to begin with, that I should expect that he knows more about the rules and precedents than I do.

But if there is ever a time that I think he is wrong, then I am going to rule the other way if I am in that chair. If the Senate wants to overrule the Chair, then it may do so. But that Parliamentarian has never been partisan in his advice to the Chair. I join with the majority leader in saying that is an implication that ought not to be left to stand.

When I became majority leader at the beginning of the 100th Congress, I put that Parliamentarian in that position, and I said to him, "You call it as it is." And I never attempted to impose my opinion on that Parliamentarian. If I differ with him, I can say so here on the floor, if I differ with the Chair's ruling. But that Parliamentarian would have to say, as he would have to say in the case of Senator MITCHELL, that neither of these two majority leaders, Senator BYRD when he was majority leader, or Senator MITCHELL who is now majority leader, has ever sought to tell him that he must advise the Chair this way or must advise the Chair another way.

When we get to the point that we imply that the Parliamentarian is being partisan—he cannot speak to the Senate; he cannot defend himself—I think we ought to be a little more careful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is advised that the unanimous-consent time has expired and the time of the Democratic leader has expired. The Republican leader has 4 minutes 56 seconds left.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will close by saying I voted as the Senator from New Hampshire voted. I hope we will not continue this tone of debate further. Let the Parliamentarian rest and let us get on with other things. The Parliamentarian is entitled to be defended and so is the majority leader.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Republican leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I have about 4 minutes left on leader's time. I think we are going to get an agreement to vote at 1:30. That will give my colleagues who want to speak on other matters an opportunity to speak.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the majority leader is correct. I apologize to him and to the Parliamentarian. In the year and a half he has been majority leader, I see no evidence whatever of any duress applied to the occupant of the chair or the Parliamentarian. But in my 12 years I have, may I say. I will not go further than that. But I do apologize to the majority leader and to the Parliamentarian and retract that portion of my statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to thank my colleague from New Hampshire. It is a gracious statement.

Mr. GRAMM. I wonder if the leader will yield on his time.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have apparently reached an agreement on a vote at 1:30 on the germaneness. Could we get that agreement and then there would be time for other Senators? There will be 45 minutes when Senators may address the Senate. May I inquire of the Republican leader and the Senator from Washington if that will be agreeable?

Mr. DOLE. It is agreeable to me.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the question of germaneness on the committee amendment occur at 1:30 p.m. and that the time between now and then be available for debate on the bill by any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has propounded a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object, and I have no intention to object, it is my understanding that at 1:30, we go to a vote, no quorum calls, no other intervening business and it is at that point, 1:30, there is a vote. Is that the understanding of the Republican leader?

Mr. DOLE. At 1:30. There may be a quorum call between now and 1:30.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I understand that.

Mr. BYRD. Will the distinguished majority leader yield? There might be some items we can take care of. I hope we will allow some intervening business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the majority leader and those Senators present that there would have to be specific consent to prevent a quorum call during the 45 minute period or even at 1:30.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope Senators will let us proceed with intervening business.

Mr. DOLE. We intend to vote at 1:30. If somebody rushes in here——

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I think we have to rely on good faith of Senators here. Senator DOLE has indicated his intention to have a vote at 1:30.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the unanimous consent include a quorum call not be in order?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I so amend my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the unanimous-consent request propounded by the majority leader. Is there any objections? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I merely want to thank my colleagues and hope that we will be able to work our way out of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

LITHUANIA: CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, sometime ago we heard Vaclav Havel, whose words took wing and touched the hearts of his countrymen long before he was let out of prison. He addressed a joint session of Congress, and during that session how many times did all of us rise to applaud his words. He thanked the United States for having contributed to the salvation of the Europeans for a third time. He said, "You have helped us survive until today." And of the United States he said: "It became the most powerful nation on Earth, and it understood the responsibility that flowed from this."

I mention this in connection with the debate that continues to take place about Lithuania. Today, the French and the Germans advise the Lithuanian people to relax and to finish out their incarceration time quietly. I would like to say that our policy pertaining to Lithuania has been that we have always stated that its incorporation in the Soviet Union has been an illegal act; that we favor self-determination for the Lithuanian people and that we are fundamentally opposed to use of force by the Soviet Union to suppress dissent in that country.

There are tanks in Vilnius, people being beaten, they have been put on a starvation diet, while the eyes of the world, the free world, turn away. We find ourselves in a position that when Mikhail Gorbachev sneezes, the world catches pneumonia. The perception is his success and survival determines the future of freedom, possibly the fate of the world.

Mikhail Gorbachev is a very important leader. He may even be, as Time magazine indicated, the dominant man of the decade. But the vicissitudes of life and, indeed, of politics itself render no man or woman indispensable.

Mr. President, there are two views about Mikhail Gorbachev. There is the liberal view, on the one hand, that we must help him in every way because he is presiding over the democratization of the Soviet Union. There is also the conservative view that we must help him in every way because he is presiding over the disintegration of the Soviet Union.

Unfortunately, the Lithuanian people are caught in the middle of this ideological matrimony. They want out of a union they never wanted into. They are told that they must abide by the Soviet Constitution. Mr. President, three countries were kidnaped in 1940. They have been held hostage for 50 years and are now told by the free world that they are bound by the law of the kidnapers.

What do we say about the American citizens who are held hostage by Moslem kidnapers? Are they bound by the laws of the Islamic Jihad?

Conservatives may be accused of trying to use this as an excuse to sabotage the emerging relationship of a kinder, gentler Soviet Union or take us back to the cold war. First, let me suggest that I absolutely favor the arms control negotiation process underway. I favor a START agreement, a CFE agreement, a chemical weapons treaty, a peaceful nuclear explosion treaty, a threshold test ban treaty. I do not want to see them undermined. I am not suggesting anyone go to war over Lithuania, nor even that we go to the wall over Lithuania.

What I am suggesting is we need not go overboard in embracing Mikhail Gorbachev at the very moment that he is engaged in the brutal suppression of a people who want out of their incarceration. At a minimum, we ought to ask the United Nations to take up the issue of whether a nation that is illegally forced into a union is bound by that union's laws.

Second, we ought to demand that the lights of the camera that never blinks be turned back on. In China we saw a solitary, faceless, young man stop an entire column of tanks and force them to move from side to side. In that moment, he froze history itself. It was captured on film for all of us to see. Yet, when Mikhail Gorbachev said no press allowed in Lithuania, the press folded up; it moved out without a whimper much less a bang.

Mr. President, Larry Hughes, who is the chairman of the Hearst Trade Group and former president of William Morrow, was honored recently and he made a speech about the role of book publisher in helping to preserve intellectual freedom at a time of repression. I would like to read very quickly his words.

He said:

My own part has been almost entirely confined to human rights as it has dealt with books, writers and publishers. And over the years I have often wondered what good our obviously small and seemingly inadequate protests really did.

Letters, telegrams, newspaper or magazine articles urging the freeing of those writers and publishers jailed and/or tortured for their writings or publications seemed so useless against the high red brick walls of the Kremlin or against the confident heartless governments of dozens of totalitarian countries around the globe.

And yet today we see a playwright who was in jail six months ago now presiding as president of Czechoslovakia. We see Lech Walesa preparing to run for the presidency of Poland. We mourn the loss of Andre Sakharov but rejoice that at the time of his death he was helping to structure a new constitution for his country. Andrei Plesu, a Rumanian writer, who under the old regime was in real need of our help, is now Minister of Culture of his country.

How did this all happen? It happened not because of any one single event or person. It happened because of many things and many people—not because of a thousand points of light but because of a thousand points of pressure—or, if you like, a hundred thousand points of pressure.

But I urge all of us not to relax but to keep up the pressure, indeed to increase it. The old power structures didn't give up or bend because they wanted to. They were forced to do so under pressure. The jailers didn't unlock the cell doors of Jacob O. Timmerman or Natan Sharansky or Nelson Mandela just to be Mr. Nice Guys. The doors sprung open because of unrelenting pressure from many sources and many people. And so I like to think that all the letters, articles, phone calls to government officials both here at home and to our embassies abroad and to foreign powers both friendly and unfriendly—all the fund raising for book shows like America Through American Eyes—all of those thousand little things combined with many, many other organizations and individuals, all helped to build up a head of pressure so strong that the red bricks split and the walls came tumbling down and "human rights" which was once just a phrase has become a truly serious cause for many book writers and book publishers.

Mr. President, it is not the cause of book writers and publishers. It is the cause of Members of this Senate and Members of the House and, indeed, the administration to keep the points of pressure on and to help allow the Lithuanian people to have self-determination and freedom that they no longer enjoy.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with consideration of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may call up an amendment by Mr. LEVIN and Mr. PELL which has been agreed to on both sides and can be accepted and adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator's request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1543

(Purpose: To ensure Panamanian cooperation combating drug money laundering)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. LEVIN for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. HARKIN, proposes an amendment numbered 1543.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let the amendment be read so that the Senate will know what it is.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following: "Provided further, That no more than 80 percent of the funds for Panama may be provided unless the conditions set forth in paragraphs (1) through (4) of section 2(b) of S. 2364 of the One Hundredth and First Congress (as passed the Senate on April 5, 1990) are met.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this amendment reaffirms the Senate's intent to combat international drug traffickers. It reiterates our intention to achieve the cooperation of the Endara government in battling international drug traffickers and money laundering of illicit drug money.

On April 5, the Senate passed the authorization for this supplemental appropriation. In that legislation, we approved the following:

It is the policy of the United States to support the efforts of the Government of Panama to ensure that abuses of Panama's private and public institutions by drug traffickers and money launderers will not again be permitted to occur.

Mr. President, this amendment references the already-passed language from the April 5, 1990, authorization, and restates our intention to eliminate the ability for international drug traffickers to launder their dirty and corrupt money. This language provides a specific mechanism for the United States to achieve that universally-desired goal.

I'd like to thank the floor managers of the bill. This amendment will facilitate improved cooperation between the United States and Panama to eradicate money laundering and drug trafficking.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment has been agreed to on both sides, and I am prepared to accept it on this side and hope that the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1543) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if my colleagues will bear with me, I have about 5 to 6 amendments that can be disposed of really in a matter of a minute. Let me describe what I will be presenting. One will be a technical correction so that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], myself, and others on Armenia relief can be put in the right place in the bill; a couple other technical amendments of that nature; an Armstrong refugee amendment, a Hatch amendment on Indian drug funding, a Kennedy and others, amendment on Chile, aid for the poor in Chile. All of these have been cleared. I tell you that just as a matter of description and I will now make the appropriate request.

I ask unanimous consent that the language of amendment 1525 agreed to earlier be inserted in the bill on page 29, after line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1544

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send a technical amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator KASTEN. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be set aside and this be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], for himself and Mr. KASTEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1544:

On page 25, line 3, insert "only" after the word "available".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1544) was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WALLOP. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1545

(Purpose: To ensure funds are available for Soviet Pentecostals, Evangelicals and Baptists caught in the Soviet Underground Railroad)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Mr. ARMSTRONG. Its purpose is to ensure funds are available for Soviet Pentecostals, Evangelicals, and Baptists caught in the Soviet underground railroad. I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside and that the amendment by Senator ARMSTRONG be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], for Mr. ARMSTRONG, proposes an amendment numbered 1545.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Chapter III of title II of the bill is amended in the paragraph under the heading "Bilateral Economic Assistance: Migration and Refugee Assistance" by inserting after "Israel:" the following: "Provided further, That of the funds allocated in this account, an equitable share shall be made available to Pentecostals, Evangelicals and Baptists to fund the existing 2,000 semifunded refugee admissions numbers for the Soviet Union, unless sufficient unused refugee admissions numbers could be reallocated within this fiscal year to allow adequate funding and admission of this group:".

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, for many years there has been a largely secret and very effective underground railroad operating between the Soviet Union and the United States. The freight it carried was precious cargo indeed—thousands of Christian families fleeing persecution for their religious beliefs, beliefs which are among the most cherished and protected in our Constitution.

Here is how it used to work. Christian religious refugees would apply to emigrate, using the polite diplomatic fiction that they were going to live with relatives in Israel, because Soviet authorities have tended to be more permissive about emigration to Israel. After traveling to Vienna or Rome, they declared their true intention of emigrating to the United States.

This system worked fine until recently when the State Department, late last fall, decided to save money by avoiding the considerable cost of housing Soviet religious refugees in expensive European capitals. Instead, all Soviet refugee processing is being handled from our embassy in Moscow.

Now, the State Department has learned of one group that was particularly disadvantaged by the U.S. change in refugee processing: About 900 families—that is, approximately 6,000 individuals—of Soviet Pentecostals, Evangelicals, and Baptists. These families had given up their homes, their life savings, their jobs, their ration cards, and their internal passports and proceeded to Moscow where they were given exit visas for refugee processing centers in Rome and Vienna. To their surprise and dismay, they can no longer pretend to be going to Israel and proceed speedily to Vienna and Rome. They now must wait in Moscow for the United States to complete its many months of processing. Their hope is that, eventually, they will be allowed to travel directly from Moscow to the United States.

Once their plight was brought to the attention of U.S. officials, the State Department did schedule interviews for these 6,000 with Immigration and Naturalization Service [INS] officers by the end of August of this year. State claims this is adequate to ensure these families are all brought into the United States by January 1, 1991, but it doesn't appear possible if you talk to some of the volunteer refugee organizations. They tell me that today, once refugees are interviewed by our embassy, they are told their paperwork will be ready in 6 months. Then these men and women must apply for exit visas again and secure a seat on Aeroflot—an ordeal that often takes more than a year if you have only rubles to spend.

So today we have about 6,000 people, mostly families, spread around Moscow without any means of self-support. The State Department could have alleviated the problem, but they did not. To them, a year of limbo for a victim of a U.S. policy change is not too much. My own view is that these refugees' first experience of the United States ought to be a better one than that of a bureaucratic snafu causing distressed families a year of needless misery and uncertainty.

My amendment directs the State Department to do one of two things to fix the problem. They are required either to use an equitable share of the resources available in this section of the bill to fund the existing 2,000 semifunded refugee admissions numbers—actually these are completely unfunded—or to reallocate refugee admissions numbers within this fiscal year to allow adequate funding and admission of this group.

Others more familiar with the ins and outs of refugee processing tell me the United States expects to have many unused refugee admission slots for this year. They report fewer Ukrainians are applying than originally anticipated, that the Vietnamese Government has slowed the applications of Vietnamese refugees causing an anticipated shortfall in Vietnamese refugees, and that we may even have fewer Cubans than expected. My amendment does not direct any cuts to these existing refugee allocations; it just instructs the State Department to reallocate any unused billets to this group of Soviet refugees caught by the shift in United States policy.

If a reallocation is not possible, my amendment directs the application of resources available in this section of the bill to fund the existing unfunded refugee slots. Senators may ask themselves if these provisions would affect other refugees who are also disadvantaged, especially Soviet Jews whom many of us have gone to great lengths to protect.

Frankly, there is absolutely no reason this amendment should have any adverse impact on refugee numbers already agreed to. In fact, it is the specific intent of this Senator that the funding for these 2,000 unfunded refugee slots not come from a bureaucratic tradeoff of these 2,000 unfunded slots against 2,000 slots that are already funded for other classes of refugees.

The State Department's refugee programs section tells me, to meet this year's increased refugee burden, it has cut per refugee payments to volunteer groups from the usual $560 per refugee for reception and placement costs to $525 per refugee. Part of the $75 million in the migration and refugee assistance section of this bill is designed to reimburse these organizations, but many of them report they have been budgeting $525 per refugee since the budgetary cut, and therefore might not require a full $35 per refugee repayment. Cutting some of this payback is one method by which the State Department could—without disadvantaging any other class of refugee—provide funds for all or part of the 2,000 unfunded slots for Soviet evangelical refugees.

My amendment does not take care of all 6,000 evangelicals caught in the U.S. policy shift. But it should allow us to process the first third of them by early this summer, thereby speeding up the entire process for the remaining two-thirds. I certainly hope the Secretary of State will ensure the most needy 2,000 are selected first, processed quickly and brought into the United States.

It is conceivable that there might still be some delay in the availability of direct airline flights to the United States aboard Aeroflot. Therefore, the State Department should also investigate every feasible method of transportation for those 2,000 exiting under this provision. They should explore methods which, with proper assistance from American volunteer agencies, would permit those whose cases have previously been adjudicated in Moscow to travel directly to Rome or Vienna, layover for not more than 48 hours in either city, and then connect with a flight to the United States.

The Senate, indeed the Congress, needs to intervene promptly and decisively in this matter to ensure these 900 families caught in the U.S. policy change are processed quickly and compassionately. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1545) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1546

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am going to send to the desk a Hatch amendment on Indian drug funding, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be set aside for immediate consideration of an amendment by Senator HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. LEAHY], for Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 1546.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. . DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE FOR ANTI-NARCOTICS EFFORTS OF BOLIVIA AND PERU.

(a) Of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1990 to carry out chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to development assistance)—

(1) up to $25,000,000 should be available only for Bolivia,

(2) up to $20,000,000 should be available only for Peru, for the purpose of—

(A) providing alternative income, employment, and social services for individuals involved in illicit coca and marijuana production,

(B) supporting investment in infrastructure, farm credit and extension services, and other development projects in non-coca production areas, and

(C) otherwise assisting such countries in continuing their anti-narcotics efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1546) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1547

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, lastly, I am about to send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. KENNEDY and others regarding health aid to Chile. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to set aside the pending business for the immediate consideration of the amendment by Senator KENNEDY and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], for Mr. KENNEDY, for himself, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. LEAHY, proposes an amendment numbered 1547:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add the following:

"For an additional amount for 'Health, Development Assistance', $10,000,000, to remain available through September 30, 1991, which shall be made available only for assistance for Chile.".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is an amendment providing essential funding for urgent health care needs in Chile. This appropriation of $10 million to the health care system in Chile will help those sectors hurt most during the long years of dictatorship—the poor and their children.

I recently had the honor of attending President Patricio Aylwin's inauguration in Chile. The new government has made it clear that their No. 1 social priority is health care, and they deserve our support.

Chile's primary public health care system is on the verge of collapse.

Over the last 16½ years of authoritarian rule, public sector spending for health care declined 55 percent. Twenty percent of the population is without coverage of any sort—virtually all of whom live in impoverished communities.

Chile once had a national health care system offering free universal coverage, but General Pinochet moved swiftly to dismantle it in the early days of his dictatorship.

Virtually all of the leaders of the public health care system were fired, imprisoned, expelled, and in some instances tortured and killed. General Pinochet sold many clinics and hospitals, and turned much of the health system over to local authorities without adequate funding.

Investment in clinics serving the poor and lower income levels has declined dramatically. Hospitals are plagued by dangerous technical and sanitary problems, and by old and poorly operating equipment.

Many hospitals can do little more than treat the most life-threatening conditions—leaving other critical cases unattended.

Diseases such as malaria once thought eradicated have reappeared in Chile. Typhoid fever once under control has now become a problem again.

Infant mortality has increased and remains much higher among the poor population. In each of the last 3 years, as many as 10,000 infants have died needlessly in Chile because of poor health care and inadequate living conditions—babies that could probably have been saved had a decent level of health care been provided. The overall infant mortality rate in Chile is 20 per 1,000 births. Among the poor, the rate is 87 per 1,000.

Many Chileans do not receive a decent level of nutrition. Between 1969 and 1984, the percentage of families with incomes insufficient to purchase the level of calories which the FAO and the WHO set as minimal rose from 48 to 61 percent.

A recent study found that in a low-income area of Santiago, 72 percent of the families consumed less than the minimum number of calories; most subsist on tea and bread.

In many countries, there is little hope or ability to address these dire needs immediately. But the situation in Chile is different.

The new government has made this issue a priority, and has developed extensive plans for meeting the health needs of the poor.

The health ministry has proposed to assist 158 clinics in poverty areas, to support a mobile primary health care service, to provide maternity child care in poor areas, to fund rural health education, and to finance drug abuse and alcoholism prevention.

Modest support now by the United States can make a significant difference in ensuring that these plans succeed. The people of Chile have suffered enormously over the last decade and a half—and all of us in the Congress are well aware that the United States bears its share of responsibility for that suffering.

Now, we have a chance to join in investing in a brighter future for the long-suffering families of Chile who bore the heaviest brunt of our misguided policies of the past. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this amendment would provide $10 million in development assistance for urgently needed children's health care in Chile.

The economic growth Chile enjoyed during the years of dictatorship under General Pinochet were achieved at the expense of the most vulnerable, Chile's children. Despite that economic growth, according to the U.N. Children's Fund, in 1972, the year before President Allende's assassination, Chile spent 8.2 percent of its national budget on health. In 1986 that figure had dropped to 6 percent.

What were the consequences of this decline? Health clinics have fallen into disrepair and hundreds of thousands of people living in poverty are without access to basic nutritional and health care. In contrast to the national average of 19 per 1,000, infant mortality in the 100 poorest communities is between 50 and 87 per 1,000. Malaria, once virtually eradicated, has reappeared. The budget of the Chilean School of Public Health, the source of scientific and technical expertise for the country's public health system, has been cut back drastically.

President Alwyn, Chile's first democratically elected president in 15 years, has made rebuilding the country's health care system a priority. His administration plans to rehabilitate 158 rural and urban primary health clinics in the poorest communities, with a priority given to maternal and child health. He wants to implement a system of mobile clinics equipped with basic services to get immediate care to an estimated 310,000 urban poverty dwellers who have no access to health care.

Another goal is to train several hundred rural health providers in poor communities with an estimated 770,000 people.

A special concern is mental health counselling for victims of torture and other human rights abuses, including the families of the disappeared.

Mr. President, by the time this year is out we will have provided over a billion dollars to the new democratic governments in Panama and Nicaragua, but nothing to support democracy in Chile. These $10 million will send a signal that we recognize the heroic efforts of the Chilean people in repudiating years of dictatorship, and that we want to help the Alwyn government address its most pressing humanitarian needs.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and myself which will provide $10 million for development activities in Chile. This assistance is intended to rebuild the health care system in Chile, with a primary focus on the primary health care network there.

As the Senate focuses on the dramatic political changes in Panama and Nicaragua and directs its attention on whether to include nearly a billion in aid to those two countries, we should not loose sight on the historic change that took place in Chile in December of last year.

Then, more than 7 million Chileans, more than 90 percent of all eligible voters, cast their ballots in the first presidential election in that country in 19 years.

Christian Democrat Patricio Aylwn, a moderate in temperament and politics, handily defeated his two rivals. Equally important, the election itself, and the fact that the elections were conducted freely and fairly with its results accepted, signaled the end of the military dictatorship of General Augusto Pinochet.

Also revealing of the new era of political civility and democracy was the fact that Mr. Aylwn's two political rivals, Hernan Büchi and Errazuriz, personally congratulated Chile's new president-elect on the night of the election.

The government of Patricio Aylwn, who was inaugurated on March 11, faces major hurdles before democracy is finally consolidated in a country whose political culture was ravaged by 17 years of military dictatorship.

According to the Constitution written by the previous government, General Pinochet remains as head of the army. Also because of preferential rules written into Chile's electoral laws, the previous government nominated nine senators, on its own without popular vote, which helped deny Aylwn's electoral coalition of 17 parties, a majority in the newly elected Chilean senate.

Investigation of past human rights abuses is another important and politically sensitive issue that President Aylwn must resolve. The most important and notorious is the Letelier-Moffitt case, involving the September 1976 car bombing and assassination of Orlando Letelier and Ronni Karpen Moffit on the streets of Washington, DC.

In order to restore military relations, Chile, according to United States law, must take action toward prosecuting those who murdered Orlando Letelier and Ronni Karpen Moffitt.

Just as important, the Aylwn government must meet the needs of the poor and lower-income Chileans, who were victimized by Pinochet's economic programs as well as the repressive policies of its military regime.

Accordingly, President Aylwn has made health care its first social priority. The new government knows that his government must show poor Chileans that democracy can deliver real benefits and help them meet their most basic human needs.

Over the past 17 years, the Pinochet regime set about to destroy the public health care system in Chile. Doctors and health care workers were exiled, imprisoned, tortured, and some were killed.

The previous government cut public sector spending for health care by 55 percent. From 1980 to 1986, the health care system moved from a 60-40 to a 30-70 state-private sector ratio.

As a result, Chile's public health care system now stands on the verge of imminent collapse.

Investment in clinics serving poorer and lower income Chileans declined dramatically over the past 17 years. Dangerous technical and sanitary problems now plague Chile's hospitals. Battlefield-like hospitals now aim for little more than to prevent patients' deaths.

The lack of effective primary care among poor Chileans has resulted in the reappearance of illnesses that had previously been considered eradicated, including malaria and polio. Chile's infant mortality has actually increased recently, and in poor communities the rate ranges up to 87 per 1,000 live births, nearly five times the national average.

As a result of neglect by the military regime, nutrition—a key to public health—has declined. From 1969 to 1978, the percentage of Chilean families whose incomes were insufficient to purchase the levels that the FAO and WHO set as minimums rose from 47.6 to 54 percent. By 1984, that percentage rose yet again to 61 percent.

The trend continues. A recent study found that in low-income zones in Santiago, 72 percent of the families consume less that the minimum number of calories. Most live on tea and bread.

The new Aylwn government, led by its health minister, Dr. Jorge Jimenez, a graduate of Johns Hopkins' public health program, has developed comprehensive plans for developing health care for Chile's poor.

The health ministry plans to improve Chile's health care network, promote maternal child care in poor and urban communities, support both governmental and nongovernmental health care units, train rural health promoters, and provide mental health counseling to human rights victims.

Mr. President, the plans are there, but the money is not.

The $10 million for health care in Chile, which will be directed at reconstructing its primary health care network, may represent a small amount when compared to the $800 million the President requested for Panama and Nicaragua.

But this small investment will have a huge impact—in both symbolic and real terms—on hopes for democracy in Chile.

In actual terms, U.S. aid would shore up Chile's public health care system at this critical time in that country's reborn democracy.

On a symbolic level, this aid would demonstrate U.S. commitment and support for democracy and stability in Chile.

Mr. President, support for democracy in a country where freedom has been suppressed for a generation is a truly dire emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1547) was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to note my appreciation for the tremendous help of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], our distinguished chairman, Senator BYRD, and Senator HATFIELD to clear these matters. I yield the floor.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might be permitted to proceed briefly as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Will the distinguished Senator withhold so that I might offer an amendment very quickly?

Mr. WALLOP. I will be happy to yield for that purpose.

AMENDMENT NO. 1548

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Mr. STEVENS and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Ms. MIKULSKI). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], for Mr. STEVENS], proposes an amendment numbered 1548.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

SEC. . Title VI of Public Law 101-165 is amended by striking the amount "$10,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the amount "$18,000,000".

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, this is the amendment that I understand is agreed to on both sides. It has to do with retrograde of chemical munitions being brought home from Germany. I ask the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, this amendment has been examined on this side. It is acceptable. I join in hoping that the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter concerning this matter from Secretary Cheney be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, April 26, 1990.

Hon. TED STEVENS,
Ranking Minority Member, Subcommittee on Defense, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR TED: As you know, the administration wishes to complete the removal of chemical munitions from the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) during this calendar year. The FY 90 appropriations language placed a limit of $10M on the funding for that purpose until I certify to the Congress that chemical munitions have been destroyed at our Johnston Island disposal plant.

We have experienced delays in the Johnston Island operation, and I feel it is imperative that we proceed deliberately in that activity so we have absolute assurance of a safe and environmentally sound operation. In order to continue with the President's objective of munitions retrograde this year, I ask your assistance by removal of the $10M cap on the total appropriation of $27.61M. This would allow us to proceed with ship modifications, fabrications of secondary steel shipping containers, and other preparatory actions. In compliance with the appropriations language, we will move no munitions from the current storage site in the FRG until the Johnston Atoll Chemical Agent Disposal System has destroyed agent and the appropriate notification has been made to Congress.

Sincerely,

DICK CHENEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

The amendment (No. 1548) was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WALLOP addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. I ask unanimous consent that I might be permitted to proceed as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALLOP. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. WALLOP. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. WALLOP pertaining to the submission of Senate Resolution 277 are located in today's RECORD under "Submission of Concurrent and Senate Resolutions.")

Mr. WALLOP. Madam President—

Recent reforms in the Soviet Union are important steps, but justice demands that more be taken. Recent improvements in human rights practices by the ruling Communist officials are not complete, nor have they been institutionalized. The people of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia both demand and deserve lasting guarantees of their fundamental rights. The Government of the United States does not and will not recognize the unilateral incorporation by force of arms of the Baltic States into the Soviet Union.

These are the words of President George Bush, proclaiming June 14, 1989, as Baltic Freedom Day.

For almost 50 years, the policy of the United States has been as President Bush stated it 10 months ago. The validity of that policy was proven when, even more recently, the Kremlin itself admitted, for the first time, the existence and illegality of the infamous Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact which cynically divided Poland between Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union, and extinguished the independence of the Baltic States.

Today our policy of 50 years could have real meaning. Yet, now that the people of the Baltic States are demanding to again be free republics—now we waver. Now we blink. At the first moment when our support would not be symbolic but real, the United States is willing to go back on its word. Politics, domestic or foreign, has its reality—but so does national integrity.

For the first time since 1940, our support for the Republics of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia is in doubt. Until today our support of the Baltic Republics was clear. It was meaningful. It was right.

The United States, simply stated, should not abandon our integrity and our 50-year-old profreedom policy, and we most clearly ought not to do so carelessly—by accident or drift. Honesty requires that we know—and publicly acknowledge—that our current position is a reversal of that of the last 50 years.

Even more importantly, we must know why we are reversing that policy; why we believe support for the Soviet State is more important than support for the freedom of the Baltic States. Why is U.S. support of Mikhail Gorbachev so vitally important? Will, he change for the better if change for the worse bears no consequences?

Is U.S. support of Gorbachev important to the Baltic States? What do we fear a Gorbachev successor might do in Lithuania, that Gorbachev himself has not done by sending tanks down the main street of Vilnius; cutting off the Republic's supply of oil, gas, industrial materials, even food; sending a Lithuanian Parliamentarian to the hospital critically wounded; and expelling most Western journalists to keep the rest of the world from seeing what occurs? Do we fear that someone other than Gorbachev would take more drastic military action to control the breakaway Republic? I doubt the Lithuanians find Gorbachev's slow strangulation a pleasant alternative to an immediate invasion of troops. Worse, one wonders if we would even react to that today. The irony is, Gorbachev has more demonstrable resistance to his position on Lithuania inside the Soviet Union than outside.

One wonders why the vaunted American press seeks to make the victim, the cause. Were they so silent when South Africa removed their presence? Do they not care about freedom when it comes to their man of the decade? What hypocrisy.

Is U.S. support of Gorbachev necessary for stability? I would argue not. We have supported Gorbachev, abandoning Lithuania—who will argue that stability has resulted? The situation has deteriorated considerably. U.S. failure to at least make bold statements has contributed not to stability, but to instability. Until now, the leaders in the Baltic Republics have not asked the United States to take unilateral action. Their people have for 50 years counted on U.S. moral support of their historic independence. Not even receiving that, they are understandably impatient at U.S. floundering, vacillation, and policy weakness. That impatience, fueled by our reticence, increases many-fold the risk of violence—violence which will be on our shoulders should it occur. No one proposes hasty or reckless United States actions which might precipitate a violent reaction by the Soviet Government. However, complete inaction could have even more devastating results.

Are we then supporting Gorbachev in the name of peace? Whose peace? And at what price?

Does the U.S. support Gorbachev to help ensure the success of perestroika? How can we even make such a claim when the people of Lithuania slowly starve at the hand of perestroika's architect? And if in fact we fear that the grand scheme of perestroika will fail, should we not discover that now, rather than risk greater violence down the road by raising false hopes for freedom?

Are we supporting Gorbachev because he is threatened from within his own government, and any indication of withdrawal of U.S. support might weaken him? President Bush spoke powerful words last June stating U.S. support for the Baltic States, and Gorbachev did not fall from power. Does Gorbachev hold power by such a thin thread today that he may be overthrown merely because the President of the United States repeats the same words he spoke last June? If that is so, then surely we have bet on the wrong horse. And, frankly, does anyone really believe Gorbachev is so weak? He has recently been granted such broad new powers that he can simply dissolve governments in the Republics and govern by Presidential rule. That is not weakness—it is dictatorship.

So why should anyone believe that Mikhail Gorbachev needs U.S. support?

Even more fundamental, is the question of whether we ought to give it. What is he doing that warrants our abandoning the Baltic Republics? Is he granting arms concessions that in any way diminish the aggressive power of the Soviet State? On the contrary, we are learning more each day about ongoing violations of the INF agreement and retreats from concessions at the arms control table. Is he granting real freedom to Soviet citizens? Is he institutionalizing reforms to ensure they outlast his rule? Perhaps so, but the reforms being institutionalized are those which substantially strengthen his grip on power.

Surely, if we no longer support self-determination for freedom, if we no longer are affronted by a silenced world press, if we are going to sacrifice our Nation's honorable commitments to prop up the head of a foreign state, we must know that he has a vision for his country that is worth such sacrifice and support. If Gorbachev is really the initiator of change, rather than its captive, surely he must have a goal. Yet I challenge any one to identify that goal. The Soviet Union is indeed undergoing change, but to what end?

I believe there are leaders today who have clear new visions for their nations that are compatible with the American vision of freedom and democracy. In Eastern Europe, Lech Walesa and Vaclav Havel are testaments to such vision. President Vytautas Landsbergis has a goal for Lithuania—restoration of his people's place in the world as citizens of a democratic republic, freed from Soviet domination.

And what stands in the way of Landsbergis' vision is Mikhail Gorbachev and Western collaborators. Gorbachev, in contrast to the new leaders in the changing East bloc, has demonstrated no vision for his country or people. Reform, yes, but for what purpose? To accomplish what end? To bring what freedoms to his empire? Little of what is said by Kremlin leaders today makes one confident that they intend to establish a new order.

In fact, Gorbachev has stated quite openly, most recently in an address just 2 weeks ago to the 21st Komsomol Congress, that the objective of his reforms is not pluralistic democracy—not freedom but the enactment of the ideals of Lenin and Marx:

> The party and the Central Committee have defined their stand perfectly clearly. * * * Our objective is the revolutionary renewal of socialism, not repudiation of the choice by Lenin, the Bolsheviks, and the people on October 1917. Our aim is the cardinal renewal of the country, the modernization of its economy and sociopolitical structure in the interest, first and foremost, of society having not less but more freedom and social justice. The party, in restructuring its ranks, must preserve its main purpose, to be the expressor of the interests of the working class, the toiling peasantry and the people's intelligentsia, the generator and conduit for socialist aspirations. Such is our credo—humane and democratic socialism—such is the worthy aim, the implementation in practice of which should be the life's cause for the younger generation, and its revolutionary deed for the good of the country and the people.

This is Gorbachev's vision—not the competition of ideas but the credo of Lenin, which, even if it could create an economy strong enough to keep its subjects fed, clothed, and warm, denies something even more fundamental—the freedom of mind and spirit of each individual.

That is what is sought today in Lithuania. It is a quest that has support around the world, including the heart of Gorbachev's empire. On March 31 and again on April 9 thousands of people rallied in support of Lithuanian independence. These demonstrations were in Leningrad, in Kiev, in Donetsk, and in Moscow. Last month 71 members of the Moscow City Soviet sent a telegram to President Landsbergis indicating their support of his efforts; 75 members of the Moscow City Soviet wired the same message to Gorbachev. Do we undercut them to sustain Gorbachev?

In Sofia, Bulgaria, independent students' associations demonstrated for Lithuanian independence near the Soviet Embassy. In Warsaw, Poland, a bishop officiated at a Mass in support of Lithuania independence, the Presidium of the National Coordinating Commission of Solidarity for Handicraft expressed support, the Polish Independence Party organized a rally in Gdansk. The Universal Party of Slavs even offered military assistance to Lithuania.

And just this past weekend Boris Yeltsin condemned Gorbachev's actions in Lithuania, calling them "an intolerable violation of human rights." How can these people who arguably have so much to fear from Gorbachev, be so bold while we remain so timid?

We welcome the changes that have taken place in the world in recent months: Newly granted freedom of expression in and emigration from the Soviet Union and Soviet leaders' moves toward economic reforms. But it is not enough.

"In You Can't Go Home Again," Thomas Wolfe wrote:

> Go, seeker, if you will, throughout the land and you will find us burning in the night * * * to every man his chance, to every man, regardless of his birth, his shining golden opportunity—to every man the right to live, to work, to be himself, and to become whatever he thinks his manhood and his vision can combine to make him—this, seeker, is the promise of America.

That is the vision of our forefathers for this country, it is ours today. It is also the vision of Violeta Chamorro, of Vaclav Havel, of Lech Walesa, of Vytautas, Landsbergis, of so many others striving today to create institutions to ensure the freedom of all who follow them.

We owe it to ourselves, to the thousands who have died fighting tyranny in the Soviet Empire and the millions who have been its victims, indeed to the cause of freedom itself, to be sure that Mikhail Gorbachev shares a vision before we mortgage our history—and the world's future—to him.

Are there things we can do? Of course. We do not have to extend trading privileges. We should make the Soviet Union argue its case in the United Nations or the World Court. We should demand Soviet explanation and judge it according to their own promises. We should reaffirm our belief in self-determination and our outrage at its repression. Gorbachev has no reason to resist counsel to use force if we acquiesce in its use. In short, we are not helpless and should not act as if we were.

How can you negotiate freedom? One either is or is not free—would Patrick Henry have said, "Give me liberty or give me negotiations"? Would we have heard of him if he had?

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter that was an advertisement in the New York Times last Sunday from Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFL-CIO ON LITHUANIA

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On behalf of the more than fourteen million members of the AFL-CIO, I urge you to move swiftly and surely to confer U.S. Government recognition on the legitimately elected government of the Republic of Lithuania. As part of this process, I urge you to exchange ambassadors and, with Congressional support, to extend MFN status to Lithuania.

Now, as never before, the brave Lithuanian people are looking for support from all nations that respect democracy and human rights. The AFL-CIO is proud of its fraternal association with the Lithuanian Workers' Union, a labor organization that is a part of the Sajudis movement. We are writing to you about our concerns in response to a direct appeal for help from the chairman of the Lithuanian Workers' Union, Kazimieras Uoka, and to an appeal from President Vytautas Landsbergis. In electing President Landsbergis, Deputy Uoka, and other Sajudis candidates to high office, the people of Lithuania have made a historic and fateful decision to proclaim their inalienable right of national sovereignty.

The people of Lithuania have spoken clearly and unequivocally for their national independence. This is why the AFL-CIO stands with President Landsbergis and all Lithuanian citizens and patriots. And this is why we condemn the tactics of intimidation and repression adopted by the Soviet Union against a democratically-elected sovereign state. Such violation of international law deserves to be criticized resolutely by the United States.

While the AFL-CIO welcomes the gradual opening up of the Soviet political system, we believe that Soviet progress in moving away from totalitarianism deserves to be encouraged further. The U.S., therefore must not remain silent when significant Soviet abuses of human and national rights occur.

We are certain, as we were in our steadfast support for Soladarnosc in Poland, of the ultimate success of the peaceful struggle for national self-determination waged by the Lithuanians and other peoples forcibly absorbed into the USSR.

I hope that, in this compelling instance, the United States can speak out clearly and forcefully in behalf of liberty in a way that is consonant with our democratic tradition.

Respectfully,

LANE KIRKLAND,
President, AFL-CIO.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

THE SENATE'S USUAL POSTURE

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, the Senate is in its usual posture and it is not very flattering. It is daylight outside, so why are we meeting and having votes? Ordinarily, we wait until night for our serious business, although last night we were in session from 6 o'clock until approximately 12 o'clock, and we had one unanimous vote.

As what appears to be usual, the Senate does not know where it is heading or how long it is going to take to get there. Supposedly, grown men and women allow themselves to stagger forward on a bill like this with little or no information. We are not sure what is next or what is after that or whether we are going to be in tonight or not. We do not even know about tonight.

I have tried to hold back my rage at how this legislation has been handled, but I cannot do it any longer. What amazes me is why other Members stand mute and allow this legislation to be dealt with the way it is and allow themselves to be treated the way they are treated.

I guess it is because they basically feel it is hopeless to complain. After you are here for a couple of years, you quit complaining and roll over and go with the system. If they would complain and demand something better, maybe some things would be different.

Look at what we have been doing this morning. What a joke. We had a vote on a noncontroversial committee amendment saying that a specified amount of money may be used for environment or agriculture in Nicaragua. I think it was a unanimous vote. Then we had a vote on whether or not to sustain the ruling of the Chair.

I realize that this body just systemically disregards the ruling of the Chair. If we want to, we go to the substance and do not pay any attention to whether it is germane or not.

But we voted to overrule the ruling of the Chair, still an amazing procedure to this Member of the Senate.

Let us look at the history of this legislation. Let me get to the substance here. I realize the way it works around here. Ordinarily, we try to talk about something unrelated to the bill we are supposed to be dealing with.

Let me talk a little about the bill to see if it has any impact at all. The legislation was requested by the President of the United States over a month ago as urgent dire supplemental appropriations. What a joke. Dire. If it were dire, why would we not have acted on it earlier? The President asked for it over a month ago.

But, no, we did not want to move right into this urgent dire supplemental approriation. We wanted to take our time. The President of the United States said we really need to do this before we go home for the Easter week. Maybe there was not enough time to get it put together. We needed to be gone for 10 days so we disregarded that.

Then it was suggested it would really be helpful if we could go ahead and get it before the inauguration of Mrs. Chamorro as President of Nicaragua. That was this week, and that has come and gone.

Finally, it was brought to the floor on Thursday with no Members having seen what was going to be in it until about 4 o'clock the previous day. Members did not have a chance to look at the bill or the report until Wednesday afternoon. Then we spent 4 or 5 hours on the first major amendment that came up, 4 or 5 hours before we finally had a vote at about 6 o'clock on Thursday night. Then we had one more vote between 6 and 1.

Now today, right now, we are tied up on an issue that is really not even germane, not germane to this legislation. We are again getting into a debate on abortion in the District of Columbia.

We continue to put ourselves through these exercises. Why do we do it? It was put in the bill. Now we are trying to get it out. We have been assured by the President's representatives that if the bill comes to him with this in there, he is going to veto the bill. Are we daring him? What are we trying to do? Is this an urgent dire supplemental appropriation, or is it not?

Why do we not take up the basic things we have to have to keep certain offices open around the country, the funds for countries trying to move toward democracy, some of the area programs that really are urgent, maybe some veterans programs? We all have programs we think are urgent and need to be in there.

But, no, we have to continue to inject issues that do not belong, pile on, trying to get Members to change the vote in sustaining the ruling of the Chair. Some think the Senate looks good in all this. I think we look like kindergarten children; no rules, no order, no schedule. We look nongermane.

The language in this bill dealing with abortion is nongermane. We should not have it in there. If this is urgent and dire supplemental appropriations legislation, why do we have up to 60 amendments pending? There are a lot of them that I like. I like the amendment by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] on wetlands, and I like the death penalty the Senator from Texas is going to offer.

But 60 amendments were pending, over 60 last night were pending. What are we doing? Who are we kidding? We ought to dispense with all those amendments, vote on the basic issues, and get this supplemental legislation out of here. We are going to need some leadership to get it done. I think the Senate looks very poor in the way we are conducting our business.

I yield my time, Madam President.

VOTE ON COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON PAGE 57, LINES 5 TO 10

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1:30 p.m. having arrived, the Chair submits the question.

Is the committee amendment on page 57, lines 5 to 10, germane to the House language appearing on page 36, lines 9 to 15?

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] is necessarily absent.

The yeas and nays resulted, yeas 54, nays 42, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 54, the nays are 42. The judgment of the Senate is that the amendment is germane. Therefore, the point of order falls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the second-degree amendment?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, let me thank my colleagues on this side. I think if we could have had some accommodation, we still would have been a couple votes short. I thank my colleagues for their flexibility because this is an issue of whether we can get aid to Panama and Nicaragua, not an abortion bill.

I hope we might get unanimous consent later on today on the Panama or Nicaragua portion and leave the rest of it here. We can play with it the rest of the year. But I hope we can get unanimous consent to pass that part of it so we can get aid to Panama and Nicaragua. If we want to debate abortion and the death penalty and everything else people can dream up, fine with me. It may not be fine with the majority leader.

But as the Republican leader and someone who is trying to be helpful to the President, why can we not just except out the aid to Nicaragua and the aid to Panama. It is going to take a while to get it down there even after we go to conference and it is signed by the President.

So I hope maybe sometime later today we might make an appropriate request, which will not be objected to, we make certain that we help our friends in areas where we have an obligation. Having said that, I am advised there would be no need for a rollcall vote on the amendment.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President pro tempore of the Senate, the manager of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Adams amendment.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SENATOR BYRD SETS NEW RECORD WITH VOTE NO. 12,134

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, may I have the attention of my colleagues? To all the Members of the Senate, we have just observed and participated in an important moment in the history of the Senate and the Nation.

The distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator ROBERT BYRD of West Virginia has now established a new record of total Senate votes cast. This was his 12,134th vote. The previous record was held by former Senator William Proxmire, who cast 12,133 votes in his Senate service.

That record no longer stands.

Senator BYRD cast his first Senate vote on January 7, 1959, in the first session of the 86th Congress.

Now in his 32d year, Senator BYRD has maintained a voting attendance record of 98.4 percent during his long Senate service.

It is an ironic thing that his first vote was cast on an adjournment motion. Although a poet once observed that "We may our ends by our beginnings know," that has not been the case with Senator BYRD's record in the Senate. Indeed, that first vote marked the beginning of the distinguished Senate career which I know and hope has many, many more years to run with many, many more votes to cast.

I congratulate the distinguished Senator from West Virginia on breaking the record for the total number of votes cast. It is appropriate that a man who has devoted so much of his life to the U.S. Senate should now hold the all-time record for Senate votes cast. I think I can assure Senator BYRD that he can rest easy with his new record, for I deem it unlikely that any of his other colleagues will surpass that record.

I now ask all of my colleagues to join me in expressing our admiration and respect for Senator ROBERT C. BYRD.

[Applause; Senators rising.]

Mr. BYRD. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also extend my congratulations to my friend and colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and President pro tempore and former majority leader on his 12,134th vote. I have not checked mine lately, but I do not think I am close.

I think standing maybe out of respect for the Senator from West Virginia, we ought to take the rest of the day off. [Applause.] So we could properly celebrate this auspicious occasion.

I know my colleagues on this side of the aisle join me in congratulating my friend, the Senator from West Virginia, not just for the number of votes cast, but if I know Senator BYRD as I think I do, he never cast any of those votes without knowing precisely what he was voting for or against, and that is not a requirement around here.

I know in the case of my friend from West Virginia, he knew what the issue was and precisely where he wanted to be on that issue. In addition to that, I think it is just another indication of the record he is making in the U.S. Senate. There is no doubt in my mind when another history is written, when another person writes the history of the Senate, as Senator BYRD is in the process of doing—we will have another volume available very soon, or volumes—they will look back on this era and they will note the significance of this giant in the Senate, ROBERT C. BYRD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Chair.

It is difficult to speak of my senior colleague from West Virginia on behalf of all of our citizens in West Virginia who are going through difficult times, but whose times are less difficult because of the work and the skill that my senior colleague has lavished upon our State, and in fact upon our country, over these 32 years.

In fact, if I might correct the Republican leader, I suspect that if we are to show our respect for Senator BYRD, we will complete the matter at hand to complete the bill.

Senator BYRD is unlike any other Senator in this body. He is respected by every single one, envied by many, and duplicated by none.

His hard work is an important work in America, and it is a work that is harder to attach to the instincts of our people in a society which has grown more affluent, and where the making of money has become so important and the meaning of public service and of giving of oneself to others has taken on perhaps less meaning in recent years.

Senator BYRD belies this trend and by the force of his personality bends the nature of this trend, because his only interest is in hard work and service to other people.

He is a very tough man. He has had to be a tough man. He has had to be a tough man to grow up, to survive what life dealt him, which was not easy in its beginnings. But he was forged in the crucible to tough times in a hardy State, and he has made of himself the American public figure that I think we all regard as extraordinary.

I can say that my sense of good fortune, my sense of having learned from Senator BYRD, having had the good fortune to serve with Senator BYRD, not just in the Senate, but in my own much shorter career, has made me very proud to be an associate.

I like to have it known that I am the junior Senator from West Virginia and that I work with the senior Senator from West Virginia, because his name is ROBERT C. BYRD. What he has done for the people of our State is beyond measure. The people of our State know that, of course, because they have returned him to this body and to the other body for many years. But if they could know as I do what he does when others have gone home and the light in his office burns on and he crafts his amendments and works his ways, they would feel as I do.

My mind drifts back only recently to the delicate and controversial, but in a sense, majestic effort on behalf of the coal miners of West Virginia, and others affected.

The effectiveness of the senior Senator from the State of West Virginia is extraordinary. I pay tribute to him. I do so particularly on behalf of the people of West Virginia, because I think that is the way he would want it.

I think the fact that he has served this Nation in ways which are great and has contributed enormously to the competitiveness and strengthening of our State, of our Nation, is at the fiber of the will of our people of West Virginia. But he has always kept his soul in his roots, and his roots are where life is hard in this country, and he has never forgotten that.

His junior colleague and his constituents respect him, are grateful to him, and honor him on this day, as the majority leader indicated, which is really a day in the history of the Nation of great note.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we are very proud to honor this great Senator from West Virginia today. He is a remarkable man. He has made a remarkable record in the Senate. He is one of the ablest parliamentarians who ever served in this Senate throughout the history of the Senate. I think we all owe him a great debt of gratitude. I would like to express my personal appreciation to him for the fine service he has rendered to the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will be brief. Records are made to be broken and this record will be broken in time.

I knew this was going to come up before long. During the previous vote, I received a note from Mrs. Charlotte Holt, on my staff, saying, "Senator, after this vote, your total will be 12,133. Now you are tied with Senator Proxmire's record. On the next vote you will hold the record. Thanks and congratulations."

That was why I asked for the yeas and nays on the amendment by Mr. ADAMS.

Now, why was that amendment important to me on this particular record-breaking vote? I will not read the entire amendment. I will just read a phrase in it: "early childhood educational development programs."

I started to school in a little two-room schoolhouse down in Mercer County, WV. Teachers were not paid very much in those days, but they were highly dedicated.

I remember that I was inspired by my teachers and by my foster parents to try to excel, whether it was in the classroom or in the workplace.

I used to memorize my history lesson at night by the light of a kerosene lamp. I would recite those lessons the next day. When I moved to Raleigh County and went into a different school, the teacher took me up before the senior class. I was in the fifth grade at that time. She took me up before the senior class and said, "I want ROBERT BYRD to recite" this or that, or whatever it was. It happened to be a history lesson, as I recall.

I say that to say this, that the education of our young people is the thing that is most important, as we look down the road and contemplate the future of this great country. Whether we are talking about the future economic security or the future military security of this country or to stay on the cutting edge of technology, we need to educate our young people. And it is not only the amount of dollars we expend. It is the quality of the teacher and the ambition of the student that count.

I said a moment ago that my foster father and my teachers and my foster mother inspired me. My foster father never bought a cap buster for me. He did not have much money at Christmastime. I was looking at one of his old payroll slips the other day, where he had earned something like $40, $45 in a 2-week period loading coal down in the mines. He did not buy me a cap buster or a cowboy suit. He bought me a drawing tablet or a water color set. And my teachers inspired me to excel. I wanted to excel. I wanted to please my teachers and they inspired me in that way.

So I think it is important that we, today, think of our young people in those terms, how we can inspire them to excel.

The Scriptures say:

> Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding.
> For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof better than fine gold.

I think I missed a word there, but you have to understand, I am a little excited at this point.

Aristotle said that the educated are as superior to the uneducated as the living are to the dead.

We need to inspire our young people to study and to try to excel.

I used to like baseball when I was a boy, and football around the sandlots and communities where I lived—coal mining communities at that time—and basketball. I took great interest in those sports when I was in high school. I was a kind of a runt in that respect and could not compete with some of the larger boys. And I still respect athletics. It has a great place in our society.

But I think we have stood our values on their heads. The important thing is to educate the mind and, while athletics has its place and helps us to develop a spirit of teamwork and all those things, it is the education of the mind and the development of the heart in a spiritual way that really count most.

I can understand how people talk about their big football teams, how they have the number one football team and all that, but no football game ever changed the course of history. I am more interested in how well the players can spell, how well they can add and subtract, divide and multiply. I want to give all things their proper place, but we have stood the values of this country on their heads when we fail to recognize the scholar—the boy or the girl, the young men and the young women who have applied themselves in the laboratories and libraries, and who, even when they get through high school and through graduate school, continue to strive to learn as long as they live, just for the sake of learning, the joy of learning.

I hope with these few remarks that I might inspire some who may be watching or listening that, indeed, we need to do everything we can to set right our values, and put the emphasis where it should be, that is, on the education of our people.

I am very grateful for the comments of my colleagues. I particularly thank the distinguished majority leader for his kindness in calling this to the attention of the Senate, and his many other kindnesses. And I thank the Republican leader for his kindness, also. And I thank my colleagues Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator THURMOND for their gracious comments. I thank my staff. I see they are here in the Chamber. I am proud of them, too.

Mr. President, that explains why I wanted to have a rollcall vote on the Adams amendment.

Let me just finish by saying that I have five grandchildren. I had six; I lost one. He was only 17, 6 foot 5, weighed 300 pounds, wore a size 15 triple-E shoe—a pretty good-sized man. He could have made a fine football player. But now he is gone.

One of the other grandsons graduated from Princeton University 3 years ago with honors. Another one is graduating next month from the University of Virginia, and he is a physics major. And then my baby grandson, Erma's and mine, our baby grandson, is a freshman at the University of Virginia. And he is going to be a physics major also. And I have a granddaughter who is finishing her junior year at Roanoke College. She is an excellent student. These are all excellent, excellent students.

They are a little unlike I am, in that they will watch football games and basketball games on television. My problem in watching them is, if I get started watching them, I will watch all through the holidays, and then I will end up saying, "What have I to show for my time?" Well, they watch them. They like them. But they are also excellent students. Of course, I am no more proud of my grandchildren than other grandparents are. But my point is, the emphasis should be on education, the education of our young people, and we should encourage them to study, to learn, and to excel.

I took a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day
And as my fingers pressed it still
It moved and yielded to my will.
I came again when days were past.
The bit of clay was hard at last.
The form I gave it, it still bore,
And I could change that form no more.
I took a piece of living clay
And gently formed it day by day.
And molded with my power and art
A young child's soft and yielding heart.
I came again when years were gone,
He was a man I looked upon.
He still that early impress wore,
And I could change him nevermore.

Again, I thank my colleagues for their courtesies, their many kindnesses and, in this instance, their recognition of something that I am proud of but, as I say, it will be broken in due time by some other Senator. I expect to hold this record a long time, but I will applaud the Senator who breaks this record, even were I here only in spirit, for he was diligent in his business.

Again, I thank all my colleagues and I hope they will forgive me for taking the time here at this point to say these few words. It will be the last time, I guess, I will ever talk on the subject of breaking the voting record. I thank you all.

[Applause; Senators standing.]

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1549

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in order to continue the fine record of the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia, I am prepared to send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], for himself and Mr. NUNN, proposes an amendment numbered 1549.

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the language in this Act restricting obligation or expenditure of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1990 for Air Force Operation and Maintenance pending settlement of the dispute regarding Contract Numbered F29650-82-0201 is hereby nullified."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be advised that it takes unanimous consent to consider an amendment at this point, other than an amendment to the pending committee amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent to move this amendment at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, Mr. President, I would simply like to ask that, in withholding, I be recognized next to present an amendment on this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking unanimous consent for that purpose?

Mr. GRAMM. I ask the Senator to amend his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. DIXON. I am sorry, Mr. President. There was sufficient stirring about of my colleagues. I am not able to understand what has transpired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has asked that the Senator from Illinois amend his unanimous-consent request to include his request to be recognized next to offer an amendment to this same section.

Mr. ADAMS. Reserving the right to object, does the Senator mean to offer an amendment to the amendment being offered by the Senator from Illinois, or to the amendment that is pending by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I have an amendment to this section that I have been waiting to offer. I will be willing to let the Senator from Illinois deviate from the standard order, but I want to be certain we come back to it and I have an opportunity to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. DIXON. I do not have any problem with that. I had earlier indicated to the manager, the distinguished chairman of the committee, that at the conclusion of the debate on the abortion question, I was prepared to go with this amendment. That was, I think, in compliance with the understanding we had with the managers. I do not have any problem going to the Senator's amendment next.

Mr. ADAMS. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. HATFIELD. Reserving the right to object, as one of the managers of the bill, I would like to ask the Senator from Texas what his amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, my amendment is a death penalty in the District of Columbia for drug murder.

Mr. HATFIELD. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. It is no news that I will be very strong in my opposition, along with some other colleagues, and Senator LEVIN. We would like to be in a position to offer a second-degree amendment, subject to a mandated life sentence. I would like to ask the Chair if we are getting into this kind of a unanimous consent where one is linked to the other? Are my rights protected to offer an amendment in the second degree once the Senator from Texas is recognized for his death penalty amendment?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, while the Chair is waiting to rule on that, may I make an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is prepared to respond to the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon. The parliamentary posture at this time is as follows: The Senator from Illinois has asked unanimous consent to consider the amendment which he has submitted. The Senator from Texas has asked that that unanimous-consent request be modified to include his right to offer an amendment immediately after disposition of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois on a subject which relates to the same section of the supplemental appropriations bill.

On the question of the Senator from Oregon, should we reach the amendment of the Senator from Texas, it would be in order for the Senator from Oregon to offer a second degree.

Let me make an inquiry. Is the Senator from Texas proposing to offer—should his unanimous-consent request be granted—what will be a second-degree amendment?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, let me make it clear that I would never try to inject the protection of myself on top of my dear colleague from Illinois. He has asked that we deviate from the normal procedure, as I understand it, because his amendment is not to this section. I just want to be sure that we come back to this section, which is why I asked that it be amended.

We do have a pending committee amendment, so that my amendment would be an amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that understanding of the nature of the amendment the Senator from Texas will offer, there is no further second-degree amendment available to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, may I then say I plan to object to any unanimous-consent agreement that fouls up this process in such a confused way; that we ought to go back to the committee amendment and then work from there on.

I really feel as managers of the committee we ought to be able to handle and dispose of committee amendments. I am going to object to setting aside any committee amendment. I am going to object to setting aside any other order of procedure except to deal with the business of the committee. We have already gotten off here to the byways and the pathways on abortion and legislation on appropriations. If we are going to finish this bill—I am just going to have to give notice—I am going to object to anything that deviates from getting those committee amendments disposed of and getting this bill out of here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon object to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HATFIELD. Notwithstanding the issue, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. Then I wonder if the managers will yield to a question from the Senator from Illinois?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the managers yield for a question from the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, let me explain the dilemma of the Senator from Illinois to the managers. This amendment directs the attention of the Senate to a provision put in this bill in the committee amendments during the process in the committee. Obviously, at some point in time, you have to reach, unless this part has already been adopted, that provision that was adopted in the committee which was a provision that the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Force take exception to because it directs payment of a bill while a lawsuit is still pending. So somewhere at some point in time we are going to get to it.

I do not see what is served in the overall process by objecting to my proceeding to that point now. It has nothing to do with the death penalty. It is not a very exciting subject at all.

It has to do simply with some money that the Air Force takes exception to the committee committing for a purpose the Air Force does not agree to while a lawsuit is pending.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield for a response——

Mr. DIXON. Yes, I will be delighted to do that.

Mr. HATFIELD. Since I raised the objection. On this Friday morning when we started to do the business pending before the Senate, namely the Senate supplemental appropriations, it was very clearly stated we were going to the committee amendments. We were not going to set aside committee amendments to take up other amendments along the way. We were going to start with the first committee amendment on page 25; we were going then to the second committee amendment, and right down until we finished the committee amendments. The chairman of our committee and I made very clear that we would not agree to setting aside the committee amendments.

No person's rights have been abridged or negated or even diminished by taking the committee amendments first, disposing of them, and then the rest of the bill is open to amendments.

Mr. DIXON. I have no problem with that, if we can get somebody over here to do the committee amendments. But if this Senator and the other 99 are going to sit around for the next hour-and-a-half while the managers look for somebody to go to another amendment, the managers are on notice that there is a Senator here who has an amendment.

I have managed from time to time on this floor and been on that telephone back there by the hour trying to get somebody over here with an amendment. I have an amendment. The Senator from Texas has an amendment. Somebody else has an amendment. Let them go. And you are on notice this Senator has an amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIXON. I am delighted.

Mr. HATFIELD. There is no requirement to get someone over here to offer an amendment. The committee amendment is the pending business of the Senate, is it not, I inquire of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business of the Senate is the committee amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. All right, let us dispose of it.

Mr. DIXON. Let us get rid of it.

Mr. HATFIELD. And then we can go to any other amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I would be delighted to accommodate the Senator from Oregon in that fashion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

AMENDMENT NO. 1550

(Purpose: To provide the death penalty in the District of Columbia for a drug-related murder)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I had not intended to offer my amendment because of a belief that the subject matter it reaches was beyond the provision before us in the sense that it would be nongermane as legislating on appropriations. But, Mr. President, in light of the ruling that was imposed on the Chair by the action of the Senate, I believe the amendment that I had wanted to offer is now germane because with the expansion of the definition of germaneness I believe this amendment now qualifies.

Mr. President, let me make it clear what I am trying to do so people understand the importance of this issue. I also want to make it clear that we clearly have jurisdiction in this area. I am not going to take a long time. I am eager to get on with it, as I know my dear friend from Illinois is.

First of all, let me define the problem. For the last 3 years the Federal City, the District of Columbia, has seen the number of murders on its streets grow by an average 32 percent a year compounded for 3 years. The level of homicides in the Federal City is a national record and a national disgrace.

Mr. President, we in the Congress have a responsibility to make policy in the Federal City. The Constitution gives us exclusive legislation in all cases. Even when we moved to set into law the so-called home rule provision, we clearly reserved to the Congress the right to enact legislation at any time that we deemed it was appropriate.

Despite the explosion in the number of people who are killed in drug homicides on the streets of the District of Columbia, we find ourselves in a position where there is no effective deterrent. Where people are being killed, the person who is accused of the murder in some cases is being apprehended. We end up with long waits for trials. We end up with some people being sent to jail. Sentence is probated, people are being let out of jail because of overcrowding, and as a result this national tragedy continues.

Mr. President, the objective of my amendment is twofold. First, it is to set out concrete penalties and minimum mandatory sentences for murder related to a drug felony in the District of Columbia. And second, the objective is to put into place the availability of the death penalty where the court determines that that penalty is warranted.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 1550.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 57, at line 10, strike the word "term:" and insert the following: ⁶⁶ term. This section shall be effective May 15, 1990.

"SEC. . (a) It shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia to intentionally kill, or counsel, command, induce, procure, or cause the intentional killing of an individual during the commission of an offense involving a controlled substance.

"(b) A person who commits an offense describes in subsection (a) shall be sentenced to any term of imprisonment which shall not be less than 20 years, and which may be up to life imprisonment and the imposition or execution of such sentence shall not be suspended nor shall probation be granted nor shall the person be eligible for parole prior to serving the minimum sentence, or may be sentenced to death.

"(c) A person shall be subjected to the penalty of death for an offense under this section only if a hearing is held in accordance with the procedures provided in section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act."

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I want to make my germaneness argument now, and I will try to be brief.

Mr. President, on page 43, beginning on line 4 of H.R. 4404 in the House language section, we have funds made available which have not been authorized. Not only have these funds not been authorized, they have certainly not been authorized for a period of 2 years, so we are here legislating on an appropriations bill.

Second, Mr. President, we are legislating in an area relating to housing where these funds clearly are intended to be used as part of our ongoing Public Housing Program, where new regulations have been put into place by the Housing Secretary concerning drug felonies committed in public housing and our effort to rid public housing of illegal drug use.

Since the amendment which I have submitted is targeted at the general problem of drug murders, that amendment—by the stretched definition of germaneness established on the vote that we took earlier today—is germane because it amends a section where we are legislating on an appropriations bill, where the legislation is related to providing a new authority to expend funds; and where those funds are being expended in relation to drug abuse in public housing. We are addressing a facet of that drug problem related to effective deterrent, where the drug problem generates the tragic murder of our fellow citizens in the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I think this amendment is vitally important. I think the Nation demands that we take action in the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has been a test case in our resolve to deal with the problem of illegal drugs.

I think we are all disappointed with our lack of progress in this area. One of our problems has been that we have not had an effective deterrent because at the same time that the crime problem has expanded we have found ourselves in a position of seeing that the sentences being handed down by the courts of the District of Columbia are failing to deter drug violence. The District of Columbia does not have the death penalty. The District of Columbia does not have minimum mandatory sentences without parole for those who kill our fellow citizens in the commission of all drug related murders.

The amendment that I have sent to the desk is an amendment that establishes a minimum mandatory sentence to be imposed on those who are convicted of drug murders. This sentence is to be not subject to suspension or probation, and a person who is found guilty of a drug murder will not be eligible for parole prior to serving the minimum sentence, which is 20 years in prison.

In addition, we add the final deterrent, and that is the deterrent that, where there has been a murder related to a drug crime, we make available to the court the ultimate deterrent and remedy of capital punishment.

Mr. President, I believe that this amendment is vitally important. I think it is a national tragedy and shame that our Nation's Capital ranks at the top of the list in terms of the number of people who are killed senselessly every night while most of us are asleep.

I think it is vitally important that we move ahead in terms of setting into law a procedure that will allow us to deal with this problem.

Mr. President, I know there will be those who say that this is in the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia. Well, Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States in article 1, section 8, clause 17 gives exclusive jurisdiction of legislation in all cases involving the Federal City to the U.S. Congress, to us.

In addition, when we have exercised our authority to delegate in the so-called home rule provisions we have explicitly reserved our right to legislation in those areas where we believe that a national need existed. In the Federal City at this moment, we have literally hundreds of drug homicides that are under investigation or that are under prosecution. I believe that the people of the District of Columbia strongly support the amendment. It is our constitutional obligation to put in place the measures needed to protect the people who work and live in the Federal City. This amendment gives us the authority to do it.

Mr. President, as I said earlier, and I say this prior to yielding the floor, it had not been my intention to offer this provision at this time. I had intended to wait until we dealt with the authorizing bill. But we have moved far afield from the traditional area of appropriation. We have voted today to expand the parameters of germaneness, and I believe that this amendment is germane based on legislation in the House appropriation bill, and, therefore within the parameters that have been established by a vote here today. I have sent this amendment to the desk and I ask for its consideration. I urge my colleagues to provide for the District of Columbia the effective protection that this amendment will provide.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend.

The Senate is not in order. Those who have conversations not related to the business before the Senate will please adjourn to the Cloakroom.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I will not go back into a long history in explaining my efforts over the years about serving in the Senate and keeping the appropriations bill clear of the legislation which does nothing but bog down the appropriations process, and does not resolve the issues that usually are attached thereto.

I know that notwithstanding the recent vote—and I certainly agree with the Senator from Texas on how far we reduce the threshold of germaneness by that last vote on abortion. I did not participate in that outcome. But, nevertheless, I still think that there is a threshold at which we can still consider a legitimate role of germaneness.

I am going to make a motion on a matter here relating to rule XVI, challenging this amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. I do raise a point of order that this constitutes legislation on appropriation. I so raise this issue as a matter of under rule

XVI as constituting legislation on appropriation.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I raise the defense of germaneness. Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. I raise the following defense of germaneness. There is legislation on the appropriations bill that was adopted by the House that is now before us that relates to public housing and the drugs in public housing, and which sustains the defense of germaneness under the precedent that we set earlier today.

I argue that the amendment that I have presented is germane to this provision of the House bill in that the House bill contains legislation on an appropriation bill, where there has been no authorization, much less an authorization which is expanded for 2 years. These funds are clearly for purposes of ongoing programs that involve drug abuse, and the penalty which I propose to provide for the District of Columbia to deal with drug-related murders is within the parameters of the Constitution and is germane to this legislation.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For what purpose does the Senator seek recognition?

Mr. METZENBAUM. An inquiry of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing no objection, the Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the chair.

The Senator from Texas directed our attention to section page 43, and said that there is some reference therein to a matter of drugs. I see the reference to housing. I do not see any reference to drugs. Maybe I am overlooking something.

Would the Senator from Texas be good enough to assist?

Mr. GRAMM. I would be happy to respond to my dear colleague from Ohio. These funds are provided and will be used in part for an ongoing program initiated by the Secretary of HUD to rid public housing of drugs.

The amendment that I have sent to the desk strengthens the penalty for drug murders. I argue that, prior to the vote taken earlier today, my amendment would possibly have been nongermane. But given the new germaneness standards which we have established, I believe that my amendment is germane.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am asking whether or not there is somewhere in this bill—the Senator said page 43—that there is some reference to drugs. The Senator is telling me something about the housing funds that are to be found on page 43; saying they are used in some manner for drugs. I do not think it says that in the legislation. The Senator may know that. I do not know that. I do not even know it is a fact.

So I guess I would have to ask the Senator how he gets the drug subject into this issue at this point?

Mr. GRAMM. If my colleague will yield, I can answer it in a straightforward way.

First of all, the provision that says the funds will be available until September 30, 1991, is legislation on an appropriations bill. That is some of the House legislative language to which my argument is tied.

Second, the funds that are provided—$72 billion—for the use by HUD in low-income housing projects, will be used in part for working relationships between HUD and local law enforcement, including law enforcement in the District of Columbia related to drug abuse, drug felons in public housing and similar, related initiatives, such as programs to reduce drug generated violence in public housing.

My amendment is related to drug murders in the District of Columbia, and that is the connection. Prior to the vote we cast earlier today, my amendment would have in all probability been nongermane. But I would argue that based on the precedent we have set here today which has stretched germaneness, that my amendment is in fact, germane, given the purpose to which these funds which are provided with an authorization on an appropriations bill, will be put.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Chair yield for a question?

The Senator from Ohio wants to know whether or not the matter that is presently before us, the amendment of the Senator from Texas deal with respect to the issue of germaneness, is a debatable motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of germaneness is not debatable. Therefore, this discussion is going on because there was no objection when the Chair asked if there was objection; that is, it is going on by consent.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I want to say to my colleague from Texas I am totally in disagreement, insofar as attempting to put a capital punishment on this piece of legislation.

I have the floor.

Mr. GRAMM. If he will yield one more time——

Mr. METZENBAUM. No. I want the Senator to respect my right to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. What concerns me is that the Senator from Texas is known as one of the great States' righters in this country, and what he is doing with this amendment is totally violating the concept of States' rights notwithstanding the fact that the District of Columbia is not a State. But notwithstanding that, he is attempting to legislate for this community the laws that should govern its conduct.

I am as aware as the Senator from Texas is of what has happened in the District of Columbia, and I am as concerned and shocked as he is. For us to come out on the floor of the U.S. Senate and take a piece of legislation that does not have one single word that I have found—and the Senator has not directed me to anything—about the subject of drugs, and inject into it this very controversial issue to do with capital punishment, I think is highly inappropriate for one who believes that States ought to have the right to make their own laws, and I assume the District ought to have the right to make its own laws.

I would really hope that the Senator from Texas would not attempt to press this issue, which he himself knows is not germane.

I see the Senator from Kansas on the floor. I know he previously had addressed himself to the whole question of the propriety of abortion, capital punishment and other issues coming before us. I know I did not vote with him on the previous vote, but notwithstanding that, I think the whole issue of capital punishment goes much further afield than does the issue of abortion.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Let me make it clear that earlier today the Senator from Washington asked that the ruling of the Chair be overturned based on language on page 36, lines 11 through 15, which never mention the word "abortion" and where any relationship to abortion is certainly at least as tenuous and as thin as the relationship which I have proposed here.

It is not this Senator who has spoken on the issue of germaneness and the narrowness of that issue. It is, instead, this great body, which has by majority vote said that such an amendment was germane to the language on page 36, lines 11 through 15.

Finally, Mr. President, in response to my colleague from Ohio, the Constitution gives us clear authority in all legislative cases, the exclusive authority in the Federal City, the District of Columbia. This is not a State. This is a legal entity under the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Congress, and if we do not help to stop the murder of our fellow citizens by drug thugs on the streets of Washington it will not be stopped.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will yield, he did mention my name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. I wanted to state to the Senator from Texas that the particular reference to section 353 of the Public Health Service Act is a particular statute which does contain the language that provides a close connection. I also wanted to indicate to the Senator, who is the ranking member of the District of Columbia Committee, if he wishes to bring that matter up when we hold our markup session on that, or before the Government Operations Committee, the Senator would be certain that he will have the opportunity to do so. The connection was just much closer, that is all, if the Senator reads section 353 of the Public Health Services Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know we are probably speaking in circles, because somebody could object. But I indicated earlier to the Senator from Ohio that we should not be here debating abortion or the death penalty. What I hope we can do—and I cannot do it now unless the point of order is withdrawn—is postpone the committee amendment until May 3. That is next Thursday. That would take care of the debate on abortion and the debate on the death penalty, and we can get back to some of the business that we would like to accomplish here; that is, to pass the supplemental, and aid to Panama and to Nicaragua, and we can resolve these issues later.

I make a parliamentary inquiry: Is it now permissible to move to postpone the committee amendment until next Thursday, May 3?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the Senate Republican leader that regarding the question raised about the motion to postpone at this point in business, this is a question without precedential ruling. It has never been put before the Senate before.

The Chair further advises the Senate Republican leader that if he does press this motion to postpone, that the Chair would put the question on the Senate for a decision as to whether or not it is appropriate; and appropriateness of the motion would be put to the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. The majority leader just entered the Chamber. I am not trying to surprise anybody. I am trying to find a way to avoid debating the death penalty and abortion and get back to the supplemental. One thought that occurred to me was just to postpone the debate until next Thursday. If we are not on the bill, we will do it some other time. If we are still on the bill, we can go back and debate abortion and the death penalty.

It is my hope that we can make some progress. We have not made much today, because we have been discussing, since about 1 o'clock, abortion and now we are on the death penalty. That would take two or three votes.

I will yield to the distinguished majority leader. This is not a leadership motion. I would not offer a leadership motion. But it is a motion that can be made by any Member, and the motion would be simply to postpone the pending committee amendment until Thursday, May 3. Then we can go on with the amendment of the Senator from Illinois and other amendments that may be offered yet this afternoon and set these aside. If we finish the bill, we will never hear from them again on this particular issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I was not aware of this prior to my just entering the Senate Chamber a moment ago, and I would like to have the opportunity to discuss it with the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DIXON. If the distinguished majority leader will yield, may I make a further comment while we are on Murphy's rules. Let me just make an observation, Mr. President. I hope some of my colleagues will consider somewhat cogent, in support of what the majority leader has said.

I have been here all day while we debated abortion. I wanted to offer an amendment to the bill involving an issue relative to the bill and an issue in the bill concerning money in this bill, and because the committee amendment is pending, I am out of order so that we can now return from the debate on abortion to the death penalty in the District of Columbia.

This Senator would like to talk about the bill. I would like to know whether we cannot get some semblance of procedural good sense around here, rather than anarchy, so that we can deal with the subject matter of this piece of legislation. To the extent that the distinguished leaders might accomplish that purpose, I believe it would serve a useful end result.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has suggested the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] is recognized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I make an inquiry as to the parliamentary situation we have at the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a point of order that has been raised as to the amendment of the Senator from Texas on grounds that it is legislation on an appropriations bill. The Senator from Texas has asserted a defense of germaneness.

Mr. HATFIELD. What is the question now pending before the body?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The defense of germaneness is the question before the Chair. The Chair will examine the proffered language of the amendment to come to a ruling on this question and the Chair is now in the process of reviewing it.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my point of order that I made, and to be back to square one where the Senator from Texas has merely proposed his amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? Is the amendment in the second degree now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The amendment in the second degree of the Senator from Texas is now pending.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have taken these steps in consultation with the author of the amendment. I would like now at this point to move to table the Senator's amendment in the second degree to the second committee amendment.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN], and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORE). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 60, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 71 Leg.]

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1550 was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, are we now on the question of the death penalty proposal made by the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, now that we are on the substantive issue, I want to say this is a very important notebook that I want to acquaint all of my colleagues with. It is put out by the National Coalition To Abolish the Death Penalty, and it deals with substantive issues like arbitrariness, cost of execution, crime rate statistics, death qualification, deterrence, extraditions, general death penalty, innocence in death row, juveniles, and many other chapters.

I will read quickly, but I do want the Senate to be fully aware that we are dealing with a very serious issue here, and I am going to make every effort to make certain the Senate does not adopt this amendment in the second degree.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question without yielding his right to the floor?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DIXON. This Senator and others had obligations tonight of some importance, but we are prepared to stay to do what is necessary. Is my friend from Oregon telling me that if I stay tonight, I am going to have the distinct pleasure of hearing the Senator from Oregon enlighten us about every line, every comma, every period in that particular looseleaf binder he has just referenced in his earlier remarks?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, does the Senator suggest I should put this to a vote as to whether I should read this?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I request my colleague only answer this Senator's question.

Mr. HATFIELD. I am very happy to respond. I merely want to say I am prepared to debate this issue on its merits and at length. I am not in any way trying to hold up the Senate. I am willing to set this amendment aside, or the committee amendment aside, or the death penalty issue aside for other business of the Senate. But, until whatever the leadership wishes to do is announced, I shall proceed to read.

Mr. President, chapter I. And I will yield to the leadership at any moment the leadership wishes me to yield.

Mr. DOLE. How about Monday?

Mr. HATFIELD. "The arbitrariness."

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. Without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. We hope to be in a position to interject in just a few moments. In the meantime, I know we all look forward to hearing the Senator's dissertation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in this whole matter of the death penalty, the argument is being used that it is a deterrent, and that is the main argument we constantly hear from the Judiciary Committee and all these other enthusiasts for the death penalty; that it is a deterrent. We impose the death penalty and that discourages crime.

We have some very interesting statistics from the FBI. I think most people accept the FBI as a legitimate and authentic source to quote.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. May we have order in the Senate? I want to hear the Senator's discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order. Those Members in the aisles will please take seats. Members conversing will please cease audible conversation or go to the cloakrooms.

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the FBI has made an analysis of 50 States in the Union on the ratio of murders per 100,000, distinguishing between those States with the death penalty and those States without the death penalty. The average murder rate in the 37 States with the death penalty, 1986, was 7.46; 7.46 per 100,000. In the 13 States without the death penalty, the murder rate was 4.81 per 100,000, almost half as much as those States with the death penalty.

In 1987, the average murder rate in the 37 States with the death penalty was 6.94 percent while the States' average murder rate in the 13 States without the death penalty was 5.1 percent.

The most recent study on the relationship between the death penalty and homicide rates conducted for the United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in 1988 concluded that this research has failed to provide scientific proof that executions have a greater deterrent effect than life imprisonment. Such proof is unlikely to be forthcoming, and the evidence as a whole still gives no positive support to the so-called hypothesis of deterrence.

If the death penalty is truly a legitimate deterrent, which I think I have already disproven by the FBI statistics, then, as I indicated in a previous debate, we ought to maximize the deterrence by televising the executions. at prime time. That is how we then should act if we give any credibility or legitimacy to the theory of deterrence.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, may we have order, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if we still want to cling to the idea that there is any legitimacy or any evidence at all to support the argument of deterrence, then I think it is incumbent on us to maximize that factor to lower or to restrain the murder rate. I can think of nothing more effective, as far as broadcasting this kind of action, than televising it.

When I raised this question before in an argument or debate of the death penalty, people were in horror of the idea of televising of this macabre, this ghoulish action employed by States, of executing people. They did not want to see the smoke coming out of their ears and their eyes. They did not want to see those horrible descriptions of those who have witnessed executions coming into the lives, into the living rooms of the American people.

We want to hide the idea. We may say we are for the death penalty, but we do not want to see it. We do not want to be there. We do not want to be cognizant of the cruelty, the barbarity, the brutality, the dehumanizing of the sanctity of human life.

I am always concerned about how selective we are about the sanctity of life; are we not? It is interesting how we have been through these debates on abortion and we get so excited about the importance of life. Then we get into capital punishment and then we challenge it with, either from my point of view, sanctity; or its irrelevance.

I am not suggesting there is any virtue around this place in being consistent, but that is one of the reasons why I do oppose abortion, except for saving the life of the mother. That is why I do oppose the death penalty. That is why I do oppose war and all instrumentation of war. But I am not making that argument here on this issue at this time.

I think we ought to be honest with ourselves as to whether or not deterrence is enough of a reason, when the statistics contrariwise prove so vividly that deterrence is not actually evident between those States with capital punishment and those States without capital punishment.

Mr. President, we have faced this subject, of course, many times, and we probably will face it again. But it saddens me that we have to stop in the middle of an appropriations bill to argue a nonappropriations matter. But we have done it on a lot of other issues that are not really relevant to the appropriation matters. Two years ago it was the death penalty for drug related homicides; last fall the death penalty for terrorists acts; and now the death penalty for the District of Columbia.

It is always some variation to the theme that brings this matter to the floor. Support for the death penalty is the culmination of a primal urge for revenge and a search for simplistic solutions to gut-wrenching national problems. We are never going to eliminate the drug problem by merely saying let us execute all drug dealers, or even if we said all drug users. We have to address the root causes of these problems.

Nowhere is this trend more evident than in the bizarre and macabre gubernatorial campaigns in Texas, Florida, and California. I am here today to say, as I have said before, that the death penalty will not solve this Nation's violent crime epidemic. We are not really being honest with ourselves or with the public when we imply, or infer, or even explicitly state that the death penalty will do so. Violent crime is merely a symptom of our society's ills. Imposition of the death penalty only perpetuates the circle of violence and drags our society into a downward spiral of hate, revenge and vindictiveness.

No one deplores the acts of violent criminals more than I do. My opposition to the death penalty obviously does not mean that I grieve for the victims and their families and friends any less than the death penalty supporters.

But, is the death penalty the appropriate channel for our grief, for our anger? Clearly not. Government-sanctioned killing will not wipe the pain away any more than it will stop the violent crime.

Let us look at the facts. Throughout my tenure in this body, I have heard numerous arguments in favor of the death penalty, and I have heard them over and over and over again.

Very few of those arguments, however, have been supported by sound empirical evidence. Most of them are grounded in emotionalism. Instead of concrete descriptions of how capital punishment benefits our society, I hear some of my colleagues appeal almost exclusively to emotion, describing gruesome murders and horrendous acts of violence as a justification for the death penalty. Such arguments accomplish little, except to raise an emotional smoke screen by preventing us from seeing the real issues and making intelligent decisions.

Legislation to reestablish a Federal death penalty has been pending since the 93d Congress, and the difference between our debate now and then is that today we have a large body of data from which to draw our conclusions, and that data all denies any relevance of the death penalty to the commitment of crimes, vis-a-vis the statistics I have just recited. We cannot continue to use outdated data, preassumptions or presuppositions for emotional appeals to justify the death penalty. The old speeches must be left in the files, and we must evaluate the facts as they are known today.

It has been said if you hold unsound presuppositions, facts will make no difference at all and you will be able to create a world of your own, totally incapable of being touched by reality, for rhetoric becomes reality.

Many believe that a murderer forfeits his right to life. But what benefit to society does the death penalty carry with it? Even if some feel that these criminals deserve death, it is still ludicrous to implement this form of punishment if it does nothing to address the root causes of violent crime.

Mr. President, I do not speak here from theory and from philosphy. I speak also from very, very intimate practical experience. In 1958, I was the Republican candidate for Governor of my State and the Democratic incumbent Governor and I cochaired a repeal of the death penalty effort that we were making in that same election year. But we failed in getting the people or Oregon to repeal the death penalty. When I was elected Governor in November 1958, I inherited, I believe, eight people on death row. I want to say to all my colleagues, and I know others who are former Governors have probably faced the same experience, that I do not attempt to portray this experience as an exclusive experience, but I know many others who have been former Governors probably had a similar experience.

I feel very strongly about this issue as a nonlawyer and as one who understands the law both from philosophy and from a political science point of view. I had said in my campaign that unless the people of Oregon return the State to sanity and abolish the death penalty that I would be forced to uphold that law when I took my oath of office, even though I personally disagreed with it, for I do not believe that a public official should impose his personal whims when he has the responsibility to uphold, to implement the law without some empirical reason and data.

I said if there is new evidence, if there is any other reason to believe a mistrial had occurred, I would execute very quickly my commutation authority on those sitting on death row.

The first case came to my desk not very long after I was inaugurated. And there was absolutely no evidence of a mistrial, no additional evidence, no new evidence. There was not one excuse that my attorney could find for me to set aside the death penalty in this particular case.

I relate this because I am not sure I would do the same today as I did at that time. But, nevertheless, at that time, I let the law take its course, and the man was executed in the gas chamber.

Let me tell my colleagues part of the surroundings that happened there. We do not have a Governor's residence in our State. We had our own mortgaged house. But they insisted on stringing a special telephone into my home, for the execution was to take place at midnight and that telephone linked up to the warden of the penitentiary in the surrounding area of the death chamber. So that at the last moment I could call the warden, and say I have changed my mind, stopping the execution.

About quarter 'till midnight, the last written letter of the prisoner was delivered to me by hand at my home. I had to read that letter, that last appeal, and that, believe me, when the full course of one's life is in your lap, upon your decisionmaking alone, is a very lonely road. I wrestled and I went through every emotion known to humanity, I am sure, to try to decide what was the proper thing, As I say, I let the execution take place.

Many times I feel like and I have asked the Lord's forgiveness because I have felt very strongly that I should have done otherwise, but I cannot undo history. At the time, I felt it was the wise and the right action to take, no matter how difficult.

Fortunately, in one sense of the word, not for the victim, not for the prisoner who was executed, but for the other seven on death row—and a woman was next in line for my consideration—I made certain that this execution was fully and completely reported. I wanted as much graphic detail in the public press as possible. And I am happy to say, in the next opportunity at the ballot box, the people of Oregon were so repulsed by this action, they repealed the death penalty, and I immediately commuted all the sentences of those on death row.

I do not relate this for dramatics or for emphasis except to say that I do come to this issue out of experience in war where, in amphibious landing craft, in two of the bloodiest operations in the Pacific, where we took in the troops and brought out the dead, that I have seen how life has been wasted in war, how life is wasted by official sanction, how life is wasted in the abortion clinics of this country. Therefore, I speak today purely from the basis, in that sense, so my colleagues know where I am coming from, of either biases or prejudices based upon my own experiences and my own involvement.

Nevertheless, that is only one consideration, not for my colleagues to take but for me to take. But for my colleagues to consider and for me to consider is the empirical data. Does the death penalty serve a purpose? I submit to my colleagues, it does not. It does not. I think some of the practices today in our prisons and in our States and in our Nation, in jurisprudence and in criminal prosecution and implementation, too often translates into the fact that life imprisonment does not mean life imprisonment. I know that there are people who support the death penalty because they say a murderer is subject to parole within 5, 7, 10 years and he has really not served life in prison.

Senator LEVIN of Michigan, and I, who have been battling this together, in tandem, have submitted amendments mandating life imprisonment without the possibility of release as a substitute; mandatory life imprisonment, not subject to parole.

I have my reservations about that because I think sometimes you cut off all hope of any kind of regenerating of the spirit and mind, repentance and rehabilitation. With all of those factors, you sometimes destroy even the possibility of a rehabilitated person. But nevertheless, choosing amongst what we might call the lesser of two evils, I really feel we would adopt the mandatory sentence as against the death penalty and at least be a step up on the ladder of humanitarianism and civilization rather than this barbaric practice in which we engage now.

Deterrence, as I say, is so often used, as a rationale. In other studies from 1940 to 1986, which precede the data that I just reported a short time ago, sociologists William Bailey and Ruth Peterson examined homicide records to determine whether murder frequencies declined in response to the frequency of capital punishment. This study again indicated they looked for the short-term deterrence during the month in which the execution was carried out and the longer-term deterrence during the subsequent months, and they found that in neither case, neither in the short term nor in the long term, did these acts of execution have any impact as it related to the rates of crime before and after the events.

Bailey and Peterson took their analysis a step further, reasoning that the deterrent effect of executions might vary according to the amount of publicity that those executions received. But again they came up emptyhanded. They found no evidence that supported the conclusion that highly or moderately publicized executions deterred homicides.

Their study also examined homicide rates in States with and without the death penalty, as did the death penalty, as did the FBI studies, and the conclusion was residents of jurisdictions with capital punishment ran at that time, pre-1986, a slightly but significantly greater risk of being killed. And the FBI Uniform Crime Report supports the same conclusion as I indicated.

Not only is the death penalty not a deterrent but is enormously expensive to implement. We are always talking about the cost of life imprisonment as a substitute for the death penalty. Let us not assume that the death penalty in its application is inexpensive. Because of the necessary constitutional protections required in death penalty cases, such litigation is long and complex. Statistics show that it costs the taxpayers anywhere from two to six times as much to execute a person than it does to incarcerate him for life.

Let me repeat this because this always comes as a surprise. Statistics will show that the cost to the taxpayers is anywhere from two to six times as much or more to execute a person than it is to incarcerate that same person for life.

While the average cost of incarcerating a prisoner for 40 years is between $500,000 and $800,000, capital cases in Texas in 1988, cost $2 million each—$2 million each—an act that ended it all, as against life imprisonment being $400,000 to $800,000. Florida also has a study that taxpayers shelled out $57.2 million in 1988, to execute 18 people. That is even higher, amounting to well over $3 million per execution. It is estimated that Californians would save themselves $90 million per year by abolishing the death penalty.

Now, these are some of the cost accounting records relating to capital punishment.

We spend a lot of time on this floor talking about the importance of cost effectiveness, cost-benefit ratios, all those other measurements of money, project, and program. If our goal is to maximize the benefits we get from our crime fighting dollars, and I believe it is, we will not institute capital punishment. It is not cost effective. The death penalty is clearly not cost effective.

Think of what we could accomplish if we reordered our budget priorities in a way that empowers the poor, the hungry, the uneducated, the dispossessed, the minorities rather than wasting millions to execute people in a misguided effort to be tough on crime, while not spending the money to train people to hold meaningful jobs and reduce the odds of their becoming involved in crime, to give our police the infrastructure to fight crime, to treat drug addicts, to help the peasants in South America grow alternative crops to the crops that they grow now that feed the drug market, or to give more children a chance with Head Start. That is deterrence, Mr. President. That is deterrence, not executions, not capital punishment. This is the true deterrence.

Such efforts, however, take time and commitment, take vision. They require a long-term effort to address the causes, not the symptoms, and such efforts do not allow us to stand up to vote for the death penalty and beat our chests and pontificate about how tough we are on crime. Such efforts do not allow us to walk away and claim we have solved the problem of violent crime.

Mr. President, I have the feeling, and I believe others share this observation, that we go in cycles about this subject and this is one of those cycles where political benefit comes to those who are for capital punishment.

I will not get into the penalties or into other areas, but I find that there are election campaigns going on in parts of the country where capital punishment is the real hot button issue. Candidates are out vying one with the other, who is going to be tougher on capital punishment, who is going to be more brutal on capital punishment, who is going to be more extensive on capital punishment than the other candidate. Sometimes these candidates have just found this issue and have gone 180 degrees from what they previously held as a viewpoint on the issue. Wet the finger, put it in the air, and find out which way the wind is blowing.

I have read a lot of articles about those experts on the sideline and the columnists say about how the abortion issue has caused a lot of people to sort of rethink this issue as they are up for reelection and how many have waffled, and many have reversed their positions because the wet finger goes up in the air.

Well, I would like to see some analysis given to this issue of how many wet fingers are going up in the air today on the capital punishment question and where the political courage is of reversing their convictions and reversing their positions because of the wet finger in the air.

That is part of our political culture. I am not really being cynical, but merely raising this as a fact that is happening in our political life today. I think it would be very interesting to give some attention to how this is, rather, an issue that has now moved into the turmoil of politics and political campaigning.

We live in an imperfect world and human beings are fallable and I am one of them.

Our judgments are imperfect, and I am one of those who has had judgments that were imperfect. But there is one thing that is very, very specific. It does not vary one bit. And that is that death is final. We can make all the mistakes in the world, in spite of our jurisprudence, our trial procedures, all the other things. We have all read the cases of the person who is serving a term in prison. When the true culprit makes himself or herself known, 20 years, later they apologize and please the person. But had that been an execution, there is no one to apologize to or to restore their rights and their liberties.

One of these days, if this discussion continues on longer than I think it will or that I hope it will, I think we ought to address some of those facts about how many wrong executions have occurred. There are such facts—wrong executions but no way to correct them.

With all of our other imperfections, we have a chance to correct them along the way but not when death occurs in the gas chamber or on the gallows or in the electric chair or before the firing squad. That is final.

There is no way to correct human error, fallibility, human fallibility, and human imperfections. There is no margin of error, and no room for miscalculation. Death is final. I believe not only is it immoral for us to decide who lives and who dies, but because of our imperfections we are often incapable of making such decisions without making mistakes.

In this century alone, according to one study that I will just touch on, published in 1987, more than 350 people in the United States had been erroneously convicted of crimes potentially punishable by death—116 of those 350 people were sentenced to death, and 23 of them were actually executed. There was no margin for error for those 23. Some retribution, or some restitution, and other actions were able to be taken with the others, but not the 23. At least the 23 innocent lives were taken to satisfy the lust for revenge—23 innocent lives.

Being responsible for the taking of innocent human life is a terrible burden to bear, and no person should be put in the position where that possibility exists.

Mr. President, neither have our judgments improved over time. Indeed, our justice system shows sign of becoming less reliable in its meeting out of the death penalty. In the 2-year period, from 1987 to 1989 alone, those 2 years, at least 12 people who received the death sentences have been determined by the courts to be innocent. In a 2-year period, recent 2 years, 1987 to 1989, the people going through the whole judicial process, sentenced to death, and fortunately, enough time elapsed for the courts to reverse the action and prevent 23 innocent people from being executed.

Mr. President, I continue to be amazed and appalled by our fascination with the death penalty, particularly since a vast majority of the free world has rejected such a barbaric form of punishment. Among the Western democracies, the United States stands virtually alone in this regard. I often think about the great labels that we apply to ourselves, referring to the great Western civilization as if it were a superior civilization or of the great Western Judeo-Christian civilization as if we were somehow morally set apart by having served institutions that follow the Judeo-Christian religion.

Look at our actions. And I must confess to you that some of the meanest, nastiest letters I get condemning me for my views on capital punishment come from brothers in religion who spent the first part of the letter quoting Bible Scriptures and the second part of the letter telling me how vile a person I am for not supporting the death penalty, to remove from this Earth all of those who have vented God's law.

It is amazing how we can mix religion with political positions. I admit I have a religious conviction. I am not the actual ultimate judge. But I read the Scriptures, there was an order that came in the New Testament that substituted love for the law; forgiveness is the key to the Christian faith, forgiveness and redemption—forgiveness.

I therefore usually respond to some of these letters with a discussion that ends in no one being persuaded to the other person's point of view. But I do say that I do not like to lower and employ the name of God to support any political position that I take because I do not want God to have to be blamed for some of my political positions.

I think when you look through at the fact of these Western democracies, these Western Judeo-Christian civilizations and so forth, we had better look at capital punishment which has been abolished throughout Western Europe and in our own hemisphere. It has been eliminated in all but a few countries in the West. In fact, throughout the world, the trend since World War II has been toward elimination.

What do you think is going to happen in these new democracies in Eastern Europe? One of the first political actions they will take is to abolish capital punishment to show they have come out from the dictatorship's autocratic rules, godless, atheistic communism that rules their lives with all the execution squads at their beck and call. They will assure the world that their liberty has been assured and they will have taken these actions to abolish the capital punishment as some have done.

I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to thank my friend and colleague for his courtesy in yielding.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the distinguished Republican leader, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the ranking member, and with a number of other Senators.

We have worked out a schedule under which eight amendments would be considered on Monday. I am about to propound to the Senate an unanimous-consent agreement which, if obtained, would enable us to recess for the day and permit Senators, to the extent possible, to meet their obligations.

I apologize to all Senators who have been inconvenienced. But as you know, it is now a very difficult process to get this bill through. We hope we are going to be able to early next week.

I will propound the request now, and then will comment on the Monday schedule following that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending committee amendment and the other committee amendments be laid aside. When the Senate resumes consideration of H.R. 4404 on Monday, at noon, I ask that Senator DANFORTH be recognized to offer an amendment on court taxation, and that following the disposition of that amendment, the following Senators be recognized to offer the following amendments in the order listed.

Senator WIRTH, an amendment regarding savings and loans; Senator CONRAD, an amendment regarding drought disaster assistance; Senator DIXON, an amendment regarding the Air Force; Senator KOHL, an amendment regarding dropouts; Senator WILSON offering a possible second-degree amendment to Senator KOHL's amendment; Senator PRYOR, an amendment regarding wetlands, with Senator CHAFEE to offer a possible second-degree amendment to the Pryor amendment; then Senators SIMPSON and BAUCUS for an amendment regarding Yellowstone; and, then Senator WIRTH for an amendment regarding the U.N. environment program.

I further ask unanimous consent that no call for regular order serve to bring back either committee amendment until these amendments have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRYOR). Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object. Would the leader be good enough to advise as to whether it is his intention to bring each of those matters to a vote during the course of the day or to stack them for a vote at a later point in the day?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I am about to address following gaining the consent. It is my intention to stack them at the end of the day.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the leader be good enough to advise as to whether or not he has had an opportunity to discuss with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee the Danforth amendment which has to do with matters relative to the constitutional issue of court jurisdiction? I know Senator BIDEN has some interest, and the Senator from Ohio has an interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am advised by the majority floor staff that Senator BIDEN's staff has been notified that the amendment would be brought up at noon, and they have indicated that he would be present at that time. I have not personally discussed it with him.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I appreciate the majority leader's advice. Is the majority leader in a position to advise as to whether the Danforth amendment is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I am advised that it is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I appreciate the inquiry.

Mr. WIRTH. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, because the first Wirth amendment, S&L amendment, should be listed as the Wirth-Riegle amendment, and the United Nations amendment should be listed as the Wirth-Pell-Gore amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent request be altered accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I renew my request, as modified at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the unanimous-consent agreement follows:

Ordered, That on Monday, April 30, 1990, at 12 noon, when the Senate resumes consideration of H.R. 4404, the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill, the pending committee amendment, and the other committee amendment, be laid aside and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH) be recognized to offer his amendment on court taxation.

Ordered further, That following the disposition of the Danforth amendment, the following Senators be recognized to offer the following amendments: Wirth-Riegle, savings and loans; Conrad, drought disaster relief; Dixon, Air Force, Kohl, dropouts; Pryor, wetlands; Chafee, possible 2nd degree to Pryor wetlands amendment; Simpson-Baucus, Yellowstone; and Wirth-Pell-Gore, U.N. environmental program.

Ordered further, That no call for the regular order bring back the committee amendments until the listed amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, let me be a little more precise about the intended schedule for Monday so Senators may be aware. Although this agreement does not include time limitations, these amendments have been discussed in, I believe, every case, or almost every case, with the Senators directly, and we expect that the amendments will be considered at approximately the following times:

The Danforth amendment at noon, for approximately 1 hour.

The Wirth-Riegle S&L amendment at 1 p.m., for approximately 1 hour.

The Conrad amendment at 2 p.m., for approximately 1 hour.

The Dixon amendment at 3 p.m., for approximately 2 hours.

The Kohl dropout amendment at 5 p.m. I do not have an approximate time on that.

The Pryor wetlands amendment thereafter, and I do not have a precise time on that.

The Simpson-Baucus Yellowstone amendment thereafter. I do not have a time on that.

The Wirth-Gore U.N. environment amendment. I have no time on that.

We have been assured by these Senators that they will be present. This, obviously, will not work if Senators do not show up to offer their amendments. On both sides I commend the staff for the diligent effort in this regard. They have obtained these assurances directly from the Senators and their staffs.

It is my intention that the votes on these amendments that may be ordered on Monday not occur prior to 7 p.m.; that if the times follow approximately as anticipated—and obviously it will not occur precisely as we anticipate—that by about 7 we should be ready to vote on all of these amendments.

Therefore, Senators should be aware that on Monday evening, beginning at 7 p.m., there could be as many as 10 votes, since there are eight amendments with two possible second-degree amendments to them. So Senators should be aware of that and make their plans accordingly.

We have to make progress on this bill, and this enables us to discontinue our activities today and to make substantial progress at that time. And then we still, of course, have the problem of the two major controversial issues that remain before us, but we will have gone a long way to dealing with many pending amendments.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me underscore what the majority leader said. Senators have given us their personal commitments that they will be here and be prepared at the approximate times indicated by the majority leader. This was worked out to accommodate Senators on both sides, for Senators, who could not be here on Monday for votes until later in the day or to offer amendments until later in the day.

I know that my colleagues will support the leadership in the effort that we have made to accommodate everyone. I thank the majority leader. This may be a test case, and this may set a pattern for later agreements by the leadership. So people know now that they are responsible to show up, and they can avoid a lot of difficulty for other Members. If there is any time in between and the distinguished managers had amendments they could take, that could be slipped in.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how about including that if the offeror of the amendment is not there, one of the managers can offer the amendment in his place, barring some sickness or other legitimate excuse.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I might comment. I believe these are contested amendments, and while I think every one of the Senators would like to have the distinguished chairman of the committee arguing his case on his behalf, each probably wishes to at least address the subject himself to some degree.

As the distinguished Republican leader indicated, I hope this sets a pattern for the way we can do business that accommodates as many people as possible. As we have seen today and in the past, that can often be very difficult. So if the distinguished chairman would not mind, I would prefer to go forward on this basis, at least for this first time, and maybe include that at some later opportunity.

Mr. BYRD. May I inquire as to whether any of these are second-degree amendments?

Mr. MITCHELL. The amendments to be offered that I have identified are not, but they are subject to second-degree amendments. I have just been advised that my previous statement of a possible second-degree to the Kohl amendment will not occur. We were advised that was a possibility. Evidently, it will not now occur. I believe that Senator CHAFEE retains the right to have a possible second-degree to the Pryor amendment.

If I might add, that is possible to any of these amendments. We have not attempted to preclude them. I have merely identified those where we had been advised of possible second-degree amendments. No implication should exist that a Senator is precluded from offering a second-degree amendment to any of the others where there was no such implication.

Mr. BYRD. If I might have the Republican leader's attention, too, suppose a tabling motion is offered to one of these amendments and the Senate is going to have to wait until 7 o'clock to determine whether or not that tabling motion is agreed to, that means that if the tabling motion fails, the second-degree amendment could be offered at that time. If the tabling motion cannot be voted on until 7, what do we do, go on to the next amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct. That is obviously one of the potential defects. What would be my intention, then, if it failed, we would then follow to completion the rollcall votes scheduled and return to the subject matter of the pending amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection. I sympathize with the efforts and appreciate the efforts of both leaders to try and expedite this matter. They are doing the very best they can.

Mr. DOLE. If the majority leader would yield briefly, I say also to the chairman and the ranking Republican, the manager of the bill, I will take it upon myself on this side to try to make certain that our people show up. They have made a commitment to us, and we will try to see that they deliver on that.

There are no more votes, are there?

Mr. MITCHELL. There will not be any more votes.

I am advised in response to the question of the Senator from Ohio that regarding the Danforth sense-of-the-Senate amendment, that Senator SIMON has been advised and will be present, as well, along with Senator BIDEN.

So that should be adequately covered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. If I understand the Senator's first part of his motion, he moved to set aside both the remaining unresolved committee amendments, so any amendment becomes to the bill freestanding as a separate amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, and subject to amendment.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for cooperation. As the distinguished Republican leader indicated, we all hope this works out. It may help us in dealing with such matters in the future.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SELLING OF AMERICA: JAPAN AND THE SUPER 301 PROCESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, by April 30, the U.S. Trade Representative is required to identify and report to Congress U.S. trade liberalization priorities, including the priority practices which, when eliminated, have the most significant potential to increase U.S. exports. The U.S. Trade Representative is also required to identify the priority foreign countries whose trade practices are at issue.

What does this mean in plain English? It means that by the end of this month, Ambassador Carla Hills, the U.S. Trade Representative, must tell the Congress which countries engage in unfair trade practices. She must tell the Congress which unfair trade practices hurt America the most, and she must tell the Congress which trade practices, if eliminated, would do the most to enhance our ability to sell our goods overseas.

Mr. President, today Ambassador Hills announced that only India engages in trade practices that hurt America. I am utterly dismayed—and that is an understatement, utterly dismayed—given the persistence of our enormous trade deficit, that only one country, and that being India, engages in trade practices that impede American exports. And that one country engages in only two practices that impede our export sales.

I am astonished. No, Mr. President, I am thunderstruck; I am thunderstruck that the administration has determined that only one country and only two trade practices are set as priorities for liberalization. Only one country; only two practices. I guess that means that if we solve those two problems, the portion of our trade deficit attributable to unfair trade practices will be eliminated.

If you will excuse me, Mr. President, that boggles the imagination. What happens to Japan? What happens to Japan?

I understand in reading the polls that the American students are not very good on geography, and we are not teaching geography much in our schools any more. But I believe that any geographical map will still show that Japan is still on the map, and if there is a map that has to do with unfair trade practices, Japan will be very prominent on that map.

What happened to Japan? How did it slip off the map?

I am aware that in recent weeks, after long negotiations, the administration reached agreement on revision of Japan's exclusionary procurement policies on supercomputers and satellites; reached an agreement. And that is not the first agreement that we have reached with Japan. After intensive talks, we have reached an agreement on a variety of structural impediments in Japan's society that we believe impede our ability to sell American products in Japan.

These developments, whether or not in the light of history one can depend on them as far as the future is concerned, at least they were positive in nature.

I am glad that Japan has agreed—and it remains to be seen how much that means—I am glad that Japan has agreed to allow U.S. companies to bid on Japanese contracts for supercomputers and satellites; I am heartened by the agreement on structure impediments.

Again, I say, I salute the Japanese. They have it all over us when it comes to being tough negotiators, and they are very shrewd business people, and I can only admire them for that.

I wish I could say the same for our own, through Democratic and Republican administrations.

I am dismayed that the administration, though, has concluded that Japan should not be cited this year as a priority country for trade liberalization.

Mr. President, Japan will not allow 1 pound of American rice sold in Japan, I am advised. The Presiding Officer at this moment comes from the State of Arkansas, and it is rice-growing country down there in that neck of the woods. Nor will Japan allow us to even display American rice, I am told.

West Virginia is not a rice-growing State, but as I said, our hackles get up. We do not follow the rivers or mountains or latitudinal lines or longitudinal lines, or whatever, to establish where our patriotism ends and begins. Wherever it hurts America, it hurts West Virginians.

As Webster said—and I will repeat it again, I think it is twice in the same day; but it is good to recall Webster—when he spoke at the laying of the cornerstone at the Bunker Hill Monument—I will have to check my mental computer a little bit to see whether it was 1823 or 1825, but anyhow this is what he said:

Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country.

So if it is Arkansas, that is our country; if it is Mississippi, that is our country; if it is the rice-growing areas of this country, that is my country. If it is the coal-producing area of this country, I will establish my flag standard there. But it is still our country, America.

Now to be told that Japan will not even allow us to display American rice, will not allow 1 pound of American rice to be sold in Japan—those notes that have been handed to me, and I thought that was very worthwhile to interrupt this excellently prepared speech to take cognizance of those notes.

As the coauthor, along with the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] of the Super 301 provision of the Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, I believe the administration has failed to read this legislation closely. It has failed to understand that results are what counts.

Results are what counts, not just agreements. Agreements are worthwhile. We need to have agreements. But what are the results? Not just good intentions; results.

So, all of the cheering as we march down the field and we cross the 10-yard line and the 20-yard line and the 30 and then the 50 and on, all of these cheers from the grandstand do not mean anything. You have to put that score on the scoreboard. That is what counts.

So, all of the agreements are fine. All of the good intentions are fine. But results are what counts.

I believe we cannot afford to let Japan off the hook quite so easily. In not naming Japan, the administration has signaled that agreements and good intentions are sufficient. That is enough. Just state your good intentions, and we will just be satisfied. In not naming Japan, the administration has signaled that agreements and good intentions are sufficient. It is unfortunate, but accurate, I believe, to say that in the case of Japan, results have not often followed the direction outlined in trade agreements.

The semiconductor agreement is just one example of this tendency. The purpose of the Super 301 provision is to provide a process whereby U.S. trade liberalization targets are established, by practices and by country, with concrete measures of whether those targets are met. In the case of Japan, there has been no meaningful progress on the chief measure of whether there has been improvement in the opening of foreign markets to United States goods.

The bottom line, then, Mr. President, is have we been able to sell more to Japan? Have our exports to Japan increased? Has Japan opened its markets to United States products? Has Japan abandoned its unfair trade practices? I am sad to say, Mr. President, the answer is no. The Super 301 provision is grounded in results. Results, not just good intentions. Not agreements. Not kind words. Results.

Are we now able to sell more to Japan? Despite being named last year as a priority country, Japan's imports of United States goods have remained stagnant at roughly $4 billion a month through January 1990.

There was progress last year, Mr. President, but only in the months leading up to the naming of Japan as a priority country under Super 301. United States exports did increase in the early months of 1989. But once Japan was named a priority country, the progress stopped. No progress has been made since. It makes one kind of wonder, does it not?

To top it off, although the United States trade deficit fell sharply in February of this year, United States exports to Japan decreased to $3.8 billion. That means we were able to sell fewer goods to Japan this past February than we had sold each month since Japan was named a priority country under Super 301 last year. I do not consider this to be progress except in the wrong direction. It is not progress in the right direction.

So, Mr. President, I am more than just a little disappointed that the administration has let Japan off the hook. I believe it is essential that Japan understand that it is results, measured by export sales, that matter. Export sales over the past year are very revealing—there has been no progress. We have not been able to sell more of our goods to Japan.

I sincerely hope that the recent agreements, and hopefully one on wood products, will bring about increased United States exports to Japan. But until that happens and there are increased sales at the cash registers, Japan must remain our top priority for trade liberalization.

Agreements mean nothing until the results are in. And if the results do not follow, then the agreements are not worth the paper they are written on. Letting Japan off the hook is a serious mistake.

Mr. President, I think the Congress ought to take a look at this. I think the Congress ought to take a look at this in the interest of our own producers, our own manufacturers, our own farmers. And I hope the Congress will take a look at this, and I would hope there will be other progress.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator has certainly raised an issue of great concern to all of us, particularly those of us on the Pacific Coast, who are probably the primary trade partners with Japan. I want to say to the Senator that there is some good news on the horizon. I think some of our efforts are reaching a success point. For a number of years, Japan has been buying what we call squared logs from our area of the Northwest—Oregon, Washington. That is the first step in what is called a manufactured log. It is really sort of an artificial action, taken to comply with the law.

For some 20 years I have been, as the Senator knows, putting an amendment in the Appropriations Committee dealing with a ban on log exports from Federal public lands. Fifty-one percent of my State is owned by the Federal Government. The State of Oregon now, by its own actions, by the vote of the people, have asked us to authorize them to ban all sales of logs, not only to Japan, which is the major customer, but ban all sale of logs from State public lands. But out of the 3.7-billion-board feet that are exported into the foreign market in recent years from the Northwest, 2.9 billion are from private lands. That means that we are in a legal thicket, perhaps—at least I am told so by some attorneys—of trying to ban those exports from private lands, although there are those who feel we can.

The Senator has been talking about the unfairness and the uneven playing field toward American business people. Let me take that one step further.

To the Japanese consumer in Japan, in the housing, home-building area, he is paying more for materials that are bought in Oregon out of a log, raw material, shipped to Japan, manufactured into building materials in Japan, than if the Japanese bought manufactured wood materials from our State. That is hard to understand. The structural impediments that have maintained this uneven playing field are really costing the Japanese consumer more money.

I am happy to say, a few weeks ago, just before the public announcement, Ambassador Matsunaga, the former Japanese Ambassador in Washington and a man with whom I found great simpatico trying to resolve and work out these problems and who is now one of the chief negotiators representing Japan on these discussions, trying to eliminate some of these structural impediments, called me to say that they have made significant progress, that they hope to be able to finalize in the June meeting that has now subsequently been announced publicly, that would provide an opportunity for mill operators in Oregon and Washington to ship, not logs or raw material, but manufactured material that escalates the job potential in our area. At the same time it makes a more competitive market price for the Japanese themselves.

So, it has really been almost, as the Senator talked about, mindboggling. I agree some of the things the Senator read are mindboggling, but I think it is also mindboggling that the Japanese Government maintained certain trade restrictions that cost their own people more in trying to keep out American lumber or wood products.

I wanted to add that to the comments of my colleague.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, the distinguished Senator points out a very ironic fact. It is true that Japan will buy that which she cannot produce. She will buy it. We can export logs and wood products and other raw materials that Japan cannot produce itself. And I am glad to see that there are areas of our country, and areas across the trade board, where American exporters can make some headway in Japan.

But it is only there, I would say as a kind of general proposition, in those areas that American exporters do have something that kind of helps to balance off the rest of the sheet.

But I am talking about trade practices in general. I say to my colleague, my mind boggles with admiration for the Japanese, their ingenuity, their resourcefulness. They just take our trade negotiators' shirts, and that has been the case for a long time.

Mr. HATFIELD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

(Mr. BURDICK assumed the chair.)

Mr. HATFIELD. What happened to this great imagery that used to be written out, fiction and nonfiction both, about the Yankee nontrader, about the ingenuity of the early Americans to go into the world market dominated by the great powers and really come out with a pretty good deal?

Mr. BYRD. No question about it. They had the ingenuity, and the work product of the American tradesmen were superior. We need to get back to taking great pride in our products, trying to excel, as I was talking a little earlier today, not only in the classroom but in the workplace, pride in our products.

The technology that the Japanese use so well in so many instances orgiginates here in the United States. We develop the technology. We conduct the research, develop the technology with our very fine American brains, and then the Japanese pick up the technology and they commercialize it and they outsell us.

Through the kind of practices that they have so well developed, they will simply flood the markets here in the United States, undersell our products here at home, and undersell them if it means that the Japanese are selling them at a loss, because the Government in Japan stands behind the business people. It stands behind Japanese business. It gives them loans, gives them grants, gives them all kinds of advantages. They can undersell to the point that they lose. They do not make any profit. But they are willing to do that for a while in order to drive out the American manufacturer, the American producer and they have been very successful at it in one area after another.

I simply have to blame our own people for not seeing that, not standing up to that, not insisting, and our own selves for not taking the pride in our products to the extent, and being as ingenious and as assiduous and as persistent and as determined as are the Japanese. The Japanese recognized a long time ago something we had not recognized, and that is economic security is national security. That is really national strength. Economic security. We have helped the Japanese a great deal in those terms.

I simply close by saying I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon. He puts his finger right on the head of the nail, just like he does so often. We can blame ourselves for a lot of this. We do not have to come in second place. We still have the wherewithal to come in first place. As I have already said, this is not the first administration that has done it, but for some reason or other, we just do not understand the Japanese. It is a conservative society; it is a homogenous society and they are out there to win. They are out there looking for first place. They do not want second place or third place. It is first place, and they are demonstrating they are able to make it come about.

But we need some help from our own administration. It is beyond my comprehension to think that we do not cite Japan, only cite India.

There are other days and other opportunities to speak on this and other subjects.

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. I believe we have two amendments that have not been agreed upon. One by Senator BRADLEY. Has this been cleared, may I ask the distinguished manager? It is a VA-HUD amendment on the EPA lead demonstration project, and one for Senators HEINZ and SPECTER, HODAG funds extension. If these are cleared, we will dispose of them.

Mr. HATFIELD. They have been cleared.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

AMENDMENT NO. 1551

(Purpose: To provide an extension to the Beechwood Housing Development Grant project in Pittsburgh, PA)

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration, on behalf of Senators HEINZ and SPECTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], for Mr. HEINZ, for himself, and Mr. SPECTER, proposes an amendment numbered 1551.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 45, after line 10, insert:

Section 17(d)(4)(G) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be applicable to the Beechwood Towers Housing Development Grant project, number PA008HG401, through December 31, 1990, and any cancellation of the Grant resulting from the application of section 17(d)(4)(G) prior to December 31, 1990, shall be rescinded and the Grant restored to the project.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, basically this amendment would permit a housing project in Pittsburgh to continue to be able to use a housing development grant fund previously made by HUD. It does not in any way have a budgetary impact. Project sponsors experienced some unexpected delays, and this will merely make the moneys available on a continual basis. I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on this side, as I have already indicated, we are ready to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1551) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1552

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Mr. BRADLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 1552.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 45, after line 16, insert:

ABATEMENT, CONTROL AND COMPLIANCE

Of the funds appropriated under this head in the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Housing and Urban Development, and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act, 1990 (Public Law 101-144), $500,000 shall be available for a lead storage battery recycling pilot project for the state of New Jersey, to remain available until expended.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared by Senators MIKULSKI and GARN. It would earmark $500,000 for the recycling of batteries in the State of New Jersey. Currently, these batteries are frequently incinerated, placing harmful lead particles in the air. This incineration can result in harmful human lead ingestion at great expense to our health care system. Funds in the amendment will result in trying to develop safer and less expensive means of dealing with this source of lead. I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the chairman is correct. It has been cleared on this side of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1552) was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PALATINE POSTAL PROCESSING FACILITY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, a serious problem has arisen between the village of Palatine, IL, and the U.S. Postal Service. Originally, I had contemplated introducing an amendment to this bill which would prohibit the Postal Service from constructing a mall processing facility on the McDade site in that town. In deference to the desire of the chairman of the appropriations committee and the Senate leadership to avoid any unnecessary amendments on the supplemental bill, I will refrain from offering my amendment at this time. It is my intention, however, to see this unfortunate situation resolved—to see it resolved quickly and fairly.

Mr. President, I want to make it clear to all concerned with the acquisition and development of the proposed postal site that the final location of this facility remains quite uncertain.

To reinforce the concern of the Senate on this matter, I would request the assurances of my friend, the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, that he will watch this issue and will consider my request, if made, during consideration of the fiscal year 1991 Treasury, Postal Service and general government appropriations bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I respond to the senior Senator from Illinois that I would be willing to work with him on this matter. I would hope and expect that the Service and the community could work together this year to facilitate a decision which responds to the concerns of all parties involved. If the Senator from Illinois sponsors an amendment on this subject in fiscal year 1991, I would certainly be willing to consider his amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I thank the chairman of the committee. This matter is of great importance to the people of Palatine. The village opposes construction of the facility on the McDade site because it is a commercial site which can generate over $2 million in annual tax revenues. Let me assure the distinguished chairman, however, that this is not a case of the "not in my backyard" syndrome. The village has proposed building the facility on an adjacent site, the Brandt site. To the extent that the value of the McDade property exceeds the value of the Brandt site, and to reimburse the service for the costs of redesign and relocation, the village and the developer are prepared to pay the Service over $3 million. The overwhelming majority of the citizens that live in the village, and even live next to the Brandt site, favor the switch.

When all these facts are reviewed, I am confident the Postal Service will see the benefits and will develop the Brandt site.

BIDEN AMENDMENT TO SUPPLEMENTAL FUNDING FOR NATIONAL CRIME INFORMATION CENTER [NCIC]

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, earlier today I intended to offer an amendment to provide $17 million to the Federal Bureau of Investigation to upgrade the FBI's National Crime Information Center [NCIC].

NCIC is literally the single most important weapon in the arsenal of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies. NCIC is an advanced computer system that links the more than 16,000 law enforcement agencies in the United States. Specifically, NCIC collects, analyzes, and stores information on wanted fugitives, stolen cars, missing children, and illegal weapons.

Every day, almost 1,000,000 requests are processed by NCIC for Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies at a cost of about 3 cents per inquiry. The accomplishments of NCIC speak for themselves. In 1988, NCIC helped to locate: 132,000 wanted persons; 33,740 missing children; and more than $1.1 billion in stolen property.

The NCIC system, however, is more than an effective tool for law enforcement. It is also a critical tool for officer safety, as important as the officer's bullet proof vest or sidearm. Every time a police officer makes a traffic stop—the most dangerous police stop—the officer checks NCIC before approaching the vehicle to see if the car might harbor wanted or dangerous persons.

This additional money is needed because the current NCIC system is approaching its limit. NCIC's 20-year-old technology is simply inadequate to handle the dramatic increase in the number of inquiries from Federal, State and local agencies, along with an increase in the number of wanted person and stolen property files in the system.

Originally, my amendment would have transferred $17 million to the FBI to implement the first phase of this 5-year upgrade to NCIC, the so-called NCIC 2000 project. These funds are needed to purchase new hardware and to develop a state-of-the-art software program. These funds would have been off set from the Pentagon's procurement budget, which will total approximately $150 billion this year.

I will not offer my amendment today. If it came to a straight up-or-down vote to fund this critically needed law enforcement project by taking $17 million from the Pentagon's $150 billion procurement budget, I believe that the Senate would agree to my amendment.

Unfortunately, a point of order under the Senate rules could be raised against my amendment, which requires a super-majority of 60 votes to waive. And I am a realist. Getting a 60-vote majority, particularly against the Appropriations Committee, is unlikely. So I will withdrawn my amendment today.

However, I still intend to fight to fund the NCIC 2000 project in the regular fiscal 1991 budget. In particular, I would like to see $17 million of the $372 million that will be deposited in the Justice Department's asset forfeiture fund next year used for NCIC 2000.

Under current law, the Justice Department can already use forfeiture funds to buy computers and related hardware to track cases. NCIC provides critical investigative support in these cases. I think it would be entirely appropriate to require the Justice Department to put NCIC 2000 at the top of the list of projects that will be funded from the forfeiture fund.

I look forward to working on this with my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the Justice Department. I know he is a strong supporter of this project, as he is for law enforcement generally.

SUPPORT FOR ADDITIONAL CENSUS BUREAU FUNDING

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that the supplemental appropriations package that is before the Senate at this time includes $110 million of additional funding for the Bureau of the Census. I commend the members of the Appropriations Committee for their hard work on this legislation, and for acknowledging the necessity for adequately funding the Census Bureau.

Due to a lower than expected mail response rate and across-the-board budget cuts, the Census Bureau has suffered from a serious budgetary shortfall. Without the additional $110 million included in the supplemental appropriations bill, the Census Bureau would be faced with some very difficult problems. Much of their planned coverage improvement efforts would have to be cut back or eliminated, and certain of their other operations may have to be prematurely discontinued or altered in such a way as to make the accuracy and usefulness of the data questionable.

The Census Bureau was expecting and relying upon a 70 percent mail response rate. As of the last estimate, the mail response rate was only 63 percent. At an estimated $10 million cost for every 1 percent short of the projected 70 percent mail response rate, an additional amount of approximately $70 million is necessary to properly enumerate those households that did not return their forms. In addition, it is necessary to compensate for the reduced productivity experienced due to the higher workload caused by the lower mail response rate. It is of great concern that there is sufficient funding to allow for the households that did not respond through the mail to be accurately enumerated.

Conducting the 1990 Census is an enormous undertaking. The degree of success with which it is accomplished will have implications that reach forward through the next decade. Census data are used for many purposes such as distributing State and Federal funds to those places which need them, planning adequate services in communities, and of course, apportioning seats in the U.S. House of Representatives. To use inaccurate information for these purposes would be extremely detrimental to the well-being of our Nation.

In order to successfully carry out the census, sufficient funding is essential. Without sufficient funding, I am concerned that the Census Bureau will be forced to make shortsighted management decisions which will result in a less accurate census. The Census Bureau must be able to follow through with its plans for coverage improvement programs, and other operations which will add to the accuracy of the figures. To abandon those operations at this late stage would certainly damage the integrity of the census process. Earlier this year there was concern about the elimination of the Vacant/Delete Program specifically. I feel that this is a worthwhile program and the additional funding provided for in the supplemental appropriations package will ensure that this program will be carried out. The Vacant/Delete program is expected to add 2 million persons to the census count—many of whom are minorities. This is of particular importance because minorities have historically suffered the devastating and far reaching impact of an undercount.

I hope that the Census Bureau has done the best possible job so far. I would hope that with the additional funding provided for in the supplemental appropriations bill, the 1990 Census will be carried out in a timely and efficient manner.

Again, I applaud the Appropriations Committee on their work on this legislation, and I offer my strong support for the provision for additional funding for the Bureau of the Census.

TECHNICAL CORRECTION—LAS VEGAS, NM, RAILWAY OVERPASS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the dire emergency supplemental appropriations bill contains a technical correction amendment to release funding for construction of the Las Vegas, NM, railway overpass project. Without a doubt, this is a project that requires immediate attention for safety reasons. The problem stems from slow moving trains on tracks that run through the middle of the city of Las Vegas. This creates a very serious safety condition. We have, in fact, had public testimony reporting on school children actually crawling under moving train cars to cross the track. This, of course, is simply unacceptable. In addition, the tremendous amount of rail traffic makes the possibility of an emergency vehicle being impeded a very real concern.

Unfortunately, language in the last year's transportation appropriations bill inadvertently limited the funding for this project to preliminary engineering. It was always our intent that the funding would be available for construction purposes and had, in fact, appropriated enough for the entire job. This provision makes the necessary correction by stating clearly that the funds are to be made available for construction, so that this needed safety project can proceed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POLITICAL PARTICIPATION BY FEDERAL CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have previously discussed with the distinguished Republican leader my intention to proceed to consideration of S. 135, which is the Hatch Act, and then to file a cloture motion and to seek, I anticipate, unanimous consent that the cloture vote occur on the motion to proceed next Tuesday evening.

This is legislation on which there is some disagreement and, as has been my practice, I made clear my intentions in this regard to the distinguished Republican leader several days ago. It is my hope that by setting a cloture vote Tuesday evening, we will be able to complete action on the supplemental appropriations bill prior to that time. This will give us all day Monday and all day Tuesday to complete action on that. Then we will have a cloture vote on the motion to proceed to the Hatch Act reform on Tuesday evening. The acting Republican leader is aware of this.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order 295, S. 135, the Hatch Act reform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion and the motion is debatable.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the cloture motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of S. 135, a bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to restore to Federal civilian employees their right to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation, to protect such employees from improper political solicitations, and for other purposes.

George Mitchell, John Glenn, Tom Daschle, Jim Sasser, Patrick Leahy, Alan J. Dixon, Charles S. Robb, Paul Simon, Frank R. Lautenberg, Herb Kohl, David Pryor, Wendell Ford, D.K. Inouye, Dennis DeConcini, J.J. Exon, Bob Kerrey.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, may I say for the Record I concur with the majority leader's statement, and I have been instructed by the Republican leader to support this rather complicated and unusual procedure to serve a most difficult situation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to proceed to Calendar Order 295, S. 135, the Hatch Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the cloture motion just filed occur next Tuesday at 7 p.m. and that the mandatory live quorum be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MARKING THE FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR DISASTER

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, April 26 marked the fourth anniversary of the devastating nuclear disaster that took place in Chernobyl. Even though 4 years have passed, there is still a great deal of pain and suffering. Part of the reason is because the Soviet Government has been slow in releasing accurate information about what really happened. The world scientific community needs to know the facts to better understand and treat the illnesses of the people who were affected. Some information has been made available, but not enough. Much of the disturbing news about Chernobyl comes from journalists who have toured the area.

Photographs in the April 9 issue of Time magazine are the first pictures to be seen by the world and it is not a pretty sight. These photographs were taken within the past 4 months and they show young children still living in contaminated towns.

Levels of radioactivity are still nine times as high as the acceptable limits. Animals are being born horribly deformed.

One of the questions that is still unanswered is: How many people are we talking about? How many people have been affected by this terrible explosion?

Well, the Soviets have always told us that only 31 died from the accident, but the Moscow News reported in November of 1989 that 250 people died. A recent high level U.S. scientific panel study came up with even more shocking news: they predict that "the number of people expected to die from cancers caused by the reactor explosion at Chernobyl will be at least four times greater than previously estimated. Instead of the projected 17,400 fatal cancers throughout the Northern Hemisphere, the actual number of deaths from Chernobyl may be over 70,000."

There are hundreds of thousands of people in Ukraine still living in high radiation areas who are still, after 4 years, not receiving adequate medical attention. The poisoning of the land has created dire health problems and economic devastation.

The world can no longer tolerate Soviet refusal to fully disclose information about a disaster that affects not only Soviet citizens, particularly Ukrainians and Byelorussians, but people throughout the world. The Ukrainian Minister of Health said in an April 24 Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty broadcast that "many of the problems that have arisen today are a direct result to either official secrecy or misinformation after the accident." This is intolerable.

So today, on behalf of the victims of Chernobyl, I ask that we not forget the people who are suffering from this tragic event. And I ask the Soviet Government to give us an honest account of what really happened on April 26, 1986.

And I ask the Soviet Government to provide more help to the victims of Chernobyl. I understand that the Soviet Legislature is due to consider a proposed $26 billion emergency program to help people in affected areas. We will be watching for the results of this legislation in the Soviet Union with a great deal of interest.

Also, I was pleased to hear that there was a 24 hour telethon on Soviet television yesterday, to raise money for victims to Chernobyl. With current cost estimates for Chernobyl running as high as $358 billion, we need to help these people out as much as we can.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, yesterday, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee submitted a concurrent resolution relating to human rights violations against the Albanian ethnic minority in Yugoslavia. I am a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 124.

We have seen dramatic changes throughout Eastern Europe over the past 5 months. Only a year ago, democracy and freedom were faint hopes in the hearts of the people of Eastern Europe. But today, the dream of democracy has begun to turn into a reality for millions and millions of people.

Last weekend, the people of Croatia, in Yugoslavia, voted in the first democratic multiparty elections in over 40 years. Like the people of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, and East Germany, the people of Croatia have voted for a future of freedom.

Everywhere in Eastern and Central Europe, freedom seems to move like a tidal wave, sweeping away decades of tyranny and repression.

Everywhere, that is except the Serbian Republic of Yugoslavia. A few days ago, the Serbian authorities lifted a state of emergency which was instituted in the province of Kosova in February of last year. That is a welcome step—but by itself it means little.

Chinese authorities lifted the state of emergency they imposed at the time of the Tiananmen affair. Would anyone argue that any semblance of free expression or justice has returned to the People's Republic of China?

Even more to the point, the brutalization and repression of ethnic Albanians by Serbia started long before the state of emergency was imposed. And, our concern about the perpetuation of those policies of repression has not ended because the state of emergency has been lifted.

Earlier this year, over 30 Albanians were killed, and countless hundreds arrested and imprisoned without charge during prodemocracy demonstrations in Kosova. Arbitrary arrests and violent harassment of Albanians marked the state of emergency period.

But, the suffering of the Albanian people did not end there. Thousands of Albanians have lost their jobs—because they are Albanians and because they want democracy.

Albanian media have been shut down, and journalists and broadcasters gagged. Repression has reached the schools, too; teachers have been fired and disciplined, and the teaching of the Albanian language has been severely curtailed.

Mr. President, the state of emergency has been lifted by the Republic of Serbia, but the human rights abuses continue. That is why this resolution was introduced in the Senate and in the House. The Congress must speak out on this matter.

This concurrent resolution urges the administration to take concrete steps to communicate the deep concern of the United States Congress with respect to the systematic human rights abuses against the Albanian population in Yugoslavia.

Moreover, it requests that the President prohibit Export-Import Bank loans or credit guarantees to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, where these are intended for projects in the Republic of Serbia, until there is substantial improvement in the human rights situation and until all citizens of Yugoslavia are afforded equal rights.

This resolution does not request that economic benefits be witheld from the other republics, such as Slovenia and Croatia, which are making visible and substantial strides toward democracy.

The Government of Yugoslavia is a signatory of the Helsinki Final Act, and as such it has an obligation to ensure the fundamental freedoms and human rights of all people who live within Yugoslavia—regardless of their ethnicity.

Mr. President, the Albanian people in Yugoslavia have suffered for a long time. As Americans, I believe we must do all we can to promote human rights, freedom, and democracy throughout the world, for all nations large and small.

THE LATE ROBERT BREEN, 1909–90

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, on March 31 of this year, an outstanding Minnesotan, who contributed much to the theatrical heritage of Minnesota and of the Nation, died in New York.

Robert Breen was an innovator and an artist, a person of great dedication and skill who had his roots in Minnesota and, not incidentally, shared my alma mater, St. John's Prep School at Collegeville.

His love of theater and determination to make it available to a variety of artists and patrons led him to establish the theater at the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, MN. But that was just the beginning of efforts that would have nationwide impact. His experiment in theater led to the foundation of the Federal theater project which became the basis for reactivating the American National Theater and Academy, chartered by Congress in 1935.

I would like to honor the accomplishments of this former Minnesotan, by entering into the RECORD his obituary as it appeared in Variety on April 11, 1990.

There being no objection, the obituary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Variety, Apr. 11, 1990]

ROBERT BREEN

Robert Breen, 80, actor, director and producer of many theatrical productions, died March 31 of Alzheimer's disease.

Born in Hibbing, Minn., he grew up in St. Cloud, where his father, Henry, built the Breen Hotel. Robert attended St. John's Academy in St. Cloud, then studied at the U. of Iowa, where he made his first appearance, in 1931, in a presentation of "Ten Nights In A Bar Room." He also appeared in several other collegiate and regional theater ventures.

He returned to Minnesota where, at age 22, he was asked to establish the theater at the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul.

In 1934, Breen was awarded federal funds as part of an experiment that led to the foundation of the Federal Theater Project. He and his wife, Wilva Davis, formed the Chicago unit of the Federal Theater, the first in the country.

In 1939 he came to New York and during World War II served as a sergeant in the Air Force.

After the war Breen returned to New York. He and the late Robert Porterfield, of the Abingdon, Va., Barter Theater, discussed the National Theater Foundation Plan, which became the basis, in 1946, of the reactivated American National Theater and Academy, a dormant organization chartered by Congress in 1935.

Breen became ANTA's first executive director, with Wilva Davis as his assistant. He created and was general director of the ANTA Experimental Theater, the ANTA Album productions and the ANTA Play Series. He initiated the Intl. Theater Institute.

From 1947-51, Breen produced 25 plays for limited runs. Writers included Bertolt Brecht ("Galileo"), Jerome Moross and John LaTouche ("Ballet Ballads") and Jan de Hartog ("Skipper Next To God"). Stars such as Charles Laughton and John Garfield appeared for Equity minimum.

Many of the shows went on to success in regional theaters.

Breen also returned to the stage, in the title role of "Hamlet," in a State Theater of Virginia revival. In 1949, at the invitation of the Danish government, he produced the play and repeated the part at its supposed setting, Kronburg Castle, Elsinore, Denmark, for the Hamlet Festival. He secured U.S. State Dept. assistance and transportation from the U.S. Air Force. He was awarded one of three Hamlet medals by the Danes for his interpretation of the role.

The ANTA Play Series, under Breen's supervision, included productions of "The Tower Beyond Tragedy" with Judith Anderson, "The Cellar And The Well," a hit revival of "Twentieth Century" with Jose Ferrer and Gloria Swanson. "The House Of Bernarda Alba" with Katina Paxinou. "Peer Gynt," "The Little Blue Light" with Arlene Francis, Melvyn Douglas and Burgess Meredith, "Peer Gynt" with John Garfield, "Mary Rose" and "Getting Married."

The series also brought the Louis Jouvet company and its Parisian performance of "L'Ecole des femmes" to Broadway.

Before leaving ANTA in 1951, he convened the first National Theater Assembly of professional, community and educational groups in 1951 to form a national American theater. His foundation plan led ultimately to the establishment of the National Endowment for the Arts in 1965.

Also in 1951 he arranged with the State Dept. for American participation in the first Berlin Festival. That included performances of "Oklahoma," "Medea," the Hall Johnson Choir, the Juilliard String Quartet and Angna Enters.

In the 1950s, Breen revived "Porgy And Bess" in partnership with financier Blevins Davis. He directed and coproduced the Gershwin classic, which had a record 305-performance run at the old Ziegfeld Theater, New York.

The production toured internationally from 1952-56, playing in 29 countries and 89 cities. It was seen in the U.S., Canada, South and Central America, London and most of the principal cities on the Continent and the Soviet Union, North Africa and the Middle East. Truman Capote accompanied the tour to the USSR and wrote an account of it, "The Muses Are Heard," which appeared in the New Yorker and then in book form.

Survived by his wife and two stepsons.

SENATOR DOMENICI PARTICIPATES IN SCIENCE EDUCATION CONFERENCE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, Senator DOMENICI is necessarily absent today. He is in New Mexico sponsoring a Science Education Conference. Teachers from all over New Mexico had been invited. He also invited Dr. Luther Williams, senior science advisor at the National Science Foundation to share his ideas with New Mexico's educators. Others participating include scientific experts from Sandia and Los Alamos Laboratories and academics from New Mexico's universities.

The goal is a simple, but critical one: To help teachers teach better and to help students learn more, especially in the area of science. The seminar will explore ways for better coordination of resources and the development of new initiatives to encourage more students to do well in science education. This is exactly the kind of education outreach that America needs in order to be competitive.

Senator DOMENICI put this conference together as part of his ongoing commitment to education excellence. He has spent a great deal of time working on ways to keep children at risk from dropping out; developing ways to improve vocational education; and working on the particular challenges that face young Hispanic and other minority students.

In spite of our late session last night, the Senator from New Mexico was eager to catch the first plane to Albuquerque this morning so that he could spend most of today and Saturday working on education issues affecting his State and the country.

AMBASSADOR CHIC HECHT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to say a few words this morning about a former colleague of ours—Senator Chic Hecht of Nevada—who has taken up the challenge of respresenting our country as Ambassador to The Bahamas.

In his years in the Senate, I always admired the diplomacy and cooperative spirit with which Chic addressed the many issues before our Nation. His convictions were clear and well reasoned, and he retained a willingness to work with others to forge mutually acceptable solutions. Today, those diplomatic skills will be tested in his capacity as Ambassador. Our relations with

The Bahamas not only involve areas of common interest and agreement but also touch upon some difficult issues, such as the actions needed to eliminate shipment of drugs through Bahamian waters and airspace. He will have to craft a balanced approach that promotes solutions on those questions that sometimes divide us without creating resentments that undermine those common interests that unite us.

Today, his actions as Ambassador are reaffirming the confidence many of us have expressed in his talents. As evidence of his bright prospects, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial that appeared in the Nassau Guardian on March 3, 1990, that takes note of the positive start our former colleague has already made in this respect.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Nassau Guardian, Mar. 3, 1990]

THE CHIC HECHT APPROACH

For whatever it is worth, it appears early in the game that the United States Ambassador to The Bahamas, Mr. Chic Hecht will have warmer relations with the Bahamian Government than his predecessor.

A low key individual who has made it clear he will not be making any waves, Mr. Hecht took a giant step towards cementing a good image with the powers that be in an address before the Bahamian Women's Club of Freeport on Monday past.

The approach Mr. Hecht is taking is one of conviction that this country is doing a great job in maintaining a fine relationship with the United States. In fact he stated as much in a lead story in the Freeport News this past Tuesday.

"I don't think there is another country anywhere in the world that has a better relationship with the United States of America than the Commonwealth of The Bahamas," he was quoted.

If this particular sentiment is conveyed to the State Department, the road to certification for The Bahamas should be that much easier. The suspicion of inaccurate information on The Bahamas being "officially" communicated to the State Department might well diminish during Mr. Hecht's tenure here.

He seems already to have impressed the Minister of National Security and former Attorney-General, Mr. Paul Adderley who often appears to be at odds with certain American officials. Mr. Adderley has indicated that so far he has a good feeling about Mr. Hecht.

So perhaps, Mr. Hecht might be able to thaw out the relationship and warm up the frigid areas between his Embassy and The Bahamas Government. All that glitters is not gold however and it is quite likely that at some point issues will come up to test severely the growing bond which is developing between Mr. Hecht and the Government.

There are extradition matters and the view of other American officials on our cooperative efforts which will place him firmly in the middle of the two parties. How he responds when these instances come up, will determine more profoundly just how he is categorized by the government.

We think it is beneficial for all concerned if the American Embassy here and the government have a relationship where there is great understanding of the respective roles to be played. The American Embassy has shown an interest in reaching out beyond drug-fighting to help Bahamians in other spheres of our society.

There is a conscientiousness demonstrated constantly in the development of young Bahamians. Mr. Hecht reemphasised that trend during his address in Freeport.

He stressed the need to properly educate the children of the nation so that in the future they would be on par with their peers around the world in a variety of "skills."

"In my opinion, education is most important for the youth of any country. Give the kids a good education, so they can compete worldwide with the skills they need because every year, technology changes in all of our countries. Family values have to be instilled in the home, religion has to be instilled in the home and this is the type of education that we need, said Mr. Hecht.

Presently the Embassy has a number of programmes which provide exposure and educational opportunities for Bahamians from every walk of life. It could be that in his own soft-touch manner, Ambassador Hecht will be able to boost the image of The Bahamas even in the eyes of our staunchest American critics.

One thing is certain, the government appears much more comfortable with the present ambassador than his predecessor.

HAVING THE MASS-MAIL COSTS PRINTED IN THE RECORD

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on January 25, 1990, I submitted the summary tabulation of the mass-mail costs of the Senate for the first quarter of this fiscal year for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pursuant to Senate Resolution 212. Today I am submitting the report for the second quarter, for the period January 1 through March 31, 1990. This report sets forth the mass-mail volumes and costs for each Senator and each other office of the Senate for the quarter. The costs are total costs, including postage, paper, and production costs. The population figures used for the per capita calculations are from the State Population and Household Estimates: July 1, 1989, issued March 1990 by the Bureau of the Census.

In addition, Mr. President, I am requesting that a report from the U.S. Postal Service for the second quarter also be included in the RECORD. This report is required by the act making appropriations for the legislative branch for fiscal year 1990. Under that act, as soon as practicable after the close of the second quarter of the fiscal year, the Postal Service is required to submit to the Clerk of the House, the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards, the House Committee on House Administration, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration a statement of the postage costs for the House and the Senate, respectively, for the first half of the year. The Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards and the House Committee on House Administration are required to consider promulgating such regulations for the House of Representatives as may be necessary to ensure that postage expenses for official mail for the House do not exceed the amount appropriated for that purpose, and the Senate Rules Committee is required to do the same for the Senate.

Mr. President, I am pleased to advise my colleagues that the Postal Service is projecting a surplus of approximately $6 million in the Senate official mail account for this fiscal year. The Senate expenditures for the first two quarters show restraint and fiscal responsibility by this body, and I compliment my colleagues. If this practice continues, and I am confident it will, the Senate will spend less on postage in fiscal year 1990 than the amount appropriated. The Senate policy on official mail works. This report reflects what many of us have been saying for years. The Senate has shown restraint on official mail, and the separate account now reflects the Senate's frugal spending.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to mention that the Rules Committee has scheduled a hearing on May 10 regarding the Senate's mail cost control procedures. The procedures that the Senate is now operating under are set forth in Senate Resolution 212, agreed to November 19, 1989. At the time Senate Resolution 212 was agreed to, it was amended to be effective for this fiscal year only. The Rules Committee agreed to hold hearings on this policy before its floor consideration for fiscal year 1991. Senators will be receiving shortly a letter from me and from Senator STEVENS, the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, advising them of the hearing and inviting their advice and comments regarding the Senate mail cost control procedures.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two reports be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. POSTAL SERVICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE CONTROLLER,
Washington, DC, April 24, 1990.

Hon. WENDELL H. FORD,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Detailed data on franked mail usage by the U.S. Senate for the second Postal Quarter, Fiscal Year 1990, is enclosed. Total postage and fees for the quarter is $3,140,625.

A summary of Senate franked mail usage based upon the first two Postal Quarters of actual data for Fiscal Year 1990 is as follows:

Volume	45,441,998
Revenue per piece	$0.1519
Revenue	$6,901,432.00
Provisional payments (prorated to March 9, 1990)	$10,443,097.00
Excess in provisional payments	$3,541,665.00

The first two Postal Quarter results, when projected to an annual figure based upon historical trends for Senate franked mail, provide the following adjusted estimates for fiscal year 1990:

Volume	115,628,494
Revenue per piece	$0.1533
Total revenue	$17,725,848.00
Current appropriation	$23,688,000.00
Estimated surplus	$5,962,152.00

A copy of the comparable report for the U.S. House of Representatives is also enclosed.

If you or your staff have any questions, please call Tom Galgano of my staff on 268-3255.

Sincerely,

JAMES S. STANFORD,
General Manager, Official and International Mail Accounting Division, Office of Accounting, Washington, DC.

THE DEATH OF FORMER OHIO SENATOR FRANK LAUSCHE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to my former colleague and friend, Frank Lausche. For those of us who had the pleasure of knowing him and working closely with him, Frank Lausche's death leaves a void in our lives. He was a man of personal integrity and principle, who always put the needs of his country ahead of partisan politics.

Senator Lausche was 1 of 10 children of parents who came to this country as teenagers from Slovenia, which is now part of Yugoslavia. Frank Lausche's father died when he was only 12, and he got a job lighting gas street lamps for only $2 a week. Later, he helped his mother in the wine shop and cafe that she ran.

When World War I broke out, he went to Army Officers Training School and became a second lieutenant. After the war, he signed a contract to play professional baseball, but then decided to go to law school instead. Baseball's loss turned out to be our country's gain. He worked his way through law school, graduating second in his class at the John Marshall School of Law in Cleveland. He became a top trial lawyer, and then entered politics. He was appointed a municipal judge in 1931 and was elected to the county court in 1936, where he became known for being tough on crime.

He was elected mayor in 1941 and was reelected in 1943 with a then record 71 percent of the vote. The next year, he became the first Catholic ever elected Governor of Ohio. After being defeated 2 years later, he won the Governor's job back in 1948. He was elected three more times after that. As governor, he was widely praised as a strong conservationist after he initiated a large reforestation program in Ohio in the 1950's.

In 1956, Frank Lausche was elected to the Senate for the first of two terms. In the Senate, he gained a reputation for voting his conscience. He put his country ahead of his party, and he called on others to do the same. Mr. President, I know the full Senate—especially those who served with him or who knew him—joins me and my wife Nancy in extending our heart-felt sympathies to his surviving sister, Josephine Lausche Welf of Cleveland, and other surviving members of his family.

I ask unanimous consent that an article appearing in the Washington Post be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 22, 1990]

FRANK LAUSCHE, OHIO SENATOR, 5-TERM GOVERNOR, DIES AT 94

(By Martin Weil)

Frank J. Lausche, 94, a former Democratic senator from Ohio who also served five terms as governor of his state and was known as a colorful maverick who often strayed from the party fold, died yesterday at the Slovene Home for the Aged in his native Cleveland.

A son of immigrants, Sen. Lausche was a rumpled six-footer who read poetry and had played professional baseball. He worked his way through law school, excelled at oratory and showed a warm, personal touch that made him for years one of his state's most popular vote-getters.

A Democrat who often took conservative positions and was said to act frequently as though he were a Republican, Sen. Lausche long appeared immune to party discipline. Without clear ties to a powerful machine or special interest groups, he appeared to thrive through the strength of his personality.

In a state with a strong Republican tradition, he succeeded as a Democrat through a militant frugality, a nonpartisan approach to many issues, and the evident sincerity with which he called on constituents to "cast selfishness aside and vote for the good of your state and your country."

Sen. Lausche, who first ran for elective office in the 1920s, and had been a trial court judge and mayor of Cleveland, was mentioned in 1956 as a possible candidate for the Democratic nomination for president.

A sister-in-law, Antonia Lausche, said the two-term senator, who had remained in the Washington area after leaving office in 1969, died of congestive heart failure. She said he had entered a hospital here in the first week of January and was flown to Cleveland in February.

Visitors to his Bethesda home noted that his mind was very sharp, the sister-in-law said, but that his health was failing steadily in recent years.

Frank John Lausche was one of 10 children of Louis and Frances Milavec Lausche, who came to the United States as teenagers from Slovenia, now part of Yugoslavia.

After his father died, the 12-year-old Lausche got his first steady job, lighting gas street lamps for $2 a week. Later, he helped his mother in the wine shop and cafe that she ran.

Teenage athletic prowess won him a job in 1916 as third baseman with a minor league baseball team in Duluth, Minn., and in 1917 he played for a team in Lawrence, Mass. When the United States entered World War I, he went to Army officers' training school and became a second lieutenant.

After military service, he was on his way to Atlanta with another baseball contract in his pocket when the family decided that his proper destination was law school.

Clerking in a law firm by day, attending classes by night, he graduated second in his class at the John Marshall School of law in Cleveland. While becoming a top trial lawyer in the 1920s, he became a political district leader in the same neighborhood where he had carried out his lamplighting duties.

After two unsuccessful runs for the state legislature, he gave up politics until 1931, when his support of a mayoral candidate won him appointment as a municipal judge. Elected in 1936 to a county court, he became known for coming down hard on gambling and crime, and in 1941 he ran for mayor.

He won that race, and his reelection campaign in 1943 netted him 71 percent of the vote, then a record, and helped set his eye on the statehouse. Undeterred by warnings that no Catholic had ever been elected Ohio's governor, he won that post in 1944.

After being defeated for reelection in 1946, he won the job back in 1948, and was returned to the state Capitol three more times.

His solid record as governor included achievements as a conservationist. He was credited with a reforestation program that planted 27 million trees and with gaining passage of a bill requiring eastern Ohio's strip miners to plant over the land they mined.

In 1955, the year after the U.S. Supreme Court overturned school segregation, he strongly endorsed the decision in a message to the Ohio legislature, saying, "We simply cannot live as a free people if we . . . chip away from any member of our society the guarantees given to him by the Lord . . . and then reaffirmed . . . in our Constitution."

In 1956, he defeated incumbent Sen. George R. Bender (R-Ohio) and came to Capitol Hill, tantalizing political observers for some time before he made it clear that when the Senate was organized, he would line up with the Democrats.

Nevertheless, Sen. Lausche's support for President Eisenhower had been no secret before he ran for the Senate and was not disguised when he took his seat.

During the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, Sen. Lausche frequently opposed White House-backed measures, and continued to oppose what he viewed as fiscal excess or insufficient skepticism in foreign policy.

He voted against establishing the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and against ratifying the nuclear test ban treaty in 1963. He also criticized proposals for a 1963 tax cut, and pronounced himself as "not in accord, in these times of fiscal stringency, with . . . spending money for the installation in the Washington Zoo of the elephant, platypuses and manatees, moose and scores of other rare animals," in 1962.

However, he voted for Medicare and for the 1964 and 1965 Civil Rights acts, as he had for earlier civil rights measures.

Early in the Vietnam War he supported the Johnson administration's foreign policy, but his support began to wane in 1968. In March of that year, he proposed that the Senate repeal the Tonkin Gulf resolution.

In 1968, opposed by the Ohio AFL-CIO and the Democratic state committee, Sen. Lausche was defeated for renomination in the Ohio primary.

His wife, the former Jane Sheal, whom he married in 1928, died in 1981.

In recent years, living alone in Bethesda, his sister-in-law said, he continued to "read his poetry [Robert Burns was his favorite] and his Bible."

Survivors include a sister, Josephine Lausche Welf of Cleveland.

S. 2530—ROTH DEFENSE REBATE

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, yesterday I came to this floor to outline my proposal to match the defense budget with changing defense needs. It's clear that the reduced Soviet threat will result in substantial savings to the government—or what many are calling a peace dividend. Now the question arises—who should receive the dividend.

Some see this as a difficult question. I do not.

Since the end of World War II, the American taxpayer has been called upon to finance the cold war. Valiantly, they have accepted the burden of our country's and our allies' defense—often paying increased taxes in order to insure our nations safety. And, quite frankly, this expense has at times been made by sacrificing our country's ability to compete with the allies whose defense burden is relatively low by comparison.

With this in mind, Mr. President, the answer is clear: The taxpayers have paid their dues to the defense of the nation and if a portion of those funds are no longer needed for that purpose, then they should be returned to the taxpayers. And this is my objective today—to introduce a plan that will return to the taxpayers the money that is rightfully theirs.

My plan would lower income taxes for modest and middle-income taxpayers by reducing their rates. For high-income taxpayers, the rates would remain the same. Today there is bipartisan agreement that lower- and middle-income working class Americans are taxed too much—largely because of higher Social Security payroll taxes. Many have advocated a payroll tax pay cut as a result. But Americans do not want Congress to mess around with Social Security, because if it does then our children and children's children will be carrying the burden, and Americans want to carry their own weight. This is exactly what my proposal would do.

The bottom bracket, currently set at 15 percent would be reduced to 12 percent. This amounts to a 20-percent income tax reduction for lower and modest income Americans. For a working couple with taxable income of $20,000, this would be a 20-percent cut equal to $600, while a couple earning $30,000 would save $900 in Federal income tax—reducing their burden from $4,500 to $3,600. This rate reduction would more than offset the 1977 Social Security tax increase and their acceleration in 1983.

The next bracket, the 28-percent bracket, would be cut to 25 percent. This would amount to a 10.7-percent rate reduction—coupled with the benefit of the bottom bracket reduction—this would amount to a 14- to 18-percent tax cut for middle-income taxpayers—or a tax bill savings of about $1,500 for a couple earning $50,000.

For those above the so-called bubble, their taxes would not change. Thus, for the wealthiest taxpayers there would be no tax cut.

This tax plan would reduce the tax burden on middle income taxpayers—across the board—no special interests and no spending proposals to benefit a particular constituency. These are taxpayers already pressed by property tax, state income taxes, Federal income taxes, payroll taxes. These are taxpayers who are faced with a variety of penalties built into the tax code—like the marriage penalty, the earnings test, taxes on Social Security benefits, loss of the benefits of the personel exemption because of inflation, and high-payroll taxes without any tax deduction.

However, the largest tax benefit would go to those in the lowest tax bracket.

Now, some inside the beltway many think the idea of giving taxpayers back their hard earned money may seem nothing short of outrageous. They may say, "Surely, Congress in its wisdom, can find some worthy cause to spend this money on." Frankly, I believe the projected budget of $1.5 trillion in the mid-1990's will be sufficient to meet our national needs. Within this enormous level of Federal resources we can do a much better job at setting priorities in keeping with the changing nature of our society. Congressional spending is limited only by the level of tax revenues and the maximum politically acceptable deficit. If the revenues are available, the money will be spent—some have already spent this so-called peace dividend 10 or 15 times already.

I believe that if Congress is going to undertake new spending, or even target money for deficit reduction, then it should be required to prioritize needs rather than slide by on the windfall of peace.

I have long maintained that the problem in America is not that Americans are undertaxed, but that Congress spends too much. Through most of the last half of this century, taxes and spending have been approximately equal to 18 or 19 percent of gross national product. However, in recent decades Federal spending, as a percent of GNP, has increased and now stands at its current level of 22 percent. This spending spree has got to stop, and I am proposing a plan to return these resources back to the taxpayers, from which they came.

A tax cut would allow taxpayers to spend their money as they see fit, not how Congress sees fit. Workers would see their payroll tax increase more than offset by the personal tax cut, reducing the tax penalty on work. Middle income taxpayers and especially spouses would also have enhanced work incentive, as well as relief from other taxes. Small unincorporated businesses and farmers would have more capital to save and invest. More productive resources would be devoted to production, leading to a larger economy and a higher standard of living.

Many will argue that this savings should be dedicated to the deficit. But we all know what Congress does with a windfall. I instituted a study in the Joint Economic Committee which found that for every dollar of tax increases during the 1980's, Congress spent $1.58. This would suggest that using the windfall for deficit reduction would most likely increase rather than reduce the deficit as the spending spirit it induces runs unchecked by the dividend's limitations. We would find Congressmen spending two and three times what the defense savings would allow.

I would like to stress that my bill does nothing to change the deficit reduction schedule under Gramm-Rudman. This plan complies with Gramm-Rudman and is deficit neutral. When that law was passed, no one expected the benefit that results from restructuring our Armed Forces during this time of change. Thus the tax refund is appropriate as a result of the restructuring, and we should continue on the course of reducing the deficit under Gramm-Rudman. I'm simply saying that rather than allow Congress and the special interest groups to get their hands on this money, we should give it back to those who paid it. And my bill benefits all but the top 5 percent of the wage earners in this country—with the low-income workers benefitting the most.

As far as the Social Security surplus is concerned—I agree that it should be taken off of the budget for Gramm-Rudman purposes. But I do not believe we should delay these tax cuts because of this problem. They are separate, and I am paying for the tax cut through dollars that relate to general spending. What my plan does is completely outside the issue of the Social Security System.

In short, the burden of Government on the economy will be lightened by cutting both defense spending and personal tax rates. The overtaxed low- and middle-income families will be better off keeping more of their own money for their own purposes. If Congress wants new programs, then Congress will have to find a way independent of the defense budget to pay for them. I believe no one is in a better position than the American family to determine for themselves their own destiny and how to pay for education, housing, health costs, and other important family goals.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 2530 as introduced yesterday be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2530

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE: AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Defense Tax Rebate Act".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

TITLE I—INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. RATE REDUCTIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) through (e) of section 1 (relating to tax imposed on individuals) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING JOINT RETURNS AND SURVIVING SPOUSES.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of—

"(1) every married individual (as defined in section 7703) who makes a single return jointly with his spouse under section 6013, and

"(2) every surviving spouse (as defined in section 2(a)), a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $32,450	12% of taxable income.
Over $32,450 but not over $78,400.	$3,894, plus 25% of the excess over $32,450.
Over $78,400	$15,381.50, plus 28% of the excess over $78,400.

"(b) HEADS OF HOUSEHOLD.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every head of household (as defined in section 2(b)) a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $26,050	12 percent of taxable income.
Over $26,050 but not over $67,200.	$3,126, plus 25 percent of the excess over $26,050.
Over $67,200	$13,413.50, plus 28 percent of the excess over $67,200.

"(C) UNMARRIED INDIVIDUAL (OTHER THAN SURVIVING SPOUSES AND HEADS OF HOUSEHOLDS).—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every individual (other than a surviving spouse as defined in section 2(a) or the head of a household as defined as in section 2(b)) who is not a married individual (as defined in section 7703) a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $19,450	12 percent of taxable income.
Over $19,450 but not over $47,050.	$2,334, plus 25 percent of the excess over $19,450.
Over $47,050	$9,234, plus 28 percent of the excess over $47,050.

"(d) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of every married individual (as defined in section 7703) who does not make a single return jointly with his spouse under section 6013, a tax determined in accordance with following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $16,225	12 percent of taxable income.
Over $16,225 but not over $39,200.	$1,947 plus 25 percent of the excess over $16,225.
Over $39,200	$7,690.75, plus 28 percent of the excess over $39,200.

"(e) ESTATE AND TRUSTS.—There is hereby imposed on the taxable income of—

"(1) every estate, and

"(2) every trust,

taxable under this subsection a tax determined in accordance with the following table:

"If taxable income is:	The tax is:
Not over $5,450	12 percent of taxable income.
Over $5,450 but not over $13,500.	$654, plus 25 percent of the excess over $5,450.
Over $13,500	$2,666.50, plus 28 percent of the excess over $13,500.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990, except that the tax tables added by such amendments—

(1) shall be adjusted under section 1(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to inflation adjustments); and

(2) shall be adjusted under section 1(k) of such code (relating to phase-in of tables) as added by section 102.

SEC. 102. PHASE-IN OF RATE REDUCTIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) TAX RATES FOR YEARS BEGINNING IN 1991 THROUGH 1995.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of taxable years beginning in 1991 through 1995, each time the Secretary prescibes tables under subsection (f) for taxable years beginning in such calendar years, the Secretary shall—

"(A) adjust the 12 and 25 percent rates of tax applicable to each rate bracket by substituting for each the percentage determined as if—

"(i) the substitute percentage in effect for the preceding calendar year were in effect for the portion of such taxable year preceding October 1 of the calendar year; and

"(ii) the substitute percentage for the calendar year were in effect for the portion of such taxable year on and after October 1 of the calendar year; and

"(B) adjust the amounts setting forth the tax to the extent necessary to reflect the adjustments in the rates of tax under subparagraph (A).

"(2) SUBSTITUTE PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the substitute percentage shall be determined as follows:

"(A) In the case of the 12 percent rate of tax, the substitute percentage is:

1991	14.5
1992	14
1993	13.5
1994	13
1995	12.5

"(B) In the case of the 25 percent rate of tax, the substitute percentage is:

1991	27.5
1992	27
1993	26.5
1994	26
1995	25.5."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 103. WITHHOLDING TABLES.

Section 3402(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) CHANGES MADE BY DEFENSE TAX REBATE ACT.—Notwithstanding the provisions of this subsection, the Secretary shall modify the tables and procedures under paragraph (1) to reflect the amendments made by sections 101 and 102 of the Defense Tax Rebate Act and such modifications shall take effect on October 1 of calendar years 1991 through 1995 as if there were a ½ percentage point reduction in the applicable rates of tax on each such date."

TITLE II—DETERMINATION OF DEFENSE BUDGET OUTLAYS.

(a) DETERMINATION.—The Secretary of the Treasury, after consultation with the Secretary of Defense, shall determine for each fiscal year if—

(1) the reductions in actual defense budget outlays for such fiscal year, are less than

(2) the reductions in Federal revenues for such fiscal year by reason of the amendments made by Title I of this Act.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—If the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the amount under subsection (a)(1) is less than the amount determined under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary shall report to the Congress such amount and shall specify the rates of tax which would be required to be in effect during the fiscal year to make up such deficit.

THE B-2 BOMBER

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, yesterday Secretary Cheney presented the results of his major aircraft review of the House and Senate Armed Services Committee. In response to the dramatic changes taking place in the world today, the Defense Department has decided to cut the number of B-2's it plans to buy to 75.

The Pentagon is finally beginning to see the light. The decision to scale back the B-2 program underscores the fact that we do not need the B-2—not 132, not 75, the 16 we have is more than enough.

Secretary Cheney is clutching at straws to keep the B-2 alive. Simply put: This plane has no mission. There was nothing magic about the 132 planes the Air Force insisted it needed and there is nothing magic about this new number of 75. Our nuclear deterrent is robust without the B-2. Under the worst case scenario we would still have more than 8,000 warheads. And, the assertion that we need this plane because of its conventional capabilities begs the question—why should we risk a B-2 on a conventional mission that could be completed at far less risk with other aircraft.

I am also troubled by the decision to proceed with even one more plane when we have completed less than one percent of the testing on this aircraft. We should hold off on further procurement until we know what this overpriced plane can and cannot do.

S. 2009, the B-2 termination bill, legislation I introduced earlier this year with Senator Mr. LEAHY, would halt further production of the B-2 beyond the 16 planes in various stages of production. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

Last year, Secretary Cheney himself told us not to "nickel and dime" the B-2. Well, the Pentagon's much-awaited review will cost us more than a few nickels and dimes. This "reduction" will still cost us over $60 billion—at over $800 million per plane the cost of each plane continues to soar—and that does not include the billions for operating a fleet of B-2's.

The Warsaw Pact is dead, but the behemoth bureaucracy at the Pentagon is makinbg over a half-hearted attempt to reflect this new reality in our defense budgets.

FUNDING FOR MEASLES OUTBREAK CONTROL

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the fiscal year 1990 Supplemental Appropriations bill includes a total of $35.3 million for expanding measles vaccinations activities—$31.5 million of which would be new money. I congratulate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. BYRD, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor and Health and Human Services, Mr. HARKIN and, especially, the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. BUMPERS, for their compassion and foresight in including this funding.

Mr. President, my State of California has been particularly hard hit by the measles epidemic. As many as 4,000 cases of measles have occurred in California during the first three and a half months of this year, resulting in at least 28 deaths. Because of the severity of the epidemic in California, I contacted the Appropriations Committee to urge that $35 million be made available for measles control. I ask unanimous consent that the text of my letter to the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor and Health and Human Services, Mr. HARKIN, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The most essential step we must take is to stop the outbreaks of measles. That means identifying where they are occurring and vaccinating all individuals who have been exposed to the measles virus. Twelve million dollars of this funding would be used for this purpose.

Mr. President, it is also urgent that we take steps to prevent the outbreaks from occurring in the first place, and the funding in this bill provides us with a real opportunity to get ahead of the epidemic. The bill provides $23.5 million for the purchase of a second dose immunization for preschoolers and young people of college-entry age. The Centers for Disease Control have recommended a seconde dose—in order for individuals to be fully protected from measles—as the surest means of preventing further outbreaks of measles.

Mr. President, in a nation with the most advanced medical system in the world, I find it unconscionable that children in the United States of America should be dying of measles—a totally preventable disease. This legislation will help ensure that all American children are fully immunized against measles. I want to congratulate again the Appropriations Committee for taking such expeditious and compassionate action.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 20, 1990.

Hon. TOM HARKIN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I am writing concerning the upcoming mark-up of the FY 1990 Supplemental Appropriations bill. As you may know, measles has been breaking out in epidemic proportions all over the country. States are experiencing serious funding shortfalls and are unable to provide vaccinations to all who need them.

In California, a shortfall of $3.9 million in all childhood vaccination programs is anticipated for this calendar year—$2 million of which is for the measles vaccine. This funding is needed urgently in areas where outbreaks of measles is especially severe; an additional $4.2 million is needed to implement the national recommendations to provide a second dose of vaccine for certain populations, such as children entering elementary school, college students and youths in juvenile halls.

California has been the extremely hard hit by measles. As of April 7, California has officially documented 2,105 cases; however, state officials say that the actual number of measles cases is much higher, but because of backlogs, approximately 2,000 additional cases have not been formally counted. For comparison, as of April 7, 1989, a total of 306 cases were reported in California. In fact, in all of 1989, slightly more than 3,000 cases of measles were reported in the state resulting in 20 deaths. Most tragically, there have already been more deaths in California this year—28—than in all of last year.

Measles is epidemic in nearly all southern California counties and in four counties in central California. The disease has been particularly deadly to Hmong refugee children—former Laotian hill tribesmen who have settled in Sacramento and Fresno Counties. At least eight have died this year from the measles.

In northern California, Alameda County has been especially hard hit. In Alameda County, 103 cases of measles were reported last month—twice the number reported in February. That number is especially startling when it is compared to a total of 3 reported cases in all of 1988.

Tom, I believe that it is unconscionable that children in the United States of America should be dying of measles—a totally preventable disease. We can and must do better. This is not an issue that can wait until the next fiscal cycle. Children in California and in other states need their vaccinations now. I understand that $10 to $12 million is needed to for outbreak control and an additional $24 million is needed to provide the second dose of vaccine as is recommended by the Centers for Disease Control. I urge you to include this funding in the FY 1990 supplemental appropriations bill. Similar increases will be needed in FY 1991, and I will be contacting you again to make that request.

I deeply appreciate any assistance you can give on this vitally important issue.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON.

GODSPEED TO FRAN BACHMAN

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, 10 years ago, Fran Bachman, a bright and capable young woman from Branchville, SC, joined the legislative team on my personal staff. She has served loyally and diligently, earning the respect and affection of her colleagues in my office and in other Senate offices.

Now, however, she is moving on to far more important responsibilities. After recently giving birth to a second son, Michael, Fran has decided to become a full-time mother. Of course, here in the Senate a full-time worker means 8 hours a day. In the motherhood profession, a full-time worker means pretty much 24 hours a day. It is perhaps the most difficult and also the most rewarding job around, and I admire Fran for her choice. I know that her husband Marc and her first son Jonathan will be delighted to have her home.

We will miss Fran, but we could not be more happy for her. On behalf of the Senate, I wish Fran and her young family the very best.

THE CONTINUING CAPTIVITY OF TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,868th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I have spoken often on the issue of Terry Anderson's captivity, but he is only one of many hostages being held today in the Middle East. The inhumane practice of holding innocent parties against their will to make a political statement has become all to common. Hostage taking is not only immoral, it is categorically forbidden by international law. Specifically, the Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of August 12, 1949, prohibits at any time and in any place whatsoever the taking of hostages. This provision applies even in the case of armed conflict not of an international character.

I, therefore, call upon all parties of whatever nationality to release any and all hostages currently being held.

THE DECOLONIZATION OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the decolonization enterprise initiated by President Woodrow Wilson in his Fourteen Points speech is still very much with us. What was once known as the Mandatory Territory of South-West Africa has just become the independent nation of Namibia. The headlines are dominated by what is, in fact, a decolonization struggle between the Soviet Union and its colony, Lithuania. The Senate has just voted to appropriate funds for earthquake victims in another Soviet colony: Armenia. The decolonization of the Soviet empire is an issue which will occupy our attention for, perhaps, decades to come.

I rise today, however, to remind my colleagues that the United States has not been immune to the attractions of empire building. We once lived in the era of Admiral Mahan and the age of coal-fired ships of the line and the strategic need for a global string of coaling stations. American strategists wrote of the vital American need for stepping stones across the Pacific: Hawaii, Guam, the Philippines. The Hearst press whipped up a war hysteria against Spain over its treatment of Cuba. Then on February 15, 1898 the battleship Maine went to the bottom of Havana harbor with the loss of 266 American lives. The warhawks claimed that Spain was responsible and demanded revenge and America went to war with the cry "Remember the Maine!"

Mr. President, we now know that it was not a Spanish mine which sank the Maine. In a masterful investigation headed by Adm. Hyman Rickover the U.S. Navy concluded in 1976 that "In all probability, the Maine was destroyed by an accident which occurred inside the ship." But no matter.

We went to war with Spain ostensibly over its treatment of our neighbors in Cuba and the sinking of the Maine in Cuba, but it was in the Philippines that Admiral Dewey first struck, sinking the Spanish fleet handily and gaining for the United States an empire with an afternoon's work. We, therefore, invaded Cuba, defeated the Spanish forces and acquired, in the process, the island of Puerto Rico. At the close of the war and as a result of the Treaty of Paris, America became a transoceanic empire. America's imperial phase had all the trappings of the colonialist, paternalistic mentality. Many Americans snicker over the Frence mission civilitrice, but they forget William Howard Taft's commitment to look after "our little brown brothers" in the Philippines.

Most of this empire has now been shed, but we are still grappling with the problem of the island of Puerto Rico. For 2 years Puerto Rico was governed by the military and from 1900 to 1952 the island was governed, frankly, as a possession of the United States. It was "non-self-governing" in the language of the Charter of the United Nations.

Is Puerto Rico a colony today? Most obviously, not. In July 1952, Puerto Rico became a full self-governing Commonwealth. Its constitution was approved by nearly 82 percent of those voting. Repeatedly, its citizens have had the opportunity to express their opinion through free and open elections. In 1967 only 0.6 percent of its voters opted for independence.

And yet, Mr. President, it would be folly to ignore the island's colonial legacy. It was a colony. This fact requires a special sensitivity on the part of the United States, a sensitivity which I am not at all sure we are today demonstrating. If we do not pay attention to Puerto Rico's colonial legacy, the world does. Resolutions calling for investigations of Puerto Rico's status became standard fare in the U.N. Decolonization Committee during the early 1970's. Only the most intensive lobbying effort in 1975 prevented a similar resolution from being adopted, an event which the New York times hailed as "a victory for common sense." I am happy to report that since that time the United States has successfully resisted resolutions condemning the U.S. role in Puerto Rico.

Mr. President, will this situation continue? We cannot be sure. It is a matter of the utmost delicacy. We are in the process of considering arrangements for a plebiscite there and I fear that too little attention is being paid here to this important process. I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I made yesterday in the Committee on Finance and an article from the San Juan Star concerning a congressional visit to the island in June 1989.

I hope that my colleagues will pay close attention to this situation. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to work diligently to ease the United States through this final stage of its own "decolonization" process.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR DANIEL PATRICK MOYHIHAN

I wish to state my growing sense that by the close of this session of Congress, and accordingly, of the 101st Congress itself, we will not have sent to the President a bill providing for a plebiscite on the status of Puerto Rico.

This would not be my wish. To the contrary. What I am about to say is sensitive. I have a limited, but I dare to hope, sufficient sense of just how sensitive. I mean no offense to anyone and devoutly hope that in the end I shall not have given any offense.

We recall with what great expectations this matter came before us at the outset of the first session of this Congress. On January 17 the Majority Leader received a letter from the heads of the three principle political parties of Puerto Rico (identical letters having been addressed to the Speaker of the House and to the President) asking for a "resolution of the status issue" through a vote of the people of the Commonwealth. The text is as follows:

"In the past election held on November 8, 1988, all three political parties, which represent the three alternatives for the ultimate political status of the People of Puerto Rico, included the need for the resolution of the status issue in the platforms they presented to the electorate.

"In accordance with the platform of the Popular Democratic Party, the Governor of Puerto Rico announced in his Inauguration the intention of the Government of Puerto Rico to pursue the resolution of the status question with the Govenment of the United States of America and convened a meeting of the leadership of the three political parties that represent the three formulas.

"As a result of this meeting we, the Presidents—of the Popular Democratic Party, representing Commonwealth, the New Progressive Party, representing Statehood, and the Independence Party, representing Independence—have agreed to express to the President and to the Congress of the United States of America, that the People of Puerto Rico wish to be consulted as to their preference with regards to their ultimate political status and the consultation should have the guarantee that the will of the People once expressed shall be implemented through an act of Congress which would establish the appropriate mechanisms and procedures to that effect.

"Towards the formulation of such an act of Congress and related policies, we request to meet with you at your earliest convenience.

"Conscious that since Puerto Rico came under the sovereignty of the United States of America through the Treaty of Paris in 1898, the People of Puerto Rico have not been formally consulted by the United States of America as to their choice of their ultimate political status, and in the understanding that we are taking a momentous decision in Puerto Rican history and confident of the commitment of the United States of America and of the People of Puerto Rico to the principles of self-determination and government by the consent of the governed, we remain,

"Cordially yours,

"Baltasar Corrada del Rio, President, New Progressive Party; Rafael Hernandez Colon, President, Popular Democratic Party; Ruben Berrios Martinez, President, Puerto Rican Independence Party."

Some weeks thereafter, in an address to a Joint Session of the Congress on February 9, 1989, President Bush endorsed this proposal. He said:

"There's another issue that I've decided to mention here tonight. I've long believed that the people of Puerto Rico should have the right to determine their own political future. Personally, I strongly favor statehood. But I urge the Congress to take the necessary steps to allow the people to decide in a referendum."

The response in Puerto Rico was one of great satisfaction and even greater interest. In June a year ago I accepted the kind invitation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to take part in a hearing on the issue held in San Juan. I think it likely that a third of the population of the island watched our televised hearings all day long, and two-thirds watched the reruns during the evening. That same evening, I could not walk anywhere in town without being greeted by name, usually with some apt comment on the (few) questions which I had asked that day. The Energy Committee went forward with deliberate dispatch, and on August 2nd reported out the bill which is now before the Finance Committee.

That was three-quarters of a year ago. Nothing much has happened. It begins to look as if nothing might. On April 10, the chairman of the House Insular and International Affairs Committee, Ron de Lugo, stated:

"The House is still waiting for legislation from the Senate that was promised last year. At some time soon, we will cross a point when it will become impossible to pass a bill in the House."

What happened?

Here I must declare, indeed assert, the limits of my knowledge, still more my understanding. I am no stranger to Puerto Rico. I first was there in the Navy near to half a century ago. (And, come to think, before that had spent more time than my mother knew in a pool hall called Los Muchachos in the original Manhattan barrio just north of 96th Street where the tracks come above ground on Park Avenue.) In the Kennedy years I came to know and to admire Luis Munoz Marin, and, indeed, worked with many of his lieutenants and associates. I did not fail to note that for them the English term "Commonwealth" was rendered "Estado Libre Asociado" with the further provision in one of the party conferences that the latter never be translated back into English.

At the United Nations I came upon the fierce accusations from Cuba and other elements of the so-called nonaligned nations that Puerto Rico was held in colonial captivity. On behalf of President Ford I answered back with, I hope, equal fierceness that it was the fixed policy of the United States that the people of Puerto Rico were free to choose any relationship with the United States that they wished: commonwealth, statehood, independence.

Shortly thereafter I came to the Senate and am now in my fourteenth year on the Finance Committee. During this time I have recurrently found myself dealing with matters affecting Puerto Rico in the most direct and important ways. I think it fair to say that my colleagues have assumed my interest in these matters reflects the large number of Puerto Rican residents in New York State, which it surely does. But it also reflects my experience at the United Nations and generally with the process of colonialization and decolonialization. For make no mistake: in the first instance Puerto Rico was the spoil of a colonial war. It became an American colony. It has since evolved into much more than that, yet no one should doubt the explosive nature of the original relationship.

Moreover, I began to sense how precarious the situation of Puerto Rico was in the Congress. Puerto Rico had friends; it had no fully empowered member. A nonvoting resident commissioner in the House; no one at all in the Senate. Thus, in November 1984 the Reagan administration announced a wholesale revision of the Internal Revenue Code. The first version, known as Treasury I, simply abolished Section 936 of the Code, the economic cornerstone of the whole development policy conceived by Munoz and those of his time. We managed to block this; but only just. Treasury I was the work of the permanent government; it would be back.

This experience only confirmed my view that statehood would come sooner than anyone seemed to think. I had presented this view in a speech on the Senate floor the previous August.

"Having known Luis Munoz Marin, and being a friend and admirer of so many Puerto Rican leaders who carry on in his tradition, I must say that I have always assumed that this tradition views Commonwealth status as interim, as transitional.

"Temporary economic advantages can help prepare a society for statehood but can never indefinitely outweigh the civil advantage of full citizenship, which only statehood can confirm.

"I look to a Puerto Rico that appears at our portals asserting that the obligation of citizenship can never be fully met by a citizenship that is incomplete. In a word, I look at the day when a Puerto Rican sense of equality will animate a sense of the shared responsibility of equals.

"What I dread is a Puerto Rico coming to us in frustration and resentment at what it considers unequal treatment, looking to statehood as a remedy for grievances rather than a call to duty. Do these terms seem archaic, idealized? Perhaps. Yet I believe they would be recognized by the founders of this Republic, who have nothing to apologize for as regards to the realism of their ideals."

I might add that on that occasion I was defending the right of Puerto Rico to receive back excise taxes paid on liquor produced there. Nothing new in this. The second bill enacted by the first Congress imposed a tariff on Caribbean rum. I concluded:

"I urge the Senate to give consideration to this measure, and especially hope that it will come to the attention of our distinguished majority and minority leaders, who will one day, they or their successors, stand on the floor of this Senate and deal with the application by the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico for entry into the American union, asking that a pledge repeatedly made to the people of Pureto Rico be honored."

In the course of the years my views have not changed. They are known in Puerto Rico, and ought to be made known in the present debate. But I would make an important point in this regard. I have no quarrel with commonwealth status. To the contrary I have come to sense that to many of Munoz's time, and those who follow him, commonwealth was not a way station, an interim period prior to statehood. It was, to the contrary, the closest economically viable option to independence. Or at least, it was something this side of absorption into the union of the mainland.

I respect that. Just as I respect those for whom independence is the only acceptable outcome. My concern is that the process of making a viable choice should continue.

Leaving aside independence, where neither consideration arises, those who would choose between statehood and commonwealth status face a basic dilemma.

It is this.

Statehood automatically brings a huge increase in social welfare benefits. By an order of magnitude! Consider Supplementary Security Income. The current benefit in the commonwealth is about $32 a month for the blind, disabled, and aged who have insufficient Social Security or other benefits. The day statehood becomes effective, this benefit rises to $386, a tenfold increase, thereafter automatically indexed to inflation. Similar results occur across what is now a very wide range of programs. In the 1950s and later these benefits in the United States either did not exist or varied greatly from state to state. In the past 30 years, however, we have more and more tended to national benefit standards.

The impact of statehood on perhaps half the population of the island would be instantaneous and profound. And yet, at the same time, statehood means the loss of Section 936 benefits to industry, such that the economy loses a stimulus which has been absolutely central to economic growth in the past two generations. (Section 936, incidentally, was a program begun in the 1920s to encourage investment in the Philippines.)

By contrast, commonweatlh status retains—for a period at least—the economic stimulus of Section 936. But it probably means a continued low level of social welfare benefits. And the absence of a considerable range of Federal taxes. Given those perplexities, I would offer a number of suggestions.

First of all, the executive branch and the Congress have got to undertake as much analysis as the remaining time allows. With no intent to criticize, I must state that some of the departments of the executive branch have been fair to mute on this subject. The Treasury, at least, has come before us and "endorsed" S. 712 as reported out by the Energy Committee, and offered a number of suggestions and reservations. Other departments with programs affected have simply come up here with no views and less data.

Second, the parties in Puerto Rico should try to avoid taking positions that cause anxieties here in the Congress. Those supporting statehood should be most careful about advertising its welfare attractions. Members of Congress altogether friendly to the people of Puerto Rico—they are, after all, our fellow citizens—could very well not wish them to fall into the "welfare trap", as it is called, and not without reason. Take the Food Stamp program, as an example. This began in early 1975. By 1982 fully 60 percent of the Puerto Rican population was receiving food stamps. This cost the Federal government some $.9 billion a year. But what did it cost the people of Puerto Rico? I have to report that my impression from travels in the interior that it virtually destroyed Puerto Rican agriculture. As is well known, the Congress thereupon cut back on the program.

Similarly, those suppoting continued commonwealth status should take great care that the present seeming preference for statehood, as reflected in opinion polls, not persuade them that the best course is to put off a plebiscite. It is now common to read of this in the Puerto Rican press. I would presume to suggest, for example, that there is no reason the House of Representatives should be waiting on the Senate for a bill.

Let them write their own bill, and we will go to conference with them. This is the normal way in which we do business. One could wish that voices were heard in San Juan asking why the House seems to be running out the clock. For there will be no winners in such an eventuality, or at all events, that is my view. As for "enhanced" commonwealth status, that is surely a matter the Finance Committee will want to consider. I will make proposals. I hope others will do so as well. But time presses.

In the end, the great issues involved here are civic, not economic. Do the people of Puerto Rico wish to become Americans? For that is what statehood ineluctably implies. That is what statehood brings. Or do they wish to retain a separate identity? Of, but not in, the American union. This could be a perfectly intelligent choice, and of course, the option of eventual statehood or independence remains.

But to say again, the Congress must act. It is almost a century now since William Graham Sumner composed his bitter epitaph on the Spanish American War entitled, "The Conquest of the United States by Spain." His thesis, of course, was that by entering the colonial lists, we would become like other imperial nations, and suffer all their decadence and decline. Well, that hasn't happened. But we won't know until it is made perfectly clear that our offer to Puerto Rico of choice is in fact a fair-minded and efficacious offer. Which is to say, an offer which will shortly issue in an actual choice being made.

I ask that two important editorials, one from the New York Times, the other from the Washington Post, be appended to this statement.

THE 51ST AND 52D STATES

Puerto Rico is not America's Lithuania, but it is unhappy with its status as a highly dependent commonwealth. An overwhelming majority of 3.3 million islanders are agreed that they want change. But as Congress is learning, agreement stops there. What adds to the perplexity is a parallel but unrelated campaign to grant statehood to the District of Columbia.

A Senate bill supported by the Bush Administration would offer Puerto Ricans a chance to choose, by a binding vote next year, statehood, improved commonwealth status or independence. The problem is to assure a fair choice. If one or another side has plausible reasons for charging bad faith, the referendum could prolong the argument it is meant to end.

Polls for the first time show a narrow majority of Puerto Ricans now favors statehood. As sentiment has shifted, so has the tone of a longstanding debate. Statehood supporters now join with advocates of independence in decrying colonialism. Those clamoring for enhanced commonwealth status contend that the Senate bill is front-loaded unfairly in favor of statehood.

The argument springs from a complicated history. The U.S. acquired Puerto Rico from Spain almost incidentally in 1900. In 1917, Puerto Ricans became U.S. citizens, but not until 1947 did they elect a Governor. Five years later, Congress approved an ingenious commonwealth arrangement, giving a Spanish-speaking island home rule and exemption from Federal taxes but no vote in Federal elections.

Economically, the plan made sense. Using an additional tax break known as Section 936 of the revenue code, Puerto Rico has provided generous incentives for mainland investors. But politically, the island has been virtually a ward of Congress, without the clout it would wield with two senators and six or seven representatives, plus a Presidential vote.

This sense of being second-class citizens has given potent impetus to the statehood campaign. As statehood sentiment has waxed, so has uncertainty about Puerto Rico's tax exemptions, causing investors to hold back. To end the debate once and for all, Gov. Hafael Hernandez Colon, a commonwealth advocate, proposed a binding referendum.

But he now faults the Senate will as "terribly, dangerously unbalanced." It would phase in Federal taxes and phase out Section 936 over four years. Meanwhile, says the Congressional Budget Office, statehood could cost other U.S. taxpayers as much as $9.4 billion in additional Federal social spending; more than half the island's population remains below the national poverty line.

A very different view is taken by former Gov. Carlos Romero Barceló, a statehood proponent. He persuasively cites similar preferential treatment granted other incoming states. Congress can redress the balance by rewording the commonwealth choice to give its proponents more of what they seek: an increased international role, an open port for air carriers, a voice in Federal appointments and jurisdiction over natural resources.

What is unarguable and fundamental is Puerto Rico's right to self-determination. The choice is primarily between two forms of association with the United States. Even the minority favoring independence relies on reason rather than passion. Congress can reciprocate by specifying clearly and fairly what Puerto Ricans can expect, whichever way they vote.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 24, 1990]

PUERTO RICAN STATEHOOD

A game is being played in a mostly indifferent Congress with the people and the future of Puerto Rico. The issue is the recurrent one in island politics of statehood or independence versus the present mixed status of commonwealth.

The last election on the island in 1988 was won by the commonwealth party, but it was close. In hopes of taking the distracting status issue away from the statehood advocates nipping at their heels, the commonwealthers decided to ask Congress to authorize a binding referendum. Puerto Ricans would choose among the three broad relationships with the United States, and Congress would agree in advance to give effect to the result.

The other Puerto Rican parties also supported the idea, as did the administration, on record as favoring statehood. Then came the problem, which persists, of defining the alternatives that would be voted on. The administration wanted to leave them vague. The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee rightly resisted, on grounds that the voters should know what they they were voting for. But the committee then produced a seriously misshapen bill, tilted sharply in favor of statehood. The legislation front-loaded the statehood option by providing that benefits would go up right away and taxes only later. Opinion polls on the island picked up an instant pro-statehood shift.

Now the Congressional Budget Office has done a study of the likely economic effects of statehood as outlined in the committee bill. From what might be called a welfare standpoint the island would gain (and the Treasury lose). Benefits would rise not just earlier than taxes, but as much as $2 billion to $3 billion a year more. But the Puerto Rican economy is dependent on a special provision in the U.S. tax code exempting from tax part of the income of U.S. companies that invest there. As a condition of statehood the exemption would be phased out. CBO says that would mean loss of jobs and calculates that within 10 years this loss on the job side would be greater than the gain in benefits. Puerto Rico would be both more dependent and worse off.

The bill has now gone to the Finance Committee, whose chairman ordered the CBO study. Finance, which has jurisdiction over taxes and many benefit programs, is scheduled to hold a hearing this week. The Agriculture Committee, which has jurisdiction over the food stamp program, an island mainstay, must also be heard from before the legislation can go to the floor. Then the whole process would have to be repeated in the House. There isn't time, and therefore there isn't likely to be a bill. The way the idea has been abused and mangled thus far, that would be a merciful result. But in the meantime the people of Puerto Rico have been badly jerked around.

SENATORS COOL TO PDP "SPECIAL TREATMENT" PLAN

(By Carlos Galarza)

The Popular Democratic Party's proposal for special federal policy treatment continued to get the cold shoulder from U.S. senators during status hearings in Old San Juan Friday.

When PDP Vice President Miguel Hernández Agosto defended the party's key proposal of getting special legislative treatment from Congress, the idea got the same rebuff as when Gov. Hernández Colón made the proposal in Washington two weeks ago.

Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, and ranking Republican

Sen. James McClure of Idaho, rejected giving Puerto Rico the power to challenge the applicability of federal laws to Puerto Rico.

Hernández Agosto contended such a policy would cut litigation because Puerto Rico then could not challenge any federal law which Congress deemed to have "overriding national interest."

The senators, who were joined by Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, a New York Democrat and member of the Finance Committee, did not appear to buy the argument.

Johnston offered Hernández Agosto a counter-proposal, suggesting that unless Congress mentioned Puerto Rico in federal legislation, it would not apply to the island.

"It's a good idea, but we like our idea better," Hernández Agosto said later during an interview. "I see a very positive attitude on their part of trying to understand our proposal and it all boils down to negotiations on this issue."

Hernández Agosto was one of the main speakers during the daylong hearings at the Government Reception Center that saw a parade of island political leaders address the senators about status and a proposed plebiscite.

PDP Resident Commissioner Jaime Fuster, who preceded Hernández Agosto on the stand, also made a defense of the federal policy proposal. "We are sensitive to the issue of federal policy as applied to Puerto Rico," he said.

Johnston and the other senators had a rough moment when they confronted the radical left of the island's independence movement.

Puerto Rican Socialist Party Secretary-General Carlos Gallisá pointed his finger at them and said, "You represent the colonial power and cannot be judge and player in this process."

Gallisa was followed to the witness stand by former PSP Secretary-General Juan Mari Bras, who predicted that the senators would see "thousands of independentistas" turn out for a demonstration today.

"You'll see that the people will not assimilate," Mari Bras told the senators.

The PIP-sponsored demonstration will begin with a 10 a.m. rally in front of the El Escambrón sports complex and conclude with a march to the site of the hearings.

Former Resident Commissioner Jaime Benitez made a pitch in favor of enhanced Commonwealth.

"If the PDP had not made the mistake of losing the elections in 1976, we would have had enhanced Commonwealth by now because that's what the people of Puerto Rico want," he said.

The other key PDP proponent to testify during the morning session was House Speaker José "Rony" Jarabo, who greeted the senators by saying, "Welcome to the marvelous world of Puerto Rico status politics, where everything is black and white, good and evil . . ."

Former NPP President Baltasar Córrada del Río was one of four members of the prostatehood faction who testified in the morning.

He attacked Commonwealth status, corporate tax exemption under Section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code. Corrada said that without statehood, Puerto Ricans would have "second-class citizenship."

Sen. Oreste Ramos, NPP-San Juan, said Puerto Rico is defined by U.S. law as an unincorpoated territory and contended that Commonwealth status does not exist and thus cannot be enhanced.

Sen. Rolando Silva, NPP-San Juan, adding a personal touch to his testimony, said he is a Vietnam War veteran who fought for the United States and now wants the right to equal representation.

Sen. Nicolas Nogueras, NPP-at-large, proposed to the senators that Commonwealth status go alone in a referendum. He said that if it fails to garner 51 percent of the votes, then statehood and independence should go alone in a plebiscite run-off.

During the afternoon session development administrator Antonio J. Colorado was submitted to tough questioning on Section 936. He and representatives of the island's business sector said that without 936 benefits Puerto Rico's economy would collapse.

However, their testimony was disputed by prostatehood tax expert Luis Costas Elena who said 936 could be eliminated immediately without affecting the island's economy.

He quoted a U.S. Treasury report that said 936 tax breaks in Puerto Rico cost the Treasury $1.641 billion in 1983. However, Colorado had told the senators that 936 does not cost the United States anything.

Moynihan, who is a member of the Senate Finance Committee, said 936 is not safe from attempts by Congress to eliminate it as has been attempted in the past.

Today's hearings are scheduled from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. After a day off Sunday, the hearings will conclude Monday with a session scheduled from 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m.

Senator Calms Fears Stirred by Memorandum

(By Manny Suarez)

Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., said categorically Friday that Puerto Ricans' U.S. citizenship could not be revoked by Congress under either commonwealth or statehood.

"Citizenship should not, will not and cannot be changed under statehood or commonwealth. Citizenship should not, will not and cannot be modified in any way under statehood or commonwealth. It is guaranteed," said Johnston in his opening statement at the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearings on status here.

Johnston's statement helped ease a controversy over Puerto Ricans' U.S. citizenship sparked at the start of June by a Library of Congress memo.

In the news conference before the hearings started at the Government Reception Center in Old San Juan, Johnston also said:

He did not have an opinion about the size of a majority that would be needed to permit Puerto Rico to become a state.

He did not consider that Puerto Rico was a colony under commonwealth.

That there was growing support in Congress for a "self-executing" bill that would enact whatever status preference the people select without more congressional legislation.

That the island's three parties would share equally in a $1.5 million federal appropriation to help them carry out their plebiscite campaigns.

The committee will not be able to extend the hearings in Puerto Rico as Gov. Hernández Colón had requested.

Johnston addressed the citizenship issue at a morning news conference, helping defuse the uproar sparked by a Library of Congress staff member. A memo from the staffer released during June 1-2 status hearings said Congress might be able to revoke Puerto Ricans' U.S. citizenship if the island became independent.

Johnston's comments that the memo was only concerned with the effects of Puerto Rican independence were praised by Hernández Colón, president of the proautonomy Popular Democrats.

Johnston's reassurance, however, had little impact on former Gov. Carlos Romero Barceló, leader of the pro-statehood New Progressive Party.

"The only way to guarantee citizenship is under statehood," he said. "Under commonwealth there will always be doubts, uncertainty and fear."

Also taking issue with Johnston were Dr. Myriam Ramírez de Ferrer, president of the pro-statehood Citizens in Civic Action, and by former Secretary of Justice Blas Herrero.

Ramírez de Ferrer said, "A little of what Johnston had to say was to resolve the hysteria that arose over the issue. But although we may not have it revoked under the present version of commonwealth, we do not know what would happen if the island became an 'associated republic.' "

"Associated republic" is used by the NPP to describe PDP plans for Puerto Rico's relations with the United States. NPP members contend it is a plan for independence.

Herrero said he had been studying the matter and found that citizenship legislation was contradictory.

"The matter is not as clear as Johnston presents it," he said. "I'll have my study done in about two weeks."

Johnston was also asked about another memo to the committee that said the island would have to vote overwhelmingly for statehood before Congress would grant it.

The memo pointed to such offshore states as Alaska and Hawaii that had several prostatehood referendums in which the people voted 90 percent in favor before they were accepted into the union as examples of the "super majority" required.

"The question of the majority needed is not one to be decided right at this moment," Johnston said.

When asked for a reaction, Romero Barceló said the "super majority" issue was raised by Hernández Colón and the PDP.

"If you must have a super majority it should be for commonwealth which deprives you of representatives and senators and sovereignty," he said. "To be able to participate as a state all you would need is a majority."

Aida Montilla, who attended the news conference as an analyst with WPAB radio on Ponce, asked if the committee truly intended to resolve the island's colonial" status.

"That's a loaded question." Johnston responded. "To answer yes or no is to say I believe that Puerto Rico's status is colonial and I do not believe that."

Montilla, a retired University of Puerto Rico professor, is an outspoken advocate of independence and is scheduled to address the committee Monday.

Johnston said there were three bills submitted to deal with the plebiscite, one of which was "self-executing." That means Congress would spell out the terms under which statehood or independence would be granted depending on which alternative won or what enhancement would be given if commonwealth won.

SENATE COMMITTEE OPENS HEARINGS ON PUERTO RICO

(By Judith Havemann)

With impassioned testimony televised live to Puerto Rico, a Senate committee opened hearings yesterday aimed at the permanent settlement of the Puerto Rican question: should the island seek to become the 51st state, an independent nation, or an "enhanced commonwealth" of the United States?

The Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, which has jurisdiction over territories, began consideration of legislation calling for Puerto Ricans to decide their fate in a referendum in 1991.

The issue is nearly 100 years old, and sentiments have run so strong in Puerto Rico that extremists attempted to assassinate President Harry S. Truman in 1950 and shot up the House of Representatives in 1954 in the cause of independence. The question of status has dominated politics on the island since the Spanish American War.

But with the strong support of President Bush, committee chairman J. Bennett Johnston (D-La.) and the three major Puerto Rican political parties, a referendum seems more likely now than it has in decades.

Details of the three alternatives have been submitted to the Senate for consideration in hearings in the energy, finance, judiciary, commerce and armed services committees.

"I can assure you that Congress will make substantial changes to all three definitions, and I fully expect that the advantages of each option will be reduced from what the parties have proposed," Johnston said. "Congress will make budget neutrality an objective." The island receives about $6 billion annually in federal funds.

Former governor Carlos Romero Barcelo argued for statehood. "We are U.S. citizens with a difference: we are second class citizens who have no voice in our nation's future, who have no vote in Washington."

When Americans attacked Libya, "a Puerto Rican Air Force Commander was in the eye of the raid, and [Capt. Fernando L.] Ribas-Dominicci gave his life for his country," Romero Barcelo testified. "His mother did not vote for the president who gave the order to take action against Libya. She has no right to vote—she lives in Utuado, Puerto Rico."

Ruben Berrios Martinez, the Oxford-educated president of the Puerto Rican Independence Party, countered with testimony echoing claims that usually garner 4 percent to 7 percent of the vote in island elections.

The U.S.-Puerto Rican relationship "by whatever name, and whether by imposition or consent, contradicts the principle of representative democracy, is inconsistent with the values and principles of the American people and constitutes a growing source of embarrassment to the United States in the international community," he said.

Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon, speaking for what he called the "real world" solution of an "enhanced commonwealth," called independence "impracticable," saying it "would wreck the Puerto Rican economy and it runs counter to the unswerving desire of the people of Puerto Rico to maintain their American citizenship."

"Statehood was and is unworkable because it would also disrupt the Puerto Rican economy and does not take into account another given: the fact that Puerto Ricans form a people, a distinct society with its own culture, ethos and language," Hernandez Colon said.

He was the only panel member to testify in detail, with the others scheduled to answer questions today.

Hernández Colón explored several major problems: the official language, whether Puerto Ricans should continue to be exempt from federal taxes, and whether the commonwealth can be legally enhanced to allow Puerto Rico the degree of autonomy it seeks.

The pro-commonwealth forces want tariffs on selected foreign imports; bilateral air transportation agreements with foreign counties; a non-voting commissioner in the Senate; recovery of excess federal lands; block grant funding from federal agencies; Spanish-language testimony in U.S. courts if requested; and the power to enter international organizations and agreements.

The existing commonwealth was established in 1952. In a 1967 plebiscite on Puerto Rico's status, 60 percent of the voters chose the commonwealth, 39 percent backed statehood and the independence party received less than 1 percent of the vote after boycotting the process.

RHC STATUS PROPOSAL RAKED

(By Harry Turner)

WASHINGTON.—Gov. Hernández Colón and his vision of an enhanced Commonwealth ran into a buzzsaw of objections Thursday from Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who found fault with nearly all the pro-autonomy proposals during a torturous afternoon for the governor.

One by one, Johnston picked apart the commonwealth provisions, suggested some be taken out of the plebiscite bill, said others should be sharply modified and contended still others were unworkable.

Johnston's unrelenting criticisms appeared to shake Hernández Colón, who looked worried and huddled with his advisers during breaks in the first day's plebiscite hearings by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

To those with long memories, the attack was remindful of other occasions over the past 30 years when Popular Democratic Party leaders came enthusiastically to Congress with autonomy proposals, only to have their hopes shattered.

Johnston's views are all the more important because he is committee chairman and the driving force behind the plebiscite. It was to him that Hernández Colón first appealed late last year to get the plebiscite process moving.

Hernández Colón was the first witness to undergo extensive questioning by the committee. Puerto Rican Independence Party President Rubén Berrios and New Progressive Party President Carlos Romero will appear today.

The hearings are the start of the legislative process that is supposed to end in 1991 when Puerto Rico residents vote in a plebiscite between enhanced Commonwealth, statehood and independence and settle Puerto Rico's status turmoil for a long time, if not forever.

Johnston, although mild-mannered, was especially harsh with the centerpiece of the Popular Democratic Party's proposals—the creation of a federal policy that, in effect, would allow the Puerto Rican government to reject most federal laws and regulations.

This proposed policy mandates that almost all federal laws and regulations must take into consideration Puerto Rico's special economic, cultural, ecological and other conditions.

If a law doesn't, then Puerto Rico could either go to court to block its applicability or ask the president to declare it nonapplicable if Congress doesn't act.

"I think this (allowing the president to declare a law nonapplicable) would violate the separation of powers," Johnston told the governor. "This is probably not a good way to do it * * *. It may not be a good policy and it may not be workable."

The Louisiana Democrat also complained at several points that the proposed federal policy would result in "endless litigation."

He seemed more sympathetic, however, to giving Puerto Rico some kind of control over federal regulations and their administration on the island.

In what appeared to be a warning to all three statuses, Johnston said he believed that Congress, given the budget deficit situation, wouldn't pass a plebiscite bill that led to a further drain on the U.S. Treasury.

"It is certain that if a [status] definition includes an increased benefit, then Congress will be looking for a way to offset the cost of that benefit * * *. Congress will make budget 'neutrality' an objective during its consideration of these definitions."

Johnston backed up his words by telling Hernández Colón that the Commonwealth proposals of forcing Congress to treat Puerto Rico equally in all federal programs—worth between $850 million and $1 billion a year—were not feasible.

Johnston suggested that the mandatory provision be replaced with watered down language in which Congress would adopt equal treatment as a "goal" to be sought sometime in the future.

Although he didn't spell out his objections, Johnston also seemed disturbed by the PDP leadership's use of "autonomy" when describing the enhanced Commonwealth it seeks.

In the face of the committee chairman's steady objections, Hernández Colón appeared to backtrack on most issues during what must have been a long afternoon for him.

However, Johnston indicated in an opening statement that the other two statuses will also take their share of criticism from him and the rest of the committee.

"I can assure you that Congress will make substantial changes to all three definitions, and I fully expect that the advantages of each option will be reduced from what the parties have proposed," he said.

The Thursday hearings began in the morning with brief statements from Hernández Colón, Romaero and Berrios on their status goals. The three then sat together to take preliminary questions from committee members as a crowded hearing room audience, mostly from Puerto Rico, watched.

The political spectrum of those present ranged from San Juan attorney Jorge Farinacci, accused as a Machetero terrorist in a Hartford, Conn., armed robbery, to former Gov. Luis Ferré, 85, who recounted for the committee how he had first testified in Congress on behalf of statehood in 1936.

The morning session stayed pretty much on track until Romero and Hernández Colón got off on a tangent of why so many Puerto Ricans can't speak English.

A sizable number of committee members were on hand for the morning session, but in the afternoon usually only Johnston and Sen. James McClure, R-Ida., were present.

Berrios, in his testimony, made a strong plea to the committee to establish safeguards for the plebiscite campaigning so that neither the federal nor the Commonwealth government could skew the process.

Asked later whether he thought the Hernández Colón administration would use government resources to win the plebiscite, he snorted and said, "Of course."

Here are other major Commonwealth plebiscite proposals and Johnston's reaction to them:

The transfer to the Puerto Rican government of the power to negotiate with foreign countries over air routes. "It seems to me that that would be a burden for Puerto Rico," Johnston said, suggesting that Puerto Rico have some other kind of "input" on air routes.

The empowerment of Puerto Rico to license tuna boats, as part of its proposed jurisdiction 200 miles out to sea.

"We'd probably be better off not to accept that [tuna licensing]," the senator remarked.

CARPE DIEM

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, before long the educational institutions of our Nation will receive more advice—in the form of commencement addresses—than perhaps any other body in the world, at least during the traditional times for graduation ceremonies.

Many of us remember the excitement of our own graduation being marred by speakers at these august occasions by their tendency to literally speak forever, while we fidgeted in our seats. It is not a universal characteristic of these ceremonies, but it happens more than we realize.

Fortunately, it is not always the case, and the opposite takes place when a speaker not only understands Shakespeare's "Brevity is the soul of wit," but also that it just makes good sense—to speak plainly and clearly, and then to leave the stage.

At last year's graduation at St. Andrew's one of America's great boarding schools, and a proud tradition in Delaware for many years, a rare occasion took place, namely, a graduation address that took only a few minutes.

It was given by the longtime headmaster of St. Andrew's, Jonathan B. O'Brien, and titled "Carpe Diem," or "Seize the Day." The title was taken from the Robin Williams character in the Academy Award nominated film, "Dead Poet's Society," which was filmed at the Middletown school, and in the town of Middletown. Viewers from all over the world discovered what we Delawareans have always known—that not only is St. Andrew's one of the finest boarding schools in America, it is located in a setting of spectacular natural beauty.

I believe my colleagues would be greatly interested in the remarks of Headmaster O'Brien. His address, "Carpe Diem," speaks for itself.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. O'Brien's remarks be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEADMASTER JONATHAN B. O'BRIEN'S REMARKS AT ST. ANDREW'S SCHOOL, MIDDLETOWN, DE

I have only four pieces of advice. Each will take but a few seconds.

First. Recognize that life is quite short. The distance between your youth and beauty and my craggy old age is only 33 years. Believe me, that is not a long time. It will pass like a cool breeze on a hot day. So enjoy your lives. "Seize the day," as the Robin Williams character urges his students in Dead Poets Society. Don't waste your lives doing stupid or trivial things when there are so many magnificent and exciting ways to celebrate your lives.

Second. Don't spend your lives seeking happiness. I once heard William Bennett say that happiness is like a cat. It eludes those who seek it and jumps into your lap when you least expect it. He is right. Choose your goals wisely, and, with luck, happiness will be a byproduct of your quests.

Third. Listen to your hearts. Don't be followers. Inside each of you is a unique individual with a unique song to contribute to the world. The time has come for you to sing your song, not the songs of your parents or your teachers or your friends. Don't be afraid of hitting a few false notes. We all do. And don't worry about your song's popularity. Some of the most beautiful songs ever written have had small audiences.

Finally, and most important of all, love God and your neighbors. If we believe only in ourselves and live only for ourselves, we are doomed to live shallow, empty and, ultimately, lonely lives, and our songs become noisy gongs and clanging cymbals. But if we dedicate our lives to the service of God and our neighbors, even the most simple tasks become brilliant and clear, and we are constantly surprised by the number of cats which leap out of the shadows and onto our laps.

That's the last advice you will hear from me. Thank you for your many contributions to our lives. Good luck. God bless you. You leave with our love and affection. We will be listening for your songs.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. HATCH):

S. 2534. A bill to amend the laws of the United States to eliminate gender-based distinctions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCONNELL:

S. 2535. A bill to provide for a comprehensive health care plan for all Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2536. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to give States the option of providing for coverage for certain HIV-related services for certain individuals who have been diagnosed as being HIV-positive, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself and Mr. CRANSTON):

S. 2537. A bill to amend chapter 32 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the pursuit of flight training under that chapter; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. CHAFEE:

S. 2538. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to improve the delivery of services at federally qualified health centers and rural health clinics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. GARN (for himself and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 2539. A bill to authorize the establishment of a Senior Executive Service of the Smithsonian Institution, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. GARN:

S. 2540. A bill to authorize the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to plan, design, construct, and equip space in the East Court of the National Museum of Natural History building, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. SHELBY (for himself and Mr. HEFLIN):

S. 2541. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Army to convey a certain parcel of land at Redstone Arsenal, Alabama, to the Solid Waste Disposal Authority of the city of Huntsville, Alabama; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. GARN (for himself and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S.J. Res. 302. Joint resolution providing for the reappointment of Anne L. Armstrong as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. WALLOP (for himself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. McCLURE, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. SIMPSON):

S. Res. 277. Resolution to express the sense of the Senate strongly opposing any future use of the milk production termination program as a method of controlling the production of milk and milk products; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. HATCH):

S. 2534. A bill to amend the laws of the United States to eliminate gender-based distinctions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SEX DISCRIMINATION IN THE UNITED STATES CODE REFORM ACT OF 1990

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, in introducing the "Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act of 1990."

THE HISTORY OF THE LEGISLATION

In 1981, President Reagan signed Executive Order 12336 establishing the task force on legal equity for women. The task force was established to provide for the systematic elimination of regulatory and procedural barriers which have unfairly precluded women from receiving equal treatment from Federal activities. The order further assigned to the Attorney General the responsibility to conduct a review of Federal laws and to identify and report to the President any provision that unjustifiably differentiates or which effectively discriminates, on the basis of sex.

In response to the executive order, then Attorney General William French Smith issued several reports identifying provisions of the Federal code that made substantive distinctions based on gender. These reports served as the basis for similar legislation that I have introduced in the past.

I first introduced the Sex Discrimination Reform Act in 1982. In 1983, the bill was unanimously approved by the Senate, but unfortunately, no action was taken by the House. In 1985, I reintroduced the Sex Discrimination Reform Act. Once again, the bill was unanimously approved by the Senate but failed to receive House action.

THE BILL'S MAJOR PROVISIONS

Like its predecessors, the Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act of 1990 would revise or eliminate over 150 statutory provisions that still contain some form of overt, substantive, gender bias. Let me briefly explain some of the important changes proposed by the bill.

Federal law criminalizes the act of interfering with a person's participation in various Federal activities because of race, color, religion, or national origin. The bill would add to this list by criminalizing the act of interfering in the same activities on account of a person's sex.

The Federal code contains several provisions that offer various benefits to the wives, widows, or dependent children of male workers, but make no corresponding provision for the husbands, widowers, or dependent children of female workers. This distinction appears in Federal laws covering such subjects as Government pensions, disability, and survivor's benefits; worker's compensation; and burial rights. The bill would eliminate this distinction, thereby ensuring that certain Government benefits are not denied to deserving recipients as a result of gender discrimination.

The bill would amend those portions of the Federal code that contain different requirements for men and women with respect to certain educational, training, and employment opportunities. 41 U.S.C. 35, for example, requires a minimum age of 16 for boys, but 18 for girls, in setting employment standards for Federal contractors. Similarly, 42 U.S.C. 633(A) gives priority to unemployed fathers over mothers and pregnant women concerning the testing and counseling of participants in work incentive programs. The bill would remove these inequities by equalizing the requirements for both men and women.

Finally, the bill would amend several Federal laws that use gender-based distinctions in defining criminal sexual activity. The code of military justice, for example, still defines rape and statutory rape as offenses that can only be committed by a man against a woman. The bill would revise these provisions by allowing the punishment of any offender who commits an act of sexual intercourse with another person not his or her spouse.

As you can see, the changes made by the Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act are not simply technical in nature. On the contrary, it is my hope that these amendments will provide concrete benefits to those individuals who may still be subject to unfair discrimination under the law.

WHAT THE BILL WOULD NOT DO

Let me also make another point here. The Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act would not amend controversial code sections such as the combat and selective service provisions of the military code and certain provisions of the criminal code. Any attempt to amend these code sections should, at a minimum be preceded by a formal investigation and hearing by Congress. Nor would the bill remove all gender-based terminology from the Federal code. Since there are literally thousands of these gender-based references, it is virtually impossible for a single bill to identify and amend each of these provisions as they appear in the Federal code.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this legislation represents a modest, but important, step in the effort to achieve full equality of women under the law. Today, Americans overwhelmingly believe that men and women should be treated as equal partners in society. Our Nation's laws should reflect this broad consensus—in both form and substance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2534

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act of 1990".

TITLE IV—EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 401. Except as otherwise provided, the amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon the date of enactment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to join with the distinguished minority leader in introducing the Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act of 1990. This bill is similar to S. 86, which the Senate unanimously approved during the 99th Congress, and S. 501, which the Senate passed during the 98th Congress. Like those measures, this bill is introduced in the interest of revising or eliminating from the United States Code several provisions, which, on their face, substantively discriminate on the basis of gender. While this bill is very similar to those earlier bills, it does differ in two respects. It includes several additional noncontroversial amendments removing unnecessary distinctions based on sex from the Federal code and it omits some sections that have been altered or repealed by intervening legislation.

HISTORY OF THIS BILL AND EFFORTS TO ELIMINATE SEX-BASED LAWS FROM THE UNITED STATES CODE

This bill represents the culmination of many years of effort to discover and eliminate Federal code provisions that treat women unfairly or distinguish between men and women unnecessarily. Accordingly, I would like to take a few moments to discuss the efforts that have led to this bill.

Beginning in the mid-1970's, work began in earnest to identify and revise or eliminate statutes providing for the inequitable treatment of the sexes. The first effort to identify such laws was completed by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in 1977. This study identified approximately 800 laws containing sex-based distinctions scattered throughout the Code. A second, more comprehensive effort was begun in 1976 pursuant to the directive of President Ford. The results of this study, issued in 1978 by the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, revealed more than 3,000 Code sections containing sex-based references.

Both reports noted that many of the identified provisions were obsolete, of relatively minor importance, or involved terminological problems having no substantive effect. Both concluded, however, that significant substantive problems had been identified, particularly with regard to the military, Federal retirement income policies, and employment benefits. Finally, both reports observed that because of their pervasiveness, the cumulative impact of these provisions was to imply an inferior or dependent status for women under the laws of the United States.

Neither of these studies resulted in omnibus legislation to eliminate the laws which had been identified as being sex-based. However, since the completion of these reports, many of the identified laws have been changed as part of larger legislative efforts to rewrite or amend certain portions of the Code, For example, the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act eliminated or revised scores of Code sections which subjected men and women to separate personnel standards and procedures. In 1983, the Social Security Amendments Act eliminated most of the remaining sex-based distinctions in the Social Security System.

In addition, Congress has enacted certain "rules of construction" designed to provide for equal treatment of the sexes. For instance, to ensure that the use of sex-based terminology does not inadvertently result in substantive discrimination, in 1947 Congress enacted 1 U.S.C. 1, which provides that: "In determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise, words importing masculine gender include the feminine as well." Further, to address disparities in employment benefits, in 1971 Congress enacted 5 U.S.C. 7202(c), which provides that: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any provision of law providing benefits to a male Federal employee or his spouse or family shall be deemed to provide the same benefits to a female Federal employee or to her spouse or family." However, it should be noted that the effect of this provision is limited because it applies, by its terms, only to "Federal employees" and not, for instance to members of the Armed Forces or employees of the Postal Service.

On December 21, 1981, President Reagan signed Executive Order 12336, establishing the Task Force on Legal Equity for Women. The task force was established "to provide for the systematic elimination of regulatory and procedural barriers which have unfairly precluded women from receiving equal treatment from Federal activities." The Executive order further assigned to the Attorney General the responsibility to complete a review of Federal laws, regulations, policies, and practices, and to identify and periodically report to the President on any language or provision that "unjustifiably differentiates, or which effectively discriminates, on the basis of sex."

On June 28, 1982, the Attorney General transmitted to the President's Cabinet Council of Legal Policy his first quarterly report, as required by the Executive order. The report included a list of more than 100 Federal statutes which on their face, made substantive distinctions based on gender. The list was generated by a 1977 computer search performed by the Department of Justice under President Ford's directive.

On October 1, 1982, S. 3008, the Sex Discrimination in the United States Code Reform Act, was introduced. This bill contained proposed amendments to most of the sex-based Code provisons identified in the first quarterly report. S. 3008 was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but because it was introduced near the end of the 97th Congress, no further action was taken on the bill. On February 15, 1983, the measure was reintroduced in the 98th Congress as S. 501. The bill was again referred to the Judiciary Committee and, then, to the Subcommittee on the Constitution, of which I was chairman.

In July 1983, the Attorney General transmitted the third quarterly report. This report contained an updated listing of sex-based laws, based on a more recent, comprehensive computer-assisted review of the United States Code conducted by the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. As a consequence, it identified over 50 additional sex-based laws which had not been identified in the June 28 report. On September 7, 1983, the President met with his Cabinet Council on Legal Policy and accepted the Council's recommendation to propose amendments to most of these newly identified statutes. On September 12, 1983, pursuant to the President's recommendations, an amendment was filed S. 501 to eliminate the gender-based distinctions in these newly identified statutes.

On September 30, after approving the President's recommended changes and an amendment I offered to revise nearly 40 other laws containing sex-based distinctions, S. 501 was unanimously reported by the Constitution Subcommittee to the Full Committee. On November 10, 1983, the Judiciary Committee, with a quorum present, by voice vote, and without objection heard, ordered the bill reported as amended. On April 26, 1984, S. 501 was approved by voice vote in the full Senate. No further action was taken by the House of Representatives.

On January 3, 1985, S. 86 was introduced. It was identical to S. 501, as approved by the full Senate. On June 26, the subcommittee voted 5 to 0 on a voice vote to favorably report S. 86, with amendments, to the Judiciary Committee. On October 31, 1985, the Judiciary Committee approved S. 86, as amended, by voice vote. As mentioned earlier, on December 3, 1985, by voice vote the Senate unanimously approved S. 86, but again, the House of Representatives took no further action.

While significant progress resulted from efforts prior to the introduction of S. 86, the review by the Department of Justice found that numerous laws expressly providing for substantive differences in treatment on the basis of sex still exist throughout the Code. A handful of these are clearly obsolete or archaic, in which case they would be repealed by the bill I am introducing today. The substantive effect of some others has already been negated through agency action or court decision, in which case they would be amended to conform to existing practice and case law. A number of these laws, however, are of continuing applicability.

Thus, while the breadth of the statutory problem addressed by this bill should not be overstated, it should also be emphasized that the amendments made by this legislation involve much more than mere "technical" changes to language. Rather, a great many of the changes will positively impact upon individuals who, in a variety of relatively narrow areas, may otherwise be subject to unfair or arbitrary treatment under the law.

SCOPE OF THIS BILL

This legislation is targeted only at those statutes which, on their face, contain substantive, gender-based distinctions. Thus this bill does not address those provisions which some might regard as containing more subtle forms of discrimination. Generally, such provisions involve more complex policy issues, and as a consequence, should be dealt with through the consideration of separate legislation.

For similar reasons, this bill does not address controversial Code sections such as the Selective Service and combat limitations contained in title X, consistent with the bill's limited goal of eliminating those remaining gender-based distinctions which are clearly incompatible with settled, well-established public policy. Finally, this bill does not seek to eliminate from the Code sex-based terminology having no substantive effect, though I would encourage avoidance of such terminology in the drafting of new legislation.

OVERVIEW OF LAWS AMENDED BY THIS BILL

This bill would revise or eliminate from the Code countless statutory revisions which still contain some type of overt, substantive sex-based distinction. Most of the provisions can be categorized as follows:

CIVIL RIGHTS PROTECTIONS

Title 18, United States Code, section 245 provides a criminal provision punishing interference with a person's participation in various federally protected activities "because of his race, color, religion, or national origin." Thus, hypothetically, if an offender brandished a lead pipe and assaulted or intimidated individuals attempting to gain access to a public school because of the victim's "race, color, religion, or national origin," this provision could make the offender subject to Federal criminal sanction. This bill adds to 18 U.S.C. 245 a prohibition of interference in the same federally protected activities on account of a person's "sex." This will provide criminal penalties for sex discrimination in those areas where discrimination is already illegal. It does not expand the scope of protection beyond those areas already covered by civil penalties, but adds the additional weight of criminal punishment to prohibit abusive interference and forcible intimidation. To make this point absolutely clear, this bill adds to S. 86 language previously stated only in the report accompanying S. 86 (S. Rept. 99-194) which limits the provision to protection of "such person's right, that in fact is federally secured." Thus, this language, the report, and the intent of the authors of this bill is to expressly state that this provision does not create new classes of prohibited conduct, but adds potential criminal penalties for conduct already prohibited by other statutes.

This clarification resolves an ambiguity by excluding from the coverage of this bill any expansion of this language to include activities connected with demonstrations in front of abortion clinics. This bill simply does not address that question at all. Abortion is not among the class of activities "that in fact is federally secured" either by court interpretations or statute because of sex. The courts have consistently held that the abortion decision is included within privacy doctrines, not doctrines protecting some activities on the basis of sex. Therefore, incidents connected with abortion clinic picketing may, if they satisfy all elements of an assault, battery, or other State or local offense, be actionable under State or local codes, but they are not actionable under this provision of the Federal code.

Similarly, the addition of the word "sex" to this provision of the Federal code is used as synonymous with gender and does not mean sexual orientation or sexual preference. Accordingly incidents in connection with closing of a bathhouse frequented by homosexuals, for example, would not give rise to a violation of 18 U.S.C. 245.

FAMILY BENEFITS

A large portion of the laws amended by this bill provide various benefits, rights, or privileges to the "wives, widows" or dependent children of male workers, but make no provision for the families of similarly situated female workers. This type of sex-based distinction was found in such areas as Government pension, disability, and survivor's benefits; worker's compensation; commissary privileges; transportation expenses; and burial rights.

In most instances, these distinctions were probably based on the assumption that benefits would not be needed by women's families because of the presumed existence of a wage-earning husband. In a few instances, however, the assumption may have been that benefits for "husbands and widowers" were unnecessary because certain occupations would be held by men only. In any event, such distinctions run counter to the fact that women have now entered a wide range of career fields, and often provide a significant, if not the sole, source of economic support for their families.

One of the technical changes this bill makes in S. 86 falls in this category. 42 U.S.C. 213 provides for the burial in a national cemetery of the remains of the "wife, widow or minor child" of certain officers and for the discretionary removal of such remains, if, upon the officer's death, he is not buried in an adjoining gravesite. This bill extends this benefit to all spouses. Since the discretionary removal clause of the law only becomes applicable, however, if the officer lives longer than his or her spouse, the language of S. 86 extending the removal provision to "surviving spouses" is deleted.

BARRIERS TO EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

Another category of laws which would be remedied by this bill discriminate against women with regard to certain educational, training, and employment opportunities.

Examples, include 41 U.S.C. section 35 which requires a minimum age of 16 for boys, but 18 for girls, in setting employment standards for Federal contractors. Similarly, 42 U.S.C. section 633(a) gives priority to "unemployed fathers" over mothers and pregnant women with regard to the testing and counseling of work incentive program participants. This bill goes beyond S. 86 to preserve the priorities for this program established by a 1982 amendment, yet remove any remaining sex bias from Public Law 97-300.

Another example is 25 U.S.C. section 274, which calls for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to train Indian boys as farmers and industrial workers, and Indian girls as assistant matrons. Of the same genre are laws which discriminate against women with regard to the use of military rifle ranges, the provision of military training equipment to educational institutions, and apprenticeships in the sea service.

FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

Several of the statutes amended by this proposal are based on the view of men as the dominant or "more important" members of a family. For example, various sections of title X still give preference to "fathers" over "mothers" and "brothers" over "sisters" in distributing the effects of deceased military personnel. These unnecessary distinctions are eliminated.

CRIMINAL SEXUAL ACTIVITY

Another category of laws which would be amended by this bill involve the use of sex-based distinctions in defining criminal sexual activity. Both the Criminal Code and Code of Military Justice still define "rape" and "statutory rape" as offenses which can only be committed by a man against a woman. This bill revises both provisions by providing punishment for offenders who "commit an act of sexual intercourse with another person not his or her spouse." In one respect, this legislation differs from S. 86 in this category. S. 86 referred to the crime of carnal knowledge of a female under age 16 and not the offender's wife as "sexual abuse of a minor" and removed the gender identification of the victim. Removing the gender identification is certainly warranted, but the problems arise in that "carnal knowledge" and "sexual abuse" are different legal concepts. "Carnal knowledge" involves an act of sexual intercourse, while "sexual abuse" may involve other sexual acts. This bill remedies any potential ambiguity by retaining the term "carnal knowledge" to refer to the nature of the offense.

This bill also repeals obsolete statutes punishing seduction of a female passenger on an American vessel. It restores a provision dropped by S. 86 that requires a factual statement concerning any alien kept for prostitution or any other immoral purpose be filed with the Immigration and Naturalization Service. This provision of law was enacted pursuant to an international agreement which is still in effect and should therefore be amended to remove gender classes, rather than repealed. This bill makes such changes.

Similarly, statutes dealing with the use of interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of prostitution are currently violated only if the offense involves transporting "women or girls". This bill extends the protections of this law to both sexes.

PROTECTIVE PROVISIONS

A final category includes laws which were enacted to protect women from discriminatory treatment. For instance, some of the statutes found in title 8 of the Code were intended to protect women from laws existing in the early part of the century in this country—and found likewise in the customs and conventions of foreign countries—making the citizenship status of a woman dependent on that of her husband. Similar statutes can be found in title 25 which were enacted to protect Indian women from tribal customs giving a non-Indian husband all of his spouses' tribal property, and divesting the children of such marriages of tribal property rights. In the same vein are sections of title 10 which restored benefits to nurses and other female medical personnel who received special appointments during World War II and were then demoted when the war was over.

CONCLUSION

In drafting this and previous versions of this bill, care has been taken not to address sex-based distinctions of a controversial nature or those of sufficient technical complexity to warrant independent consideration by the committee with the appropriate expertise. As I have already stated, those measures deserve individual attention, and I leave those issues for later consideration.

I do want to stress, however, that this bill does address several substantive problems that exist in the United States Code, and many of the changes are more than mere technical changes. These changes will positively impact women and will help to remove unfair or arbitrary treatment that currently exists under the law. I therefore encourage my colleagues to support this legislation and I hope that it can move forward as it did during the 98th and 99th Congresses.

By Mr. McCONNELL:

S. 2535. A bill to provide for a comprehensive health care plan for all Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

COMPREHENSIVE AMERICAN HEALTH CARE ACT

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, over the last year we have witnessed tremendous changes in Eastern Europe, with the spread of democracy and freedom, the apparent collapse of communism, and the beginning of the end of the cold war.

The reason these historic events are happening is because we Americans met the challenge—we made a commitment to stop the spread of communism, we sacrificed in order to defend ourselves and our friends, and we stayed the course. Today, it appears our sacrifices are paying off.

Mr. President, it's time we met the challenge of the problems in our own country. Where we once defended ourselves against Communist aggression, we now need to defend our neighborhoods against the rising tide of crime and drug abuse. Where we once competed with the Soviet Union in military hardware, today we must compete with the Japanese in computer software.

HEALTH CARE: A CHALLENGE FOR THE 1990'S

One of the most important challenges on the home front today is health care. The good news about health care is that America has the highest quality of care available anywhere in the world. We have the best medical technology, the best health professionals, and the best-equipped hospitals.

The problem, Mr. President, is that many Americans do not have access to—or cannot afford—high-quality care. The cost of health care has skyrocketed to the point where it is beyond the reach of families, small businesses, and especially those living on a fixed income, like our senior citizens. As many as 37 million Americans simply go without health insurance because they can't afford it.

Catastrophic illness and long-term health care are not only an emotional and physical burden for patients and their families, but they also are very expensive. Many families see their entire life savings evaporate when a family member needs long-term care.

Health care providers also are feeling the pressure. Our country has the best-trained, hardest-working, most dedicated health professionals in the world. But many of them, especially in rural areas, are leaving the practice of medicine because they can't afford the malpractice insurance.

In Breathitt County, KY, for example, there is a new $8 million hospital with a delivery room and a nursery—but after a year-long search, it still hasn't found a doctor willing to deliver babies. This is happening throughout Kentucky, where four out of five family-practice physicians have stopped delivering babies altogether, or severely cut back the care they provide.

This is because most health care providers—like the rest of us—are feeling the pinch of health benefits being cut back while costs continue to rise. Reimbursements for Medicare and Medicaid have not kept pace with inflation, nor have they been distributed fairly.

Mr. President, our rural health network is at risk. Our children do not have the resources to meet the cost of long-term care. And average families in Kentucky and other States are forced to choose between health insurance and other basic necessities.

OUTLINE OF THE COMPREHENSIVE AMERICAN HEALTH CARE PLAN

Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Comprehensive American Health Care Act to provide for the needs of American families. This legislation is designed to ensure that every American has access to the highest quality health care available. My plan also will help control the rising cost of health care. Finally, my comprehensive plan will help provide nursing home and other long-term care for our senior citizens.

EXPANDING HEALTH CARE ACCESS

To expand health care access for uninsured and underserved Americans, my plan takes a three-pronged approach: first, it provides a tax credit for health insurance to low- and moderate-income families. Those who qualify would receive a credit of $1,440, which would be refundable.

Second, my plan increases Federal support for rural health care by ending the discrimination against rural hospitals in Medicare, and by revitalizing the National Health Service Corps, which has a long history of encouraging health professionals to work in underserved rural areas.

Third, my plan expands the Federal vaccine and immunization programs, which protect children from catastrophic diseases. Some of these diseases, which we thought we had wiped out years ago, are making a deadly comeback in rural and inner-city areas.

CONTAINING HEALTH CARE COSTS: MEDICAL MALPRACTICE REFORM

We cannot hope to solve our health care problems unless we tackle its skyrocketing cost. For that reason, my plan offers some needed reforms of the medical liability system.

Liability costs are the fastest growing portion of health care expenses, accounting for $25 billion of the Nation's health bill, by some estimates. Even worse, medical malpractice fears have cut back prenatal care and delivery in 73 of Kentucky's 120 counties.

The reforms I am proposing—abolishing joint and several liability and encouraging alternative dispute resolution—are endorsed by the American Hospital Association and the American College of Nurse-Midwives, among others.

Another measure, to require anyone who brings a frivolous malpractice suit to pay part of the other side's legal costs, was recommended by a blue-ribbon malpractice task force commissioned by the Twentieth-Century Fund.

LONG-TERM CARE

Finally, my plan addresses the most difficult problem facing America's seniors: the cost of long-term care. My plan provides a refundable tax credit to pay for long-term care insurance premiums, and restores many of the important benefits lost in the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act last year.

In addition, my plan would help protect seniors from deceptive or confusing insurance practices, by requiring the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish uniform health insurance disclosure standards.

COST OF THE COMPREHENSIVE AMERICAN HEALTH CARE ACT

The cost of health care now consumes over $500 billion of America's resources—that is 11 percent of our Nation's GNP. Health care costs are bankrupting American families. Mr. President, I believe we can solve this problem—without bankrupting our country in the process.

We don't need grandiose schemes that would require massive tax increases or raise the Federal deficit even higher. And Mr. President, we should not force struggling small businesses to shoulder the cost of health care, or we will put a lot of companies out of business and a lot of people out of work.

Of course, high quality, accessible health care doesn't come cheap. According to staff estimates, the Comprehensive American Health Care Act will cost about $4 billion a year over the next 5 years, for a total of $21 billion.

I propose using some of our savings from reasonable defense reductions—the so-called "peace dividend"—to fund my Health Care Program.

For example, the Defense Department once planned to buy more than 100 B-2 bombers over the next 5 years, at a cost of $5 to $8 billion each year, or a half-billion dollars per plane. Now those plans will apparently be scaled back, to 75 bombers at last report. In the safer world we live in today, still more of those B-2's could be cut back to pay for better health care in this country.

Alternately, our commitment to protect Europe, which we have kept since the end of World War II, currently costs us a total of $180 billion each year. We have spent the last 45 years worrying about the rest of the world, and sacrificing our own standard of living. Now is the ideal time to turn our attention home again, and make quality health care a reality for every American family.

CONCLUSION

The best health care system in the world is still right here in America. Of course, there are considerable problems which we must address. But the solutions can be found right here as well. All we need is the same American ingenuity and commitment to excellence which has made our health care system—and our Nation—the envy of the world. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in addressing America's health care needs and challenges.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2535

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Comprehensive American Health Care Act".

TITLE I—HEALTH CARE ACCESS FOR UNINSURED AND MEDICALLY UNDERSERVED INDIVIDUALS

Subtitle A—Tax Credits for Low and Moderate Income Individuals

SEC. 101. CREDIT FOR HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to refundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 34 the following new section:

"SEC. 34A. HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the qualified health insurance expenses paid by such individual during the taxable year.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable percentage' means 60 percent reduced (but not below zero) by 10 percentage points for each $1,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds the applicable dollar amount.

"(3) APPLICABLE DOLLAR AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'applicable dollar amount' means—

"(A) in the case of a taxpayer filing a joint return, $28,000,

"(B) in the case of any other taxpayer (other than a married individual filing a separate return), $18,000, and

"(C) in the case of a married individual filing a separate return, zero.

For purposes of this subsection, the rule of section 219(g)(4) shall apply.

"(b) QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified health insurance expenses' means amounts paid during the taxable year for insurance which constitutes medical care (within the meaning of section 213(d)(1)(C)). For purposes of the preceding sentence, the rules of section 213(d)(6) shall apply.

"(2) DOLLAR LIMIT ON QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—The amount of the qualified health insurance expenses paid during any taxable year which may be taken into account under subsection (a)(1) shall not exceed $1,200 ($2,400 in the case of a taxpayer filing a joint return).

"(3) ELECTION NOT TO TAKE CREDIT.—A taxpayer may elect for any taxable year to have amounts described in paragraph (1) not treated as qualified health insurance expenses.

"(c) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible individual' means, with respect to any period, an individual who is not covered during such period by a health plan maintained by an employer of such individual or such individual's spouse.

"(d) COORDINATION WITH ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF CREDIT.—

"(1) RECAPTURE OF EXCESS ADVANCE PAYMENTS.—If any payment is made to the individual under section 101(b) of the Comprehensive American Health Care Act during any calendar year, then the tax imposed by this chapter for the individual's last taxable year beginning in such calendar year shall be increased by the aggregate amount of such payments.

"(2) RECONCILIATION OF PAYMENTS ADVANCED AND CREDIT ALLOWED.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit (other than the credit allowed by subsection (a)) allowable under this subpart.

"(e) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) MEDICARE-ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—No expense shall be treated as a qualified health insurance expense if it is an amount paid for insurance for an individual for any period with respect to which such individual is entitled (or, on application without the payment of an additional premium, would be entitled to) benefits under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(2) SUBSIDIZED EXPENSES.—No expense shall be treated as a qualified health insurance expense to the extent—

"(A) such expense is paid, reimbursed, or subsidized (whether by being disregarded for purposes of another program or otherwise) by the Federal Government, a State or local government, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, and

"(B) the payment, reimbursement, or subsidy of such expense is not includible in the gross income of the recipient.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH MINIMUM TAX.—Rules similar to the rules of subsection (h) of section 32 shall apply to any credit to which this section applies.

"(f) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.".

(b) ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF CREDIT FOR SOME INDIVIDUALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall enter into an agreement with each State to provide for advance payments of the credit provided by section 34A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this subtitle) to eligible individuals in the form of certificates usable for the purchase of health insurance. The certificates shall be available at such locations as the Secretary determines will ensure the widest distribution.

(2) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An individual shall be eligible for advance payments described in paragraph (1) if such individual—

(i) has income for the taxable year which results in a poverty ratio of not more than 1.49, and

(ii) has filed a certificate with the Secretary of the Treasury described in subparagraph (C).

(B) POVERTY RATIO.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(i), the poverty ratio for any individual shall be determined by dividing such individual's family income for the taxable year (as determined for purposes of title XIX of the Social Security Act) by the income official poverty line for such year (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved.

(C) CERTIFICATE OF ELIGIBILITY.—A certificate described in this subparagraph is a statement furnished by the individual which—

(i) certifies that the individual will be eligible to receive the credit provided by section 34A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for the taxable year,

(ii) certifies that the poverty ratio of the individual for such year will be not more than 1.49,

(iii) certifies that the individual does not have another certificate with respect to such credit in effect for such year, and

(iv) estimates the amount of qualified health insurance expenses (as defined in section 34A(b) of such Code) for such year.

(c) PROGRAM TO INCREASE PUBLIC AWARENESS.—Not later than the first day of the first calendar year following the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary's delegate, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall establish a public awareness program to inform the public of the availability of the credit for health insurance expenses allowed under section 34A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this subtitle). Such public awareness program shall be designed to assure that individuals who may be eligible are informed of the availability of such credit and filing procedures.

(d) COORDINATION WITH DEDUCTIONS FOR HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—

(1) SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—Section 162(l) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (7) and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) COORDINATION WITH HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUM CREDIT.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount taken into account in computing the amount of the credit allowed under section 34A.".

(2) MEDICAL, DENTAL, ETC., EXPENSES.—Subsection (e) of section 213 of such Code is amended by inserting "or section 34A" after "section 21".

(e) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 34 the following new item:

"Sec. 34A. Health insurance expenses.".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Subtitle B—Rural Health Initiatives

SEC. 111. ELIMINATION OF SEPARATE AVERAGE STANDARDIZED AMOUNTS FOR HOSPITALS IN DIFFERENT AREAS.

Section 1886 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) On or before September 1, 1990, the Secretary and the Prospective Payment

Assessment Commission established under subsection (e) (in this subsection referred to as the 'Commission') shall each submit to the Congress a report recommending a methodology that provides for the elimination of the system of determining separate average standardized amounts for subsection (d) hospitals (as defined in subsection (d)(1)(B)) located in large urban, other urban, or rural areas under subsection (d)(2)(D). The methodologies set forth in such reports shall provide for the complete elimination of the average standardized amounts applicable to large urban, other urban, or rural area hospitals for discharges occurring on or after January 1, 1991. Such methodologies may provide for such changes to any of the adjustments, reductions, and special payments otherwise authorized or required by this section as the Secretary or the Commission determines to be necessary and appropriate to carry out the purposes of this subsection. But in no case may the Secretary or the Commission recommend or provide for a methodology that will result in total payments under part A of this title to hospitals at a level less than such hospitals were receiving on October 1, 1990.

"(2) Not later than October 1, 1990, the Secretary shall promulgate interim final regulations to implement the recommendations of the Secretary under paragraph (1) (including any recommended changes in the adjustments, reductions, and special payments otherwise authorized or required by this section).

"(3) If the Congress does not enact legislation after the date of the enactment of this subsection and before December 1, 1990, with respect to the average standardized amounts applicable to large urban, other urban, or rural area hospitals, then, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the average standardized amounts for such hospitals for discharges occurring on or after January 1, 1991, shall be determined in accordance with the interim final regulations promulgated under paragraph (2).

"(4) On or before July 1, 1991, the Secretary and the Commission shall each submit to the Congress a report specifying the manner in which the average standardized amounts determined under the regulations and which became effective in accordance with paragraph (3) should be adjusted appropriately to reflect differences in the operating costs of providing inpatient hospital services (as defined in subsection (a)(4)) for different categories of subsection (d) hospitals.".

SEC. 112. SCHOLARSHIP AND LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM PRIORITIES.

(a) SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.—Section 338A(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (2)(C), by striking the period and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) to individuals who reside in health manpower shortage areas;

"(4) to disadvantaged individuals and minorities;

"(5) to individuals who attend or plan to attend health professions schools that have records of training graduates who then intend to work in primary care fields and with underserved populations;

"(6) to nurses, nurse midwives, nurse practitioners, and physician assistants to increase access to perinatal care; and

"(7) to physicians who are willing to serve in a Health Manpower Shortage Area that has been identified by the Corps as having difficulties in attracting physicians.".

(b) LOAN REPAYMENT PROGRAM.—Section 338B(d) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l-1(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking the period and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) to applications from individuals who are legal residents of health manpower shortage areas or who, at the time of the submission of the application, reside in a health manpower shortage area;

"(4) to applications from disadvantaged individuals and minorities;

"(5) to applications from individuals who have demonstrated an interest in providing primary care service for the underserved through the participation of such individuals in internship and externship programs such as the commissioned officer, student training and extern program, and other programs;

"(6) to applications from nurses, nurse midwives, nurse practitioners, and physicians assistants to increase access to perinatal care and other essential primary care health services; and

"(7) to applications from physicians in the primary care fields of pediatrics, general internal medicine, general practice, and obstetrics and gynecology who are willing to serve in a health manpower shortage area that has been identified by the Corps as having difficulties in attracting such physicians.".

SEC. 113. NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS LOAN REPAYMENTS EXCLUDED FROM GROSS INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 136 as section 137 and by inserting after section 135 the following new section:

"SEC. 136. NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS LOAN REPAYMENTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Gross income shall not include any qualified loan repayment.

"(b) QUALIFIED LOAN REPAYMENT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified loan repayment' means any payment made on behalf of the taxpayer by the National Health Service Corps Loan Repayment Program under section 338B(g) of the Public Health Service Act.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (3) of section 338B(g) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking "Federal, State, or local" and inserting "State or local".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking the item relating to section 136 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 136. National Health Service Corps loan repayments.

"Sec. 137. Cross references to other Acts.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to payments made under section 338B(g) of the Public Health Service Act after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 114. DEMONSTRATION PROJECT TO EVALUATE AVAILABILITY OF PRENATAL CARE SERVICES IN RURAL AREAS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall from amounts retained by the Secretary under section 502(b)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 702(b)(1)(A)) as amended by section 6502 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, provide for a demonstration project evaluating the availability, accessibility, and use of prenatal care services by pregnant women residing in rural areas (as defined in section 1886(d)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct the demonstration project described in subsection (a) within 18 months of the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The Secretary shall transmit a summary of the demonstration project conducted under subsection (a) to relevant committees of Congress no later than 3 months after the date of completion of such project as provided in paragraph (1).

SEC. 115. INCREASED FUNDING FOR AREA HEALTH EDUCATION CENTERS.

Section 781(h)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 295g-1(h)(1)) is amended by striking "$20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991" and inserting "$25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991".

SEC. 116. PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES.

Part A of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300w et seq.) is amended—

(1) in section 1901, by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Of the amounts appropriated for each fiscal year under subsection (a), the Secretary shall make available not less than $25,000,000 in each such fiscal year to carry out section 1910A."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1910A. PREVENTIVE GRANTS FOR COUNTY HEALTH DEPARTMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—From amounts made available under section 1901(c), the Secretary shall make grants to county health departments to enable such departments to provide preventive health services.

"(b) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), a county health department shall prepare and submit, to the Secretary, an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—A county health department shall use amounts provided through a grant received under this section to—

"(1) provide immunization services to control the spread of infectious diseases;

"(2) improve maternal and infant health;

"(3) reduce adolescent pregnancy and improve reproductive health;

"(4) improve health education and the access of individuals to preventive health services; and

"(5) provide such other services as the Secretary determines appropriate.

"(d) DEFINITION.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations that define 'county health department' for purposes of this section.".

SEC. 117. REVIEW OF HOSPITAL REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO RURAL HOSPITALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within 12 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall review the requirements in regulations developed pursuant to section 1861(e) of the Social Security Act to determine which requirements could be made less administratively and economically burdensome for hospitals defined in section 1886(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act that are located in a rural area as defined in section 1886(d)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act without diminishing the quality of care provided by such hospitals to individuals entitled to receive benefits under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act. Such review shall specifically include standards related to staffing requirements.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to Congress by April 1, 1991, on the results of the review conducted under subsection (a), and include recommendations on which regulations if any, should be modified with respect to hospitals located outside a metropolitan statistical area as described in subsection (a).

Subtitle C—Reauthorization of Federal Vaccine and Immunization Program

SEC. 121. EXTENSION OF PROGRAM OF GRANTS FOR IMMUNIZATIONS.

Section 317(j)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247B(j)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking "there are authorized" and all that follows in the first sentence and inserting the following: "there are authorized to be appropriated $185,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1995";

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking "after the date" and all that follows and inserting the following: "after October 1, 1990, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary."; and

(3) by striking subparagraph (C).

SEC. 122. SUPPLY OF VACCINES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control, shall acquire and maintain a supply of vaccines sufficient to provide vaccinations throughout a 6-month period.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1995.

SEC. 123. EXTENSION OF NATIONAL VACCINE PROGRAM.

Section 2106 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300aa-6) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "there are authorized" and all that follows and inserting the following: "there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1995."; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "there are authorized" and all that follows and inserting the following: "there are authorized to be appropriated $30,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1995.".

TITLE II—HEALTH CARE COST CONTROL

Subtitle A—Medical Malpractice Reform

SEC. 201. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) there are serious flaws in the civil justice system under which tort claims are filed and resolved, including spiraling costs, unpredictability, impediments to United States competitiveness and inefficient use of the civil justice system;

(2) the cost of litigation has risen at a dramatic rate over the past 25 years and threatens to continue to rise at a similar rate for the foreseeable future;

(3) the rising cost of litigation has a direct and undesirable effect on interstate commerce and international competitiveness, and decreases the availability of products and services in commerce;

(4) excessive litigation has contributed to health care inflation through defensive medical practices and the high cost of medical malpractice insurance accounting for an estimated $25,000,000,000 of the health care bill of the United States in 1987;

(5) the medical malpractice crisis has contributed to the diminution of the availability of health care across the country, particularly in rural areas;

(6) the growing shortage of obstetrical care in the United States is particularly evident in the Commonwealth of Kentucky where 73 of 120 counties lack obstetrical care;

(7) there is a need for reasonable limits on the potential exposure of health care providers to liability for damages resulting from the provision of medical services, which contributes to the availability of health care, the net output of the economy of the United States, to the American consumer, and the general welfare; and

(8) because of the interstate nature of commerce and the pervasive nature of the involvement of the Federal Government in the provision of health care, no single State can act to address flaws in the civil justice system without threatening to inflict disparate and potentially discriminatory burdens, thereby diminishing the general welfare of the Nation and of the several States.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this subtitle to establish uniform rules of medical malpractice law, to encourage alternate means of dispute resolution, to provide fair and reasonable compensation for accident or injury, and to promote the free flow of commerce and the availability and affordability of liability insurance.

SEC. 202. APPLICABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b) or (c), this subtitle shall apply to any civil action against any individual based on professional medical malpractice, in any State or Federal court, in which damages are sought for physical injury or for physical or mental pain or suffering or for economic loss.

(b) PREEMPTION.—This subtitle shall preempt and supersede Federal or State law only to the extent such law is inconsistent with this subtitle. Any issue arising under the provisions of this subtitle that is not governed by the provisions of this subtitle shall be governed by applicable State or Federal law.

(c) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subtitle shall be construed to—

(1) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by any State under any provision of law;

(2) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by the United States;

(3) supersede any Federal law, except the Federal Employees Compensation Act and the Longshoremen's and Harborworkers' Compensation Act;

(4) affect the applicability of any provision of chapter 97 of title 28, United States Code, commonly known as the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976;

(5) preempt State choice-of-law rules with respect to claims brought by a foreign nation or a citizen of a foreign nation; or

(6) affect the right of any court to transfer venue or to apply the law of a foreign nation or to dismiss a claim of a foreign nation on the ground of inconvenient forum.

(d) ATTORNEY'S FEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (3), and except as provided in paragraph (2), in any action brought pursuant to the provisions of this subtitle, the court shall provide for an award of costs and reasonable attorney's fees to be paid to the prevailing party by the other parties to such action.

(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply in any case in which the losing party was qualified for assistance by the Legal Services Corporation, in the State in which such party resides, pursuant to the limits and guidelines described in part 1611 of title 45, Code of Federal Regulations.

(3) LIMITATION.—The amount of attorney fees ordered to be paid to the prevailing party under this subsection shall be limited to either—

(A) a percentage of the prevailing party's costs and fees equal to the percentage of any damage award such losing party had agreed to pay as a contingency fee to the attorney of such party if such party had prevailed, if the attorney for such losing party was to receive compensation based on a percentage of the recovery; or

(B) an amount that does not exceed the amount of attorney's fees such party is paying the attorney of such party in such matter, if the attorney for such losing party was not receiving compensation based on a percentage of the recovery.

SEC. 203. JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), joint and several liability shall not be applied to a civil liability action that is subject to this subtitle. A person found liable for damages in any such action may—

(1) be found liable, if at all, only for those damages directly attributable to the pro rata share of fault or responsibility of such person for the injury; and

(2) not be found liable for damages attributable to the pro rata share of fault or responsibility of any other person (without regard to whether that person is a party to the action) for the injury, including any person bringing the action.

(b) CONCERTED ACTION.—

(1) APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply as between persons acting in concert where the concerted action proximately caused the injury for which one or more persons are found liable for damages.

(2) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the terms "concerted action" and "acting in concert" mean the participation in joint conduct by two or more persons who agree to jointly participate in such conduct with actual knowledge of the wrongfulness of the conduct.

SEC. 204. ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.

(a) POLICY.—Because the traditional litigation process is not always suited to the timely, efficient, and inexpensive resolution of civil actions, it is the policy of the United States to encourage the creation and use of alternative dispute resolution techniques, and to promote the expeditious resolution of such actions.

(b) EXISTENCE OF OPTIONS.—In any action to which this subtitle applies, each attorney who has made an appearance in the case and who represents one or more of the parties to such action shall, with respect to each party separately represented, advise the party of the existence and availability of alternative dispute resolution options, including extrajudicial proceedings such as minitrials, third-party mediation, court supervised arbitration, and summary jury trial proceedings.

(c) CERTIFICATION.—Each attorney described in subsection (b) shall, at the time of the filing of the complaint or a responsive pleading, file notice with the court certifying that the attorney has so advised the client or clients of the attorney as required under subsection (b), and indicating whether such client will agree to one or more of the alternative dispute resolution techniques.

(d) ORDER GOVERNING FURTHER PROCEEDINGS.—If all parties to an action agree to proceed with one or more alternative dispute resolution proceedings, the court shall issue an appropriate order governing the conduct of such proceedings. The issuance of an order governing such further proceedings shall constitute a waiver, by each party subject to the order, of the right to proceed further in court.

SEC. 205. DEFINITIONS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subtitle:

(1) CLAIMANT.—The term "claimant" means any person who brings a civil action under this subtitle, and any person on whose behalf such action is brought, and, if such an action is brought through or on behalf of an estate, such term includes the decedent of the claimant, or, if it is brought through or on behalf of a minor or incompetent, such term includes the parent or guardian of the claimant.

(2) HARM.—The term "harm" means any harm recognized under the law of the State in which the civil action is maintained.

(3) STATE.—The term "State" means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

SEC. 206. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—This subtitle shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act, and shall apply to all civil actions filed on or after such date, including any civil action in which the harm or the conduct complained of occurred before such effective date.

(b) APPLICABLE TIME PERIOD.—If any such provision of this subtitle would shorten the period during which a person would otherwise be exposed to liability, the plaintiff may, notwithstanding the otherwise applicable time period, bring any civil action pursuant to this subtitle not later than within 1 year after the effective date of this subtitle.

SEC. 207. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of this subtitle or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held to be unconstitutional, the remainder of this subtitle and the application of the provisions of such to any person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

Subtitle B—Preventive Health Practices Promotion

SEC. 211. DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION ON RECOMMENDED PREVENTIVE HEALTH PRACTICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1804 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b-2) is amended—

(1) in the heading, by inserting "AND DISTRIBUTION OF PREVENTIVE HEALTH INFORMATION" after "MEDICARE BENEFITS";

(2) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 1804."; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Secretary shall develop (and, from time to time, shall revise) a summary of recommended preventive health care practices for elderly individuals entitled to benefits under this title.

"(2) The Secretary also shall develop a 1-page form that may be used by elderly individuals to record information, such as a personal and family medical history, that may be useful to physicians in connection with furnishing appropriate health care.

"(3) The summary and form shall be developed in consultation with national physician, consumer, and other health-related groups and shall be based on recommendations of any appropriate task force or similar group established by the Secretary.

"(4) The Secretary shall provide for the distribution of—

"(A) the summary developed under paragraph (1), and the form developed under paragraph (2), to each individual at the time of the individual's first becoming eligible for benefits under part A under section 226(a) or section 1818, as part of other materials sent to such an individual at such a time, and

"(B) the summary developed under paragraph (1) to individuals entitled to benefits under this title in conjunction with general mailings sent under this title to such individuals.".

(b) DEVELOPMENT OF SUMMARY AND FORM.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall initially develop the summary and form described in section 1804(b) of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (a)) not later than April 1, 1991, and shall first provide for the distribution of such summaries and forms by not later than October 1, 1991.

TITLE III—LONG-TERM CARE AND SENIOR HEALTH PROMOTION

Subtitle A—Long-Term Care Insurance Promotion

SEC. 301. TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE OR PLANS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Chapter 79 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to definitions) is amended by inserting after section 7702 the following new section:

"SEC. 7702A. TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE OR PLANS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) a long-term care insurance contract shall be treated as a health insurance contract,

"(2) amounts received under such a contract with respect to qualified long-term care services shall be treated as amounts received for personal injuries or sickness, and

"(3) any plan of an employer providing qualified long-term care services shall be treated as an accident or health plan.

"(b) LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACT.—For purposes of this title, the term 'long-term care insurance contract' means any insurance contract if—

"(1) the only insurance protection provided under such contract is coverage of qualified long-term care services,

"(2) such contract does not cover expenses incurred for services or items to the extent that such expenses are reimbursable under title XVIII of the Social Security Act or would be so reimbursable but for the application of a deductible or coinsurance amount,

"(3) such contract is guaranteed renewable,

"(4) such contract does not have any surrender value, and

"(5) all refunds of premiums, and all policyholder dividends or similar amounts, under such contract are to be applied as a reduction in future premiums or to increase future benefits.

"(c) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified long-term care services' means necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, and maintenance or personal care services, which—

"(A) are required by a chronically ill individual in a qualified facility, and

"(B) are provided pursuant to a plan of care prescribed by a physician.

"(2) CHRONICALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'chronically ill individual' means any individual who has been certified by a physician as—

"(i) being unable to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) at least 2 activities of daily living (as defined in subparagraph (B)), or

"(ii) having a similar level of disability due to cognitive impairment.

"(B) ACTIVITIES OF DAILY LIVING.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), each of the following is an activity of daily living:

"(i) BATHING.—The overall complex behavior of getting water and cleansing the whole body, including turning on the water for a bath, shower, or sponge bath, getting to, in, and out of a tub or shower, and washing and drying oneself.

"(ii) DRESSING.—The overall complex behavior of getting clothes from closets and drawers and then getting dressed.

"(iii) TOILETING.—The act of going to the toilet room for bowel and bladder function, transferring on and off the toilet, cleaning after elimination, and arranging clothes.

"(iv) TRANSFER.—The process of getting in and out of bed or in and out of a chair or wheelchair.

"(v) EATING.—The process of getting food from a plate or its equivalent into the mouth.

"(3) QUALIFIED FACILITY.—The term 'qualified facility' means—

"(A) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, licensed under State law, or

"(B) an individual's home if a physician, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subparagraph (A), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is not greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subparagraph (A).

"(4) MAINTENANCE OR PERSONAL CARE SERVICES.—The term 'maintenance or personal care services' means any service the primary purpose of which is to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in paragraph (2)(B).

"(5) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 79 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7702 the following new item:

"Sec. 7702A. Treatment of long-term care insurance or plans.".

SEC. 302. QUALIFIED LONG-TERM SERVICES TREATED AS MEDICAL CARE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (1) of section 213(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining medical care) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) for qualified long-term care services (as defined in section 7702A(c)), or".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—

(1) Subparagraph (D) of section 213(d)(1) of such Code (as amended by subsection (a)) is amended by striking "subparagraphs (A) and (B)" and inserting "subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C)".

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 213(d) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "subparagraphs (A) and (B)" and inserting "subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C)", and

(B) by striking "paragraph (1)(C)" in subparagraph (A) and inserting "paragraph (1)(D)".

(3) Paragraph (7) of section 213(d) of such Code is amended by striking "subparagraphs (A) and (B)" and inserting "subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C)".

SEC. 303. EMPLOYER PAYMENTS FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE NOT TREATED AS DEFERRED COMPENSATION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subparagraph (B) of section 404(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to plans providing certain deferred benefits) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—

"(i) WELFARE BENEFIT FUNDS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any benefit provided through a welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)).

"(ii) PREMIUMS FOR LONG-TERM INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subclause (II), subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any amount paid or incurred for any long-term care insurance contract.

"(II) EXCEPTION.—Subclause (I) shall not apply to any amount paid or incurred by the taxpayer during any taxable year to the extent such amount exceeds the premium which would have been payable under the contract for such year under a level premium structure.".

(b) CAFETERIA PLANS.—Paragraph (2) of section 125(c) of such Code (relating to deferred compensation plans excluded) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) EXCEPTION FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), amounts paid or incurred for any long-term care insurance contract shall not be treated as deferred compensation to the extent section 404(b)(2)(A) does not apply to such amounts by reason of section 404(b)(2)(B)(ii).".

SEC. 304. LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to refundable credits), as amended by section 101, is amended by redesignating section 35 as section 36 and by inserting after section 34A the following new section:

"SEC. 35. LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to applicable percentage of the qualified long-term care premiums paid during such taxable year.

"(b) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'applicable percentage' means 20 percent reduced (but not below zero) by 1 percentage point for each $1,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds the base amount.

"(2) BASE AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1) the term 'base amount' means—

"(A) except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, $25,000,

"(B) $40,000 in the case of joint return, and

"(C) zero in the case of a taxpayer who—

"(i) is married at the close of the taxable year (within the meaning of section 7703) but does not file a joint return for such taxable year, and

"(ii) does not live apart from his spouse at all times during the taxable year.

"(c) DOLLAR LIMITATION ON AMOUNT DEDUCTIBLE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the qualified long-term care premiums taken to account under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed the limitation determined under the following table:

"In the case of an individual with an attained age before the close of the taxable year of:	The limitation is:
40 or less	$200
More than 40 but not more than 50	375
More than 50 but not more than 60	750
More than 60 but not more than 70	1,600
More than 70	2,000.

In the case of a joint return, the limitation of this paragraph shall be applied separately with respect to each spouse.

"(2) INDEXING.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1991, each dollar amount contained in paragraph (1) shall be increased by the medical care cost adjustment for such taxable year. If any increase determined under the preceding sentence is not a multiple of $10, such increase shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $10.

"(B) MEDICAL CARE COST ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of clause (i), the medical care cost adjustment for any taxable year is the percentage (if any) by which—

"(i) the medical care component of the Consumer Price Index (as defined in section 1(f)(5)) for August of the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, exceeds

"(ii) such component for August of 1990.

"(d) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE PREMIUMS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified long-term care premiums' means the amount paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year for any long-term care insurance contract covering the taxpayer, but only to the extent the amount so paid does not exceed the premiums which would have been payable under the contract for such taxable year under a level premium structure.

"(e) COORDINATION WITH ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF CREDIT.—

"(1) RECAPTURE OF EXCESS ADVANCE PAYMENTS.—If any payment is made to the individual under section 304(b) of the Comprehensive American Health Care Act during any calendar year, then the tax imposed by this chapter for the individual's last taxable year beginning in such calendar year shall be increased by the aggregate amount of such payments.

"(2) RECONCILIATION OF PAYMENTS ADVANCED AND CREDIT ALLOWED.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit (other than the credit allowed by subsection (a)) allowable under this subpart.

"(f) COORDINATION WITH MINIMUM TAX.—Rules similar to the rules of subsection (h) of section 32 shall apply to any credit to which this section applies.

"(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.".

(b) ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF CREDIT FOR SOME INDIVIDUALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall enter into an agreement with each State to provide for advance payments of the credit provided by section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this subtitle) to eligible individuals in the form of certificates usable for the purchase of long-term care insurance. The certificates shall be available at such locations as the Secretary determines will ensure the widest distribution.

(2) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An individual shall be eligible for advance payments described in paragraph (1) if such individual—

(i) has income for the taxable year which results in a poverty ratio of not more than 1.49, and

(ii) has filed a certificate with the Secretary of the Treasury described in subparagraph (C).

(B) POVERTY RATIO.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(i), the poverty ratio for any individual shall be determined by dividing such individual's family income for the taxable year (as determined for purposes of title XIX of the Social Security Act) by the income official poverty line for such year (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved.

(C) CERTIFICATE OF ELIGIBILITY.—A certificate described in this subparagraph is a statement furnished by the individual which—

(i) certifies that the individual will be eligible to receive the credit provided by section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for the taxable year,

(ii) certifies that the poverty ratio of the individual for such year will be not more than 1.49,

(iii) certifies that the individual does not have another certificate with respect to such credit in effect for such year, and

(iv) estimates the amount of qualified long-term care premiums (as defined in section 35(d) of such Code) for such year.

(c) PROGRAM TO INCREASE PUBLIC AWARENESS.—Not later than the first day of the first calendar year following the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary's delegate, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall establish a public awareness program to inform the public of the availability of the credit for long-term care insurance expenses allowed under section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this subtitle). Such public awareness program shall be designed to assure that individuals who may be eligible are informed of the availability of such credit and filing procedures.

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 35. Long-term care insurance credit.

"Sec. 36. Overpayments of tax.".

SEC. 305. EXEMPTION FROM 10-PERCENT ADDITIONAL TAX; CERTAIN EXCHANGES NOT TAXABLE.

(a) EXEMPTION FROM ADDITIONAL TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 72(t) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to additional tax not to apply to certain distributions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) DISTRIBUTIONS USED TO PAY FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—Any distribution made on or after the date on which the employee attains age 50 to the extent such distribution is used, not later than the day 60 days after the day on which such distribution is made, to pay premiums on a long-term care insurance contract for such employee.".

(2) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 72(t)(2) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "subparagraph (A) or (C)" and inserting "subparagraph (A), (C), or (E)",

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, any premiums paid on a long-term care insurance contract shall not be treated as paid for medical care to the extent such premiums are taken into account under subparagraph (E).".

(b) CERTAIN EXCHANGES NOT TAXABLE.—Subsection (a) of section 1035 of such Code (relating to certain exchanges of insurance contracts) is amended by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting "; or", and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) in the case of an individual who has attained age 50, a contract of life insurance or an endowment or annuity contract for a long-term care insurance contract.".

SEC. 306. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this subtitle shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Subtitle B—Medicare Benefit Improvements

SEC. 311. MEDICARE COVERAGE OF SCREENING MAMMOGRAPHY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x), as revived by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989 and as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subsection (s)—

(A) in paragraph (11), by striking all that follows "(bb))" and inserting a semicolon,

(B) in paragraph (12)(C), by striking all that follows "area)" and inserting "; and", and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) screening mammography (as defined in subsection (jj));"; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (ii) the following new subsection:

"Screening Mammography

"(jj) The term 'screening mammography' means a radiologic procedure provided to a woman for the purpose of early detection of breast cancer and includes a physician's interpretation of the results of the procedure.".

(b) PAYMENT AND COVERAGE.—Section 1834 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1)(B), by inserting "and subject to subsection (c)(1)(A)" after "conversion factors", and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) PAYMENTS AND STANDARDS FOR SCREENING MAMMOGRAPHY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, with respect to expenses incurred for screening mammography (as defined in section 1861(jj))—

"(A) payment may be made only for screening mammography conducted consistent with the frequency permitted under paragraph (2);

"(B) payment may be made only if the screening mammography meets the quality standards established under paragraph (3); and

"(C) the amount of the payment under this part shall, subject to the deductible established under section 1833(b), be equal to 80 percent of the least of—

"(i) the actual charge for the screening,

"(ii) the fee schedule established under subsection (b) or the fee schedule established under section 1848, whichever is applicable, with respect to both the professional and technical components of the screening mammography, or

"(iii) the limit established under paragraph (4) for the screening mammography.

"(2) FREQUENCY COVERED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to revision by the Secretary under subparagraph (B)—

"(i) No payment may be made under this part for screening mammography performed on a woman under 35 years of age.

"(ii) Payment may be made under this part for only 1 screening mammography performed on a woman over 34 years of age, but under 40 years of age.

"(iii) In the case of a woman over 39 years of age, but under 50 years of age, who—

"(I) is at a high risk of developing breast cancer (as determined pursuant to factors identified by the Secretary), payment may not be made under this part for a screening mammography performed within the 11 months of a previous screening mammography, or

"(II) is not at a high risk of developing breast cancer, payment may not be made under this part for a screening mammography performed within the 23 months after a previous screening mammography.

"(iv) In the case of a woman over 49 years of age, but under 65 years of age, payment may not be made under this part for screening mammography performed within 11 months after a previous screening mammography.

"(v) In the case of a woman over 64 years of age, payment may not be made for screening mammography performed within 23 months after a previous screening mammography.

"(B) REVISION OF FREQUENCY.—

"(i) REVIEW.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Director of the National Cancer Institute, shall review periodically the appropriate frequency for performing screening mammography, based on age and such other factors as the Secretary believes to be pertinent.

"(ii) REVISION OF FREQUENCY.—The Secretary, taking into consideration the review made under clause (i), may revise from time to time the frequency with which screening mammography may be paid for under this subsection, but no such revision shall apply to screening mammography performed before January 1, 1993.

"(3) QUALITY STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall establish standards to assure the safety and accuracy of screening mammography performed under this part. Such standards shall include the requirements that—

"(A) the equipment used to perform the mammography must be specifically designed for mammography and must meet radiologic standards established by the Secretary for mammography;

"(B) the mammography must be performed by an individual who—

"(i) is licensed by a State to perform radiological procedures, or

"(ii) is certified as qualified to perform radiological procedures by such an appropriate organization as the Secretary specifies in regulations;

"(C) the results of the mammography must be interpreted by a physician—

"(i) who is certified as qualified to interpret radiological procedures by such an appropriate board as the Secretary specifies in regulations, or

"(ii) who is certified as qualified to interpret screening mammography procedures by such a program as the Secretary recognizes in regulation as assuring the qualifications of the individual with respect to such interpretation; and

"(D) with respect to the first screening mammography performed on a woman for which payment is made under this part, there are satisfactory assurances that the results of the mammography will be placed in permanent medical records maintained with respect to the woman.

"(4) LIMIT.—

"(A) $50, INDEXED.—Except as provided by the Secretary under subparagraph (B), the limit established under this paragraph—

"(i) for screening mammography performed in 1991, is $50, and

"(ii) for screening mammography performed in a subsequent year is the limit established under this paragraph for the preceding year increased by the percentage increase in the MEI for that subsequent year.

"(B) REDUCTION OF LIMIT.—The Secretary shall review from time to time the appropriateness of the amount of the limit established under this paragraph. The Secretary may, with respect to screening mammography performed in a year after 1992, reduce the amount of such limit as it applies nationally or in any area to the amount that the Secretary estimates is required to assure that screening mammography of an appropriate quality is readily and conveniently available during the year.

"(C) APPLICATION OF LIMIT IN HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT SETTING.—The Secretary shall provide for an appropriate allocation of the limit established under this paragraph between professional and technical components in the case of hospital outpatient screening mammography (and comparable situations) where there is a claim for professional services separate from the claim for the radiologic procedure.

"(5) LIMITING CHARGES OF NONPARTICIPATING PHYSICIANS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of mammography screening performed on or after January 1, 1991, for which payment is made under this subsection, if a nonparticipating physician or supplier provides the screening to an individual entitled to benefits under this part, the physician or supplier may not charge the individual more than the limiting charge (as defined in subparagraph (B), or if less, as defined in subsection (b)(5)(B) or as defined in section 1848(g)(2)).

"(B) LIMITING CHARGE DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'limiting charge' means, with respect to screening mammography performed—

"(i) in 1991, 125 percent of the limit established under paragraph (4),

"(ii) in 1992, 120 percent of the limit established under paragraph (4), or

"(iii) after 1992, 115 percent of the limit established under paragraph (4).

"(C) ENFORCEMENT.—If a physician or supplier knowing and willfully imposes a charge in violation of subparagraph (A), the Secretary may apply sanctions against such physician or supplier in accordance with section 1842(j)(2).".

(c) CERTIFICATION OF SCREENING MAMMOGRAPHY QUALITY STANDARDS.—

(1) Section 1863 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395z), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by inserting "or whether screening mammography meets the standards established under section 1834(c)(3)," after "1832(a)(2)(F)(i),".

(2) The first sentence of section 1864(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395aa(a)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by inserting before the period the following: ", or whether screening mammography meets the standards established under section 1834(c)(3)".

(3) Section 1865(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395bb(a)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by inserting "1834(c)(3)," after "1832(a)(2)(F)(i),".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1833(a)(2)(E) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(a)(2)(E)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by inserting ", but excluding screening mammography" after "imaging services".

(2) Section 1862(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastropnic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) in subparagraph (A), by striking "subparagraph (B), (C), (D), or (E)" and inserting "a succeeding subparagraph",

(ii) in subparagraph (D), by striking "and" at the end,

(iii) in subparagraph (E), by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting ", and", and

(iv) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(F) in the case of screening mammography, which is performed more frequently than is covered under section 1834(c)(2) or which does not meet the standards established under section 1834(c)(3), and, in the case of screening pap smear, which is performed more frequently than is provided under section 1861(nn);"; and

(B) in paragraph (7), by inserting "or under paragraph (1)(F)" after "(1)(B)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to screening mammography performed on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 312. IN-HOME RESPITE CARE FOR CERTAIN CHRONICALLY DEPENDENT INDIVIDUALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1832(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395k(a)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)(A)—

(A) by inserting "(i)" after "(A)", and

(B) by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: ", and (ii) in-home respite care for a chronically dependent individual for up to 80 hours in any 12-month period described in section 1861(kk)(4), but not to exceed 80 hours in any calendar year"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new sentence:

"In the case of in-home respite care (described in paragraph (2)(A)(ii)) provided to a chronically dependent individual on any day, such care provided for 3 hours or less on the day shall be counted (for purposes of the limitation in such paragraph) as 3 hours of such care.".

(b) IN-HOME RESPITE CARE FOR CHRONICALLY DEPENDENT INDIVIDUAL DEFINED.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x), as amended by section 2(a)(2) of this Act, is amended by inserting after subsection (jj) the following new subsection:

"In-Home Respite Care; Chronically Dependent Individual

"(kk)(1) The term 'in-home respite care' means the following items and services furnished, under the supervision of a registered professional nurse, to a chronically dependent individual (as defined in paragraph (2)) during the period described in paragraph (4) by a home health agency or by others under arrangements with them made by such agency in a place of residence used as such individual's home:

"(A) Services of a homemaker/home health aide (who has successfully completed a training program approved by the Secretary).

"(B) Personal care services.

"(C) Nursing care provided by a licensed professional nurse.

"(2) The term 'chronically dependent individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician as—

"(A) being unable to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) at least 2 activities of daily living (as defined in paragraph (3)), or

"(B) having a similar level of disability due to cognitive impairment.

"(3) The 'activities of daily living', referred to in paragraph (2), are as follows:

"(i) Eating.

"(ii) Bathing.

"(iii) Dressing.

"(iv) Toileting.

"(v) Transferring in and out of a bed or in and out of a chair.

"(4)(A) The 12-month period described in this paragraph is the 1-year period beginning on the date that the Secretary determines that a chronically dependent individual has incurred out-of-pocket part B cost sharing (as defined in paragraph (5)(A)) in an amount equal to the part B limit (as determined under paragraph (5)(B)) for the year.

"(B) In the case of an individual who qualifies under subparagraph (A) within 12 months after previously qualifying, the subsequent qualification shall begin a new 12-month period under this paragraph.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) The term 'out-of-pocket part B cost sharing' means, with respect to an individual covered under part B, the amounts of expenses that the individual incurs that are attributable to—

"(i) the deductions established under section 1833(b), and

"(ii) the difference between the payment amount provided under part B and the payment amount that would be provided under part B if '100 percent' and '0 percent' were substituted for '80 percent' and '20 percent', respectively, each place either appears in sections 1833(a), 1833(i)(2), 1834(c)(1)(C), 1835(b)(2), 1866(a)(2)(A), 1881(b)(2), and 1881(b)(3).

"(B)(i) The part B limit for 1991 is $1,780. The part B limit for any succeeding year shall be such an amount (rounded to the nearest multiple of $1) as the Secretary estimates, for that succeeding year, will reflect a level of out-of-pocket part B expenses that only 5.5 percent of the average number of individuals enrolled under part B (other than individuals enrolled with an eligible organization under section 1876 or an organization described in section 1833(a)(1)(A)) will equal or exceed in that succeeding year.

"(ii) Not later than September 1 of each year (beginning with 1991), the Secretary shall promulgate the part B limit under this subparagraph for the succeeding year.".

(c) PAYMENT.—Section 1833(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(a)), as restored by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by inserting "(A)(ii)," after "subparagraphs" the first place it appears,

(2) in paragraph (3), by striking "(D)" and inserting "(A)(ii), (D),", and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"Payment for in-home respite care for chronically dependent individuals shall be paid on the basis of an hour of such care provided. In applying paragraph (2) in the case of an organization receiving payment under clause (A) of paragraph (1) or under a reasonable cost reimbursement contract under section 1876 and providing coverage of in-home respite care, the Secretary shall provide for an appropriate adjustment in the payment amounts otherwise made to reflect the aggregate increase in payments that would otherwise be made with respect to enrollees in the organization if payments were made other than under such clause or such a contract if payments were to be made on an individual-by-individual basis.".

(d) CERTIFICATION.—Section 1835(a)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395n(a)(2)), as restored by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (E), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (F), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following new subparagraph:

"(G) in the case of in-home respite care provided to a chronically dependent individual during a 12-month period, the individual was a chronically dependent individual during the 3-month period immediately preceding the beginning of the 12-month period.".

(e) STANDARDS FOR UTILIZATION.—

(1) Section 1862(a) (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)), as amended by section 2(d)(2) of this Act, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) in subparagraph (E), by striking "and" at the end,

(ii) in subparagraph (F), by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting ", and", and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G) in the case of in-home respite care for chronically dependent individuals, which is not reasonable and necessary to assure the health and condition of the individual is maintained in the individual's non-institutional residence;"; and

(B) in paragraph (6), by inserting "and except, in the case of in-home respite care, as is otherwise permitted under paragraph (1)(G)" after "paragraph (1)(C)".

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall take appropriate efforts to assure the quality, and provide for appropriate utilization of, in-home respite care for chronically dependent individuals under the amendments made by this section.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to items and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 313. EXTENDING HOME HEALTH SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(m) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(m)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "For purposes of paragraphs (1) and (4) and sections 1814(a)(2)(C) and 1835(a)(2)(A), nursing care and home health aide services shall be considered to be provided or needed on an 'intermittent' basis if they are provided or needed less than 7 days each week and, in the case they are provided or needed for 7 days each week, if they are provided or needed for a period of up to 38 consecutive days.".

(b) PAYMENT UNDER PART B.—Section 1833(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(d)), as restored by section 201(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) by striking "(d) No payment" and inserting "(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no payment"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) In the case of home health services furnished to an individual enrolled under this part for which payment is made only as a result of the application of the last sentence of section 1861(m), payment shall be made under this part.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to services furnished in cases of initial periods of home health services beginning on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 314. EXPANSION OF HOSPICE BENEFIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1812 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395d), as restored by section 101(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989 and as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(4), by striking "90 days each" and all that follows through "with respect to" and inserting the following: "90 days each, a subsequent period of 30 days, and a subsequent extension period with respect to"; and

(2) in subsection (d)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "90 days each" and all that follows through "lifetime" and inserting the following: "90 days each, a subsequent period of 30 days, and a subsequent extension period during the individual's lifetime", and

(B) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "a 90- or 30-day period," and inserting "a 90- or 30-day period or a subsequent extension period,".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1814(a)(7)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395f(a)(7)(A)), as restored by section 101(a)(1) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in clause (ii), by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting ", and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) in a subsequent extension period, the medical director or physician described in clause (i)(II) recertifies at the beginning of the period that the individual is terminally ill;".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to care and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 315. FINANCING THROUGH INCREASE IN MEDICARE PART B PREMIUM.

(a) INCREASE IN PREMIUM.—Section 1839 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r), as restored by section 202(a) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) Except as provided in subsection (f), the monthly premium for each individual enrolled under this part otherwise determined, without regard to this subsection, shall be increased (for months occurring in 1991 through 1995) by the following additional premium or (for months after December 1995) by such an additional premium determined in accordance with paragraph (2):

"(A) For months in 1991, $.80.

"(B) For months in 1992, $1.00.

"(C) For months in 1993, $1.00.

"(D) For months in 1994, $1.20.

"(E) For months in 1995, $1.30.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall, during September of 1995 and of each year thereafter, determine and promulgate the additional premium under this subsection for months in the succeeding year. Such premium amount shall be equal to the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount of premiums collected under this subsection for months in the year will equal the total of the benefits and administrative costs which the Secretary estimates will be payable in such year from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund that are attributable to the amendments made by the Medicare Benefit Improvements Act of 1990. In calculating such additional premium, the Secretary shall include an appropriate amount for a contingency margin, and shall adjust such premium to take into account the amounts by which the additional premiums established under this subsection with respect to months in any year are greater or less than the amounts required to pay for benefits paid and such administrative costs incurred in such year that are attributable to the coverage of screening mammography, in-home respite care, hospice, and home health benefits under this part.

"(B) If any premium increase for a month under this paragraph is not a multiple of 10 cents, the Secretary shall round the increase to the nearest multiple of 10 cents.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1839 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r), as restored by section 202(a) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended—

(A) in the second sentence of subsections (a)(1) and (a)(4), by inserting "(other than costs relating to the amendments made by the Medicare Benefit Improvements Act of 1990)" before the period;

(B) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "and (e)" and inserting ", (e), and (g)";

(C) in subsection (a)(3), by striking "subsection (e)" and inserting "subsections (e) and (g)";

(D) in subsection (b), by striking "determined under subsection (a) or (e)" and inserting "otherwise determined under this section (without regard to subsections (f) and (g))"; and

(E) in subsection (e)(1), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (g)," after "subsection (a)".

(2) Section 1844(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w(a)), as restored by section 202(a) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Repeal Act of 1989, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"In computing the amount of aggregate premiums and premiums per enrollee under paragraph (1), there shall not be taken into account premiums attributable to section 1839(g).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to monthly premiums for months beginning with January 1991.

Subtitle C—Senior Health Insurance Consumer Protection

SEC. 321. CERTIFICATION OF HEALTH INSURANCE POLICIES FOR THE ELDERLY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall no later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act establish a procedure whereby health insurance policies for the elderly may be certified by the Secretary as meeting minimum standards and requirements set forth in subsection (b). Such certification shall remain in effect if the insurer files a notarized statement with the Secretary no later than June 30 of each year stating that the policy continues to meet such standards and requirements and if the insurer submits such additional data as the Secretary finds necessary to verify independently the accuracy of such notarized statement. Where the Secretary determines such policy meets (or continues to meet) such standards and requirements, he shall authorize the insurer to have printed on such policy (but only in accordance with such requirements and conditions as the Secretary may require) an emblem which the Secretary shall cause to be designed for use as an indication that a policy has received the Secretary's certification. The Secretary shall provide each State commissioner or superintendent of insurance with a list of all the policies which have received his certification.

(b) CERTIFICATION AND REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall certify under this section any health insurance policies for the elderly, or continue certification of such a policy, only if he or she finds that such policy—

(1) meets or exceeds the National Association of Insurance Commissioners Model Act Standards;

(2) is guaranteed to be renewable on the basis of the same premium rate (or, if a different rate, a rate that is adjusted on a class basis);

(3) limits the exclusion of preexisting conditions in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary;

(4) allows purchasers 30 days to rescind their purchase of the policy;

(5) provides that policies of such health insurance be written in simplified language which can be understood by purchasers, as specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary; and

(6) meets or exceeds such other requirements as the Secretary (in consultation with State commissioners or superintendents of insurance) shall by regulation prescribe.

(c) STUDY AND REPORT.—The Secretary shall 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act conduct a study and issue a report to Congress on health insurance policies for the elderly. Such study and report shall be conducted and issued no later than 6 months after the 3-year period commencing after the date of enactment of this Act.

COMPREHENSIVE AMERICAN HEALTH CARE PLAN

I. HEALTH CARE ACCESS FOR UNINSURED AND UNDERSERVED AMERICANS

Health Insurance Tax Credits for Low and Moderate Income Americans.

Rural Health Initiatives.

Reauthorization of Federal Vaccine and Immunization Program.

II. HEALTH CARE COST CONTROL

Medical Malpractice Reform.

Preventative Medicine Initiative.

III. LONG-TERM CARE AND SENIOR HEALTH PROMOTION

Long-Term Care Insurance Tax Credits.

Medicare Benefits Expansion.

Senior Health Insurance Consumer Protection.

Estimated total cost is $21.1 billion over five years.

I. HEALTH CARE ACCESS FOR UNINSURED AND UNDERSERVED AMERICANS

Subtitle A. Tax Credits for Low and Moderate Income Individuals.

Subtitle B. Rural Health Initiatives:

Eliminate Medicare Urban/Rural Differential.

Expand and Target National Health Service Corps Assistance.

Study Barriers to Prenatal Care in Rural Areas.

Increase Funding for Area Health Education Centers.

Review Medicare Regulation of Rural Hospitals.

A. Health insurance tax credits (section 101)

Provides low and moderate income Americans tax-based assistance to purchase health insurance. Amount of credit is determined by income level and actual insurance expenditures. Credit is made refundable to reach taxpayers below filing threshold.

Taxpayers filing jointly with combined incomes of $28,000 or less would receive a maximum credit of $1,440; taxpayers filing jointly with incomes of $33,000 and above would receive a maximum credit of $240.

Taxpayers filing a separate return with incomes of $18,000 and below would receive a maximum credit of $720; taxpayers filing a separate return with incomes of $23,000 or more would receive a maximum credit of $120.

B. Rural health initiatives (sections 111-117)

Section 111.—Eliminate Medicare Urban/Rural Hospital Differential. Eliminates Medicare Part A reimbursement differential between urban and rural hospitals by FY-91, rather than FY-95 as is scheduled under current law. Harmless to urban hospitals.

Sections 112-113.—Expand and Target National Health Service Corps Assistance. Revitalizes National Health Service Corps program and increases funding for the NHSC loan repayment program. The NHSC program provides scholarships to and repays health practitioners willing to practice in rural and other medically underserved regions. Populations with high percentages of uninsured would be targeted.

Section 114.—Study of Prenatal Care in Rural Areas. Establishes a demonstration project to evaluate availability, accessibility, and use of prenatal care services by pregnant women residing in rural areas.

Section 115.—Increase Funding for Area Health Education Centers. Area Health Education Centers provide continuing education and clinical instruction in or near medically underserved areas for physicians, nurse practitioners, and other health care professionals. AHECs provide an important incentive for health care professionals to settle in rural areas.

Section 116.—Preventative Health Services. Allows country health departments to apply for grants to provide immunization services, maternal and infant health care, health education, and preventative health services.

Section 117.—Review Medicare Regulation of Rural Hospitals. Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to review regulations applying to rural hospitals to determine which requirements could be made less administratively and economically burdensome without diminishing quality.

C. Reauthorize Federal vaccine and immunization programs (sections 121-123)

Reauthorizes and expands Federal vaccine and immunization programs to require the Center for Disease Control to maintain a 6-month supply of vaccines.

II. HEALTH CARE COST CONTROL

Subtitle A. Medical Malpractice Reform.

Subtitle B. Preventive Health Practices Promotion.

A. Medical malpractice reform (sections 201-207)

Provides urgently needed reforms of the medical liability system recommended by the American Hospital Association and the American College of Nurse Midwives. Abolishes joint and several liability, deters frivolous suits by requiring the losing party to pay the attorneys' fee and costs of the prevailing party, and promotes the use of alternative dispute resolution in medical malpractice cases.

B. Preventative health practices promotion (section 211)

Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop and distribute to Medicare beneficiaries a summary of recommended health care practices for elderly individuals. Also requires the Secretary to develop a 1-page form to record personal and family medical history.

III. LONG-TERM CARE AND SENIOR HEALTH PROMOTION

Subtitle A. Long-Term Care Insurance Tax Credits.

Subtitle B. Medicare Program Enhancements.

Subtitle C. Senior Health Insurance Consumer Protection.

A Long-term care insurance tax credits (sections 301-306)

Provides senior and other Americans with tax-based assistance to purchase long-term care insurance. Assistance weighted to provide most assistance to seniors, but all taxpayers are eligible to receive the credit. Maximum credit is $1,000 to seniors over the age of 70; taxpayers aged 40 and less would receive a maximum credit of $40. Credit is made refundable to reach taxpayers below filing threshold.

B. Medicare program enhancements (sections 311-315)

Restores certain important benefits lost in the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Provides for biennial mammography screening for Medicare beneficiaries. Home Health Care coverage would be expanded to a maximum of 38 consecutive days. In-home respite care would be provided for chronically dependent individuals. Would eliminate the 210-day lifetime limit for Medicare covered hospice care.

C. Senior health insurance consumer protection (section 321)

Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a certification system for health insurance for the elderly. Certified policies would be required to meet or exceed the National Association of Insurance Commissioners Model Act Standards. Certified policies would be guaranteed to be renewable at the same premium rate or be adjusted on a class basis. Exclusion of preexisting conditions would be limited. Provides purchasers with a 30-day period to rescind their purchase of a certified study. Requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study health insurance policies for the elderly three years after enactment.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 2536. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to give States the option of providing for coverage of certain HIV-related services for certain individuals who have been diagnosed as being HIV-positive, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICAID AIDS AND HIV AMENDMENTS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today, I rise on behalf of myself and Senators ADAMS, KENNEDY, DODD, and INOUYE to introduce the Medicaid AIDS and HIV Amendments of 1990. This bill, which was recently introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman HENRY WAXMAN, directly addresses the public health emergency presented by the acquired immune deficiency syndrome [AIDS]. This legislation would expand access to health care through the Medicaid Program and would address the crisis in financing and delivering that health care.

The first of four provisions in the Senate bill, identical to the House bill H.R. 4080, will give States the option of creating a new category of eligibility in Medicaid by providing individuals infected with the human immunodeficiency virus [HIV] access to a variety of outpatient services including prescription drugs.

AIDS drugs have offered the only hope to individuals with HIV infection. The National Institutes of Health and the Food and Drug Administration have recommended and approved the use of some therapeutic drugs, notably AZT, as antiviral therapies and as prophylactic treatments used to prevent or delay the onset of illness. I would note that a Food and Drug Administration advisory council has recently recommended that AZT be approved as an antiviral therapy in HIV infected children. I would hope that this recommendation would be quickly implemented. Unfortunately, many of our poorest and most impoverished citizens infected with HIV do not have access to Medicaid until they are disabled by the disease—meaning that once they are sick and hospitalized Medicaid will pay the treatment costs, but it will not pay for the early intervention programs that prevent or delay hospitalization before the onset of illness. This bill would correct that impediment to early intervention and treatment.

Second, we would allow States to use their Medicaid Programs to pay for home and community-based care for children with AIDS. Hospitalization is not an appropriate nor is it a compassionate way to provide care for most children with AIDS and HIV infection. I would hope my colleagues would agree that for children without homes, programs such as Grandma's House here in Washington and Hale House in New York City provide the kind of environment a child needs to grow and strengthen and fight this disease. We should be doing all we can to promote such programs.

Third, this legislation mandates an enhanced Medicaid payment to hospitals which serve a disproportionate number of AIDS patients. The complexity of services required to treat people with AIDS places a tremendous burden on a hospital's ability to provide care to all of its patients. Many States' Medicaid Programs simply do not adequately reimburse hospitals for the costs of providing AIDS care and they are, as a result, incurring serious losses.

And finally, Mr. President, we would allow States the option of using their Medicaid dollars to pay for the private health insurance premiums of people who have had to stop working because of illness and who would otherwise become eligible for Medicaid. This provision would allow patients to maintain their private group health insurance coverage at a savings to the State and Federal governments.

Two epidemics struck with almost simultaneous impact and devastation in the 1980's, "crack" cocaine and AIDS. Both diseases. Both deadly. Both now disproportionately affecting the poor and vulnerable.

How and when we adequately respond to these diseases will have a far-reaching impact on the continuing ability of our health care system to provide needed health care services to all Americans including those addicted, infected, and those not. I would argue that to date we have not responded entirely appropriately nor entirely adequately to these epidemics, nor have we responded with sufficient urgency to those whose lives have been or will be lost to one or another or both of these diseases. Whatever the final impact of this disease, may we now, finally, make decisions about the kinds of care we will provide to people with AIDS and HIV and the types of policies we will implement in order to lessen the social as well as economic impact of this epidemic?

In the first decade of this disease we spent an enormous sum of money on AIDS research. And rightly so. But today we are at a crossroads of sorts—one with both financial as well as ethical implications. Simply put, we have not yet adequately transferred the medical advances developed in the laboratory to those most in need of the various life-sustaining therapies which have resulted from this research. This, too, must change.

I have long shared with other Senators a feeling ranging between disappointment and frustration that there seems to be so little interest in what was new in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, Public Law 100-690. Indeed, I believe our drug bill got lost. And in particular, that part of the bill, section 2012—which is now statute—entitled "Purposes," which called for treatment upon request. To wit:

> It is the purpose of this subtitle * * * to increase to the greatest extent possible, the availability and quality of treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals desiring to rid themselves of their substance abuse problem.

This provision of the law has been all but ignored. I would hope that similar obstacles to treatment for HIV and AIDS victims could be avoided as we debate and implement the ways in which our national health care system responds to the AIDS epidemic.

The epidemiology of this disease has changed. A recent report from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases states this fact plainly.

> Minorities, primarily African-Americans and Hispanics, now constitute 45 percent of the 121,000 cases of AIDS reported since the epidemic began in 1981. In fact, some researchers predict that AIDS will become a "ghetto disease" by the year 2000 * * *.

> Furthermore, women and children of minority groups are markedly over-represented among persons with AIDS. Of all the cases of AIDS reported to date among adult women, approximately 52 percent are African-American, 20 percent are Hispanic, and 26 percent are Caucasian. The majority—about 76 percent—of children under age 13 who have AIDS are from the minority community. Roughly 52 percent are African-American and 23 percent are Hispanic.

May I remind the Senate that as of January of this year, 121,645 Americans had developed AIDS and 72,578 have died. Estimates of infection in the general population add to the alarm. Prevalence rates vary but the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] estimate that approximately 1 million persons are infected with HIV. A recent CDC morbidity and mortality weekly report states that:

> The number of cases of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome will continue to increase over the next 4 years, with a projected 52,000 to 57,000 cases to be diagnosed in 1990.

While AIDS has often been identified as an urban crisis and while it is disproportionately found there, among the poor and among minorities, there is growing concern about the ruralization of the epidemic. Recent statistics forewarn a greater impact across the country than previously thought. Between January 1989 and January 1990 the incidence—which CDC defines as an indicator of the growth of the epidemic at a given time—of AIDS cases in cities of more than 500,000 persons increased by 12 percent. In lesser cities and towns, the numbers are no less disturbing. In Austin, TX, for example, the number of new cases reported in that same period increased from 92 to 231. Minneapolis-St. Paul reported cases increased from 131 to 169. In my own State of New York, in Syracuse, the number of reported cases increased 64 percent in that same period. This trend is occurring in city after city. Just last week the New York Times reported a visit by our National Commission on AIDS to rural areas of Georgia where there are indications of an increase in the numbers of cases occurring in nonurban areas. Mr. President, I would ask that that article appear at the end of this statement.

The National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome whose membership includes, among others, Secretaries Cheney, Derwinski, and Sullivan, unexpectedly released a preliminary report on the crisis on December 5, 1989. In it the Commission stated:

> Recent years have seen considerable advances in the development of new HIV-related drugs, including the prospect of treating HIV infection before symptoms develop. But scientific breakthroughs mean little unless the health care system can incorporate them and make them accessible to people in need.

The belief that Medicaid will pay for the health care needs of the growing number of low income people with HIV infection and AIDS is * * * a "Medicaid fantasy." According to a 1987 U.S. Hospital AIDS Survey, almost one quarter of all AIDS patients have no form of insurance, private or public. Less than 20 percent of the persons with AIDS treated in southern hospitals were covered by Medicaid, compared with 55 percent in the Northeast and 44 percent nationwide.

The impact of AIDS on our health care system is of tremendous concern and consequence. The statistics speak for themselves. The American Hospital Association recently testified that "the number of hospitals providing hospital-based AIDS services increased nearly 40 percent from 1987 to 1988 alone. In 1988, 59.4 percent of hospitals provided general inpatient care for People with AIDS [PWA], over 2.1 percent had a designated AIDS unit, and over 4.1 percent offered specialized outpatient programs." The costs of providing this care are staggering—ranging from $40,000 to $80,000 per patient.

In testimony recently given before Congressman WAXMAN's Subcommittee on Health on this proposed legislation, Robert Parrish, associate director of Atlanta's Grady Memorial Hospital, stated on behalf of the National Association of Public Hospitals that:

For 1987, inpatient costs averaged $681 per day while revenues averaged 80% of costs at $545 per day. Inpatient costs per patient per year averaged $17,910, and per admission costs were $11,441. By contrast, hospital revenues averaged $14,334 per patient per year and $9,156 per admission * * *. Average public hospital losses ($218 per day) were significantly higher than average private institution losses ($92 per day). For public hospitals, as well as private hospitals, losses were significantly greater for AIDS patients, at $136 per patient per day, than losses for other medical/surgical patients, at $26 per day.

Dr. Kenneth Thorpe of the Harvard University School of Public Health testified that:

A 1987 survey of hospitals * * * indicated that fewer than 5 percent of hospitals treat approximately 50 percent of all AIDS patients. Nationally * * * Medicaid reimburses hospitals at approximately 80 percent of reported costs. This translates into Medicaid payments of $3 to $4 billion below reported hospital costs. For many of the large public and academic medical centers in urban areas, losses associated with treating AIDS patients (as a proportion of costs) are even higher.

In 1988, in New York State, 34 hospitals provided care to almost 80 percent of the AIDS patients. Those 34 hospitals had, in aggregate, operating losses of over $740 million.

A case in point is our own New York Hospital which received its charter in 1771 from King George III, thus making it the State's oldest hospital and the second oldest in the Nation. But this hospital—an institution founded in the years just preceding the establishment of our Republic—has, since 1988, been forced to transfer $41 million from its endowment of $170 million to its operating budget in part to pay for the increasing demand of providing health care to people with AIDS, as well as to people unable to pay for services. Certainly, this cannot be allowed.

In summation, Mr. President, I would simply put it that we cannot, that we must not, say that we do not have the resources or the compassion to provide health care to people with AIDS and HIV infection. We can and we must.

In the first and only Presidential address on the subject, President Bush recently stated that:

America has the most sophisticated health care system in the world, but it is not without its problems. We face many challenges. Our system depends on private insurance and individual payments, as well as government programs. AIDS magnifies the challenges, including the challenge of expanding access, bringing costs under control, and overcoming obstacles to quality care.

Mr. President, we have accepted those challenges and we offer today, in this proposed legislation, solutions to these challenges. A beginning perhaps. But one to which I believe we must all commit ourselves.

Following are several articles and a summary of the bill's provisions. In addition, I would ask that at the conclusion of these remarks, the bill in its entirely be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2536

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicaid AIDS and HIV Amendments of 1990".

SEC. 2. OPTIONAL MEDICAID COVERAGE OF HIV-RELATED SERVICES FOR CERTAIN HIV-POSITIVE INDIVIDUALS.

(a) COVERAGE AS OPTIONAL, CATEGORICALLY NEEDY GROUP.—Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(10)(A)(ii)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of subclause (X),

(2) by adding "or" at the end of subclause (XI), and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(XII) who are described in subsection (s)(1) (relating to certain HIV-positive individuals);".

(b) GROUP AND BENEFIT DESCRIBED.—Section 1902 of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(s)(1) Individuals described in this paragraph are individuals not described in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i)—

"(A) who have tested positively to be infected with the HIV virus and to have (as measured through an appropriate indicator, such as CD4-T4 cell concentration in the blood) an abnormally low immune function for which medical intervention is indicated to prevent decline in such function or to prevent opportunistic diseases related to AIDS (without regard to whether or not the individuals display symptoms of AIDS or opportunistic diseases related to AIDS);

"(B) whose income (as determined under the State plan under this title with respect to disabled individuals) does not exceed the maximum amount of income a disabled individual described in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i) may have and obtain medical assistance under the plan; and

"(C) whose resources (as determined under the State plan under this title with respect to disabled individuals) does not exceed the maximum amount of resources a disabled individual described in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i) may have and obtain medical assistance under the plan.

"(2) For purposes of subsection (a)(10), the term 'HIV-related services' means each of the following services—

"(A) prescribed drugs,

"(B) physicians' services and services described in section 1905(a)(2),

"(C) laboratory and X-ray services,

"(D) clinic services, and

"(E) case management services (as defined in section 1915(g)(2)), relating to treatment of infection with the HIV virus or treatment for (or prevention of) opportunistic diseases relating to AIDS.

"(3) In this subsection:

"(A) The term 'AIDS' means acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"(B) The term 'HIV virus' means the etiologic agent for AIDS.".

(c) LIMITATION ON BENEFITS.—Section 1902(a)(10) of such Act is amended, in the matter following subparagraph (E)—

(1) by striking "and" before "(X)", and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: ", and (XI) the medical assistance made available to an individual described in subsection (s)(1) who is eligible for medical assistance only because of subparagraph (A)(ii)(XI) shall be limited to medical assistance for HIV-related services (described in subsection (s)(2))".

(d) CONFORMING EXPANSION OF CASE MANAGEMENT SERVICES OPTION.—Section 1915(g)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396n(g)(1)) is amended by inserting "or to individuals described in section 1902(s)(1)(A)" after "or with either,".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1905(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (viii),

(2) by adding "or" at the end of clause (ix), and

(3) by inserting after clause (ix) the following new clause:

"(x) individuals described in section 1902(s)(1),".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to medical assistance furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 3. OPTIONAL STATE COVERAGE OF HOME OR COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES TO CERTAIN CHILDREN WITH AIDS.

(a) STATE OPTION PROVIDED.—Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)), as amended by section 6405 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (21), by striking "and" at the end,

(2) by redesignating paragraph (22) as paragraph (23), and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (21) the following new paragraph:

"(22) home or community-based services (as described in section 1915(c)(1)) for children who—

"(A) have not attained the age of 18 years, and

"(B) have been diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS);".

(b) OPTIONAL ELIGIBILITY FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN.—Section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396(a)(10)(A)(ii)), as amended by section 2 of this Act, is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of subclause (XI),

(2) by adding "or" at the end of subclause (XII), and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(XIII) who would be eligible under the State plan under this title if they were in a medical institution, who have not attained the age of 18 years, and who have been diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome;".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1902 of such Act is further amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10)(C)(iv), by striking "(20)" and inserting "(22)", and

(2) in subsection (j), by striking "(21)" and inserting "(23)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to services furnished on or after January 1, 1991, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

SEC. 4. ADJUSTMENT IN PAYMENTS TO HOSPITALS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH AIDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1923 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) In order to be considered to have met such requirement of section 1902(a)(13)(A) as of July 1, 1991, the State must submit to the Secretary by not later than April 1, 1991, a State plan amendment that—

"(i) specifically defines, for purposes of subsection (f), the hospitals to be treated as disproportionate share hospitals (and includes in such definition any disproportionate share hospital described in subsection (b)(1) which meets the requirement of subsection (d)), and

"(ii) provides, effective for inpatient hospital services provided on or after July 1, 1991, for an appropriate increase in the amount of payment for such services provided by such hospitals, consistent with subsection (f).";

(2) in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (a)(1)" and inserting "subsection (a)";

(3) in subsection (e)(1), by inserting "(other than paragraph (1)(C) thereof)" after "subsection (a)"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) ADDITIONAL PAYMENT ADJUSTMENT FOR HOSPITALS WITH DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE OF INPATIENTS WITH AIDS.—

"(1) PAYMENT ADJUSTMENT.—In the case of a hospital described in paragraph (2), in order to be consistent with this subsection, a payment adjustment must be made in an amount equal to at least 25 percent of the amount otherwise paid under the plan (taking into account payment adjustments otherwise made consistent with subsection (c)) to the hospital with respect to inpatient hospital services provided to individuals diagnosed with acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS).

"(2) HOSPITALS WITH DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE OF INPATIENTS WITH AIDS DESCRIBED.—A hospital is described in this paragraph if the hospital—

"(A) is treated under the plan as a disproportionate share hospital (or, but for subsection (e), would be deemed to be a disproportionate share hospital under subsection (b)),

"(B) during the most recent previous calendar year for which data are available, had a number of admissions as inpatients of individuals who have been diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) (regardless of the reason for admission or source of payment) which exceeds 250 (or such lesser number as the State may specify) or which exceeds 20 percent (or such lesser percentage as the State may specify) of the total number of admissions for that year, and

"(C) has made a reasonable effort to reduce the unnecessary admission as inpatients of at least some of such individuals through one or more arrangements for care through any one of the following: a provider (which may be the hospital itself) that receives funds under section 317(j)(2), 318(c), 329, 330, 340, 509A, or 1001 of the Public Health Service Act or title V of this Act or an entity (which may be the hospital itself) that has under any appropriations Act received funds as a comprehensive hemophilia treatment center or as an AIDS service demonstration project.".

(b) CLARIFYING AMENDMENT.—Section 1902(h) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(h)) is amended by inserting "(under section 1923 or otherwise)" after "under this title".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. PROVIDING FEDERAL MEDICAL ASSISTANCE FOR PAYMENTS FOR PREMIUMS FOR "COBRA" CONTINUATION COVERAGE FOR HIV-POSITIVE INDIVIDUALS.

(a) OPTIONAL PAYMENT OF COBRA PREMIUMS FOR QUALIFIED COBRA CONTINUATION BENEFICIARIES.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (D),

(B) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (E),

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new subparagraph:

"(F) at the option of a State, for making medical assistance available for COBRA premiums (as defined in subsection (t)(2)) for qualified COBRA continuation beneficiaries described in section 1902(t)(1);", and

(D) in the matter following subparagraph (E), as amended by section 2(c) of this Act, by striking "and" before "(XI)" and by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: ", and (XII) the medical assistance made available to an individual described in subsection (t)(1) who is eligible for medical assistance only because of subparagraph (F) shall be limited to medical assistance for COBRA continuation premiums (as defined in subsection (t)(2))"; and

(2) by adding after subsection (s), as added by section 2(b), the following new subsection:

"(t)(1) Individuals described in this paragraph are individuals—

"(A) who have tested positively to be infected with the HIV virus (as defined in subsection (s)(3)(B)),

"(B) who are entitled to elect COBRA continuation coverage (as defined in paragraph (3)),

"(C) whose income (as determined under section 1612 for purposes of the supplemental security income program) does not exceed 133 percent of the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved, and

"(D) whose resources (as determined under section 1613 for purposes of the supplemental security income program) do not exceed twice the maximum amount of resources that an individual may have and obtain benefits under that program.

"(2) For purposes of subsection (a)(10)(F), the term 'COBRA premiums' means the applicable premium imposed with respect to COBRA continuation coverage.

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'COBRA continuation coverage' means coverage under a group health plan provided pursuant to title XXII of the Public Health Service Act, section 4980B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or title VI of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(17), for individuals described in paragraph (1) who are covered under the State plan by virtue of subsection (a)(10)(A)(ii)(XI)—

"(A) the income standard to be applied is the income standard described in paragraph (1)(C), and

"(B) except as provided in section 1612(b)(4)(B)(ii), costs incurred for medical care or for any other type of remedial care shall not be taken into account in determining income.

Any different treatment provided under this paragraph for such individuals shall not, because of subsection (a)(17), require or permit such treatment for other individuals.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Clause (x) of section 1905(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)), as inserted by section 2(d) of this Act, is amended by inserting "or section 1902(t)(1)" after "1902(a)(1)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to medical assistance furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

SUMMARY OF THE MEDICAID AIDS AND HIV AMENDMENTS OF 1990

Section 1—Short Title.—Medicaid Aids and HIV Amendments of 1990

Section 2—Optional Medicaid Coverage of HIV-related Services for Certain HIV-positive Individuals.—

The prevention and early intervention proposal for Medicaid would amend existing Medicaid eligibility rules to create a new category of patients that States may elect (at their option) to cover. This new group of Medicaid-eligible patients would have to meet three criteria: (1) they must meet the current standards of poverty established by the State and (2) they must be infected with the AIDS virus (HIV) and (3) they must have serious immune deficiency for which medical intervention is needed to prevent further decline or AIDS-related illnesses.

This new optional coverage group would not be eligible for all Medicaid benefits. They would receive only outpatient services (i.e. HIV-related prescription drug coverage and other associated physician, clinic, lab services.)

With such an amendment, the Medicaid program will provide those services that those impoverished people who are HIV-infected need to slow or prevent further AIDS-related illness. By doing so, Medicaid will postpone, reduce, or eliminate the need to pay for many expensive hospitalizations and will also ease the burden of overcrowding that many public and private hospitals in high-incidence communities are experiencing. Medicaid may, in fact, save money by providing early prescription drugs instead of more expensive inpatient hospital care.

[Preliminary CBO estimate: 1990: $670 million. Five-year total: $5.5 billion]

Section 3—Optional State Coverage of Home or Community-based Services to Certain Children With AIDS.—

The Home and Community Care for Children with AIDS proposal would allow States to use Federal Medicaid matching funds to provide home and community-based care to children (i.e., under 18) with AIDS. This would allow States to create alternatives to hospital care and thus allow these kids to be treated at home, in foster care, or in other community settings. States may now provide such services if they apply to HCFA for a waiver to do so, but HCFA may only approve a waiver that is "budget neutral," i.e. that spends no more on home- and community-based care than would be spent on institutional care. Because OMB has construed such budget neutrality to be a very strict test, waivers have been very difficult to get. This legislation would eliminate the "budget neutrality" requirement for these services to children with AIDS.

[Preliminary CBO estimate: 1991: $10 million. Five-year total: $140 million]

Section 4—Adjustment in payments to hospitals for individuals with AIDS.—

The Disproportionate Share Adjustment for Medicaid Payment proposal would require States to pay a higher rate to hospitals that care for a large number of Medicaid AIDS patients. (Such an adjustment already exists in the law for hospitals that care for a large number of Medicaid or no-payment patients; this AIDS adjustment would be in addition to this existing Disproportionate Share Adjustment.) Such a rate increase can be justified by the resource requirements of treating AIDS patients (e.g., the above-average use of personnel and lab services, as well as the above-average length of stay) as well as the shortfalls of current reimbursements under Medicaid.

[Preliminary CBO estimate: 1991: $70 million. Five-year total: $500 million]

Section 5—Providing Federal medical assistance for payments for premiums for "COBRA" continuation coverage for HIV-positive individuals—

The Continuation of Private Insurance proposal would allow States to use Federal Medicaid matching funds to pay for continuation of group insurance coverage for HIV-infected persons who have left their jobs because of disability. This continuation coverage is already available by law, but is quite expensive for an individual since the patient must pay both the employer and employee share of the premium. It is, however, expected to be less expensive than allowing such insurance coverage to lapse and forcing Medicaid to pay health care and hospital bills. This provision would also help slow the process of private insurers shifting the cost of AIDS care into public programs.

Section 5 with interaction with section 2—1991: $70 million. Five-year total: $710 million.]

SPREAD OF AIDS IN RURAL AREAS TESTING GEORGIA—HEALTH OFFICIALS FACED WITH TOUGH CHOICES

(By Ronald Smothers)

MACON, GA., April 17.—Since October, the number of AIDS cases in the area surrounding Macon has tripled to 76, catching health officials by surprise, confronting them with difficult choices on how to provide care and sorely testing community values.

"I was thrown out of my church and told not to come back," said a 33-year-old man who lives in the peanut-growing area southwest of here and who, like other AIDS patients, spoke on the conditions that his name not be used.

"That was back in 1987 when I tested positive and before I got full-blown AIDS," he said. "I drive four to five hours once a week to Atlanta to get treatments but I don't want to move away from here because I have family who are supportive and I get to see my two kids every other week."

In often poignant and tearful sessions, members of the National AIDS Commission heard similar complaints in a two-day tour of south Georgia.

An increase in AIDS cases in the South and in rural areas had led the commission members to wonder if they were witnessing a "ruralization of AIDS," said the chairman, Dr. June Osborne. They have reached only tentative conclusions so far, she said. But she added that she had come away with the impression that fear, bigotry and difficulty in finding treatment were clearly much greater problems in rural areas than in any of the urban areas they had visited.

"BEING PUNISHED FOR BEING SICK"

"We thought we had done the jobs of education about AIDS," she said. "But we haven't really done it. We didn't hear such fears expressed so intensely in urban areas and about so many people having to just make do because they are being punished for being sick."

The commission came to rural Georgia largely because of recent work in the state tracing the course of the disease. Dr. Joseph Wilber, director of the state office of infectious diseases, said one finding was that AIDS was spreading among women and particularly black women at the same rate in non-metropolitan areas as in big cities like Atlanta. This had not always been the case, he said, and has led officials to speculate that heterosexual transmission was increasing as a source of infection.

State studies in the last year have connected this increase in AIDS among black women to crack cocaine, sex with multiple partners for drugs or money and resulting syphilis infections, which Dr. Wilber and others believe make women and men more susceptible to contracting the AIDS virus through sexual contact.

With 3,275 reported cases of AIDS since 1981, Georgia ranks eighth among states in incidence of the disease. Of this number, 195 were females over 13 years old. Last year the State noted that 99 of these cases were among the 2.4 million population of metropolitan Atlanta while 94 cases of AIDS in women were in non-metropolitan rural areas of the state with cases among black women 8 times as high as among white women.

By comparison, 2,146 of the cases of AIDS in males were in the metropolitan area, while 692 cases among males was reported in rural areas. The Federal Centers for Disease Control reported 124,984 cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome around the nation as of last December.

A Hispanic woman in her 20's, clutching her 2-year-old baby as she stood in a Macon clinic, said she had contracted AIDS from her husband, an intravenous user of drugs. Although she said she had been shunned by members of her church just outside the city, she has remained there because of support from family members and a growing AIDS support group. Some months ago she regularly traveled to Grady Memorial Hospital in Atlanta, the major treatment center for for AIDS in the state, for doses of the drug AZT to control the disease's symptoms.

"But I became just a number there and I stay here because I don't want to be just a number," she said, noting that the local clinic had recently been able to get supplies of AZT.

A gay man at the same clinic who is infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS, said: "My lover and I always argue about whether to move to New York or Los Angeles. But I just don't want to go even with all the problems here. Bush talks about those thousands points of light, but whenever people here hear that I have HIV the lights go out and I am in the dark."

Belinda Mason, a commission member from Kentucky who contracted AIDS from a blood transfusion, said she had seen rural America at its "warm, supportive best" and at its "close-minded, bigoted worst" during the trip. "You're in small town America where people just are not good about people who are different," she said.

Some of this was evident in Waycross, a city of 20,000 residents in southeast Georgia, Waycross is the center of a small effort to help AIDS patients that covers 13 rural counties the size of Massachusetts with a population of 65,000. When commission members arrived at a local church, they were met by automobiles with identifying numbers indicating which AIDS sufferer they were to visit. They were whisked off secretly and in many cases they never knew the names of the people they were visiting.

QUICK DISMISSAL FOR PATIENT

Dr. Ted Holloway, district health official in the area, which has reported 42 cases of AIDS, told of a nurse who violated confidentiality by disclosing the name of an AIDS patient as she stood in a grocery line in a small town near the city. The man behind her was the patient's employer and by that afternoon he had lost his job and was forced to move away.

There were two AIDS patients in the area who are homeless and can not find places to live and there are numerous instances of doctors and hospitals that will not treat AIDS patients. No nursing homes will accept them.

"The hospitals here are struggling and there is a problem of access to health care for anything, much less AIDS, which is so costly to deal with," he said. "So although the numbers are relatively low in comparison to urban areas, the impact is so great given the lack of resources."

Dr. Donald C. Des Jarlais, a commission member who is director of chemical dependency research at Beth Israel Hospital in New York, said AIDS was clearly becoming a problem in rural areas where many people were not "emotionally ready" to deal with it. He said he detected in his talks with many health-care workers, AIDS patients and others the small town reticence and even embarrassment to discuss sexual matters, or things deemed shameful like homosexuality or drug addiction.

"These things aren't real for them and no one really wants to discuss them," he said.

AIDS WAR SHUNNED BY MANY DOCTORS—PATIENTS ARE SAID TO MISS OUT ON LIFE-PROLONGING DRUGS

(By Bruce Lambert)

Nine years into the AIDS epidemic, most of the nation's physicians are still failing to take part in the fight to treat and control the deadly disease, many health experts say.

Many physicians decline to accept new AIDS patients. Others fail to take sexual and drug histories from patients, and neglect to counsel them on how to avoid infection. And experts say few doctors test their patients for the antibodies to the AIDS virus, which signal infection.

People in the early stages of the disease are going undiagnosed, missing out on life-prolonging drugs at the point when those drugs could do them the most good. Some are unwittingly spreading the human immunodeficiency (HIV) to new victims.

OVERWORKED CADRE OF DOCTORS

Because of most physicians still do not take on patients who have acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the growing number of infected people must often complete to get treatment from the small, overworked cadre of doctors who will accept them.

Some physicians find this deplorable.

"I know physicians who brag that they don't have a single HIV-positive patient in their practice," Dr. Patricia Kloser told the National AIDS Commission when it visited Newark recently. She directs AIDS services for University Hospital at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.

With an estimated 200,000 people infected with the virus, New York City has more AIDS cases than in any other city in the world. Still, the city's Health Department records show that 78 percent of local physicians and dentists have never done a single AIDS test.

SHORTAGE GROWS OUTSIDE CITIES

Although the city has about 25,000 physicians, the Gay Men's Health Crisis, the largest volunteer AIDS agency, has a referral list of just 45 qualified private AIDS specialists in Manhattan who are willing to take patients. There are only one or two for each of the city's other four boroughs, which have half the city's cases. Some Connecticut and New Jersey AIDS patients also rely on Manhattan doctors.

The problem exists across the nation. Outside of the major cities, the shortage of doctors is far worse. Patients may have to drive hundreds of miles for treatment.

Throughout the nation, doctors appear reluctant to learn more about the disease. When an AIDS organization in Albuquerque, N.M., sent invitations to 1,300 medical practitioners for a recent seminar on important new treatments, only one person showed up. In rural Georgia, 65 physicians were surveyed on whether they would take an AIDS patient. Two said they would.

OBSTACLES TO TREATMENT

Many doctors who do not treat AIDS patients have a number of shortcomings, including a lack of training, fear of infection, disdain for homosexuals and drug abusers, fear of scaring off non-AIDS patients, discomfort in discussing sex and drugs, and failure to recognize AIDS symptoms. They may also be reluctant to face the strain of seeing young patients die and to deal with the intricacies of AIDS testing and confidentiality.

All those factors are obstacles to effective treatment, which are compounded for people who lack health insurance or are poor and rely on Medicaid reimbursements. "Private doctors won't take people who don't have insurance and can't pay upfront," Mark Harrington of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power said.

Such patients must usually rely on municipal hospitals for treatment. Dr. Dennis P. Andrulis, president of the Public Health and Hospital Institute, said just 5 percent of the nation's hospitals care for half of its AIDS cases.

CALIFORNIA'S RESPONSE

Pressure is building on doctors to take a role in the fight against AIDS. Among those sounding the call are the new United States Surgeon General, Dr. Antonia Novello, and a growing number of state and local health officials, medical schools and medical organizations, which have been criticized as slow to respond.

California's Medical Association is at the forefront. Its leaders were alarmed by a study showing that 79 percent of state residents had visited a doctor but that AIDS was mentioned in only 6 percent of the visits. The group has undertaken a campaign urging patients to raise the subject of AIDS if their doctors fail to do so.

"We said we're not doing it, so you do it," said Dr. Mark I. Madsen, the organization's education director. "Physicians were waiting for patients to bring it up, and they were waiting for their doctors to say something—everybody was waiting for the other guy."

New York's State Health Commissioner, Dr. David Axelrod, is writing to all physicians in his state urging them to discuss AIDS with patients as routinely as they talk about diet, exercise, blood pressure, alcohol and smoking.

A WARNING IN DENTAL WORK

Dental work is also often overlooked as a vital early-warning system for HIV infection. Frequently the first signs are oral, including thrush and lesions. Chuck Partridge, an AIDS service advocate in Manhattan, said many adults under 45 years—the most likely age group to be infected with the virus—do not have physicians but do see dentists regularly. A national poll of 5,800 dentists last year found that only 31 percent said they were willing to treat AIDS patients.

With upwards of one million Americans estimated to be infected with the AIDS virus, health experts say it is malpractice to engage in medicine or dentistry without full knowledge of the disease. The California Medical Association is warning doctors that they could be sued by patients or their families if they neglect to learn about AIDS and its treatment and to use that knowledge to treat patients.

AIDS has implications for virtually every medical speciality, including obstetrics, psychiatry, dermatology, pediatrics, cardiology, oncology, gastroenterology, and neurology.

Yet most AIDS patients are cared for by a relatively small corps of specialists in private practice and public hospitals who have dedicated themselves to the cause. Most are infectious disease internists.

TRYING TO DO EVERYTHING

"We have such a small group of people trying to do everything," said Dr. Gabriel Torres, the medical consultant to the Gay Men's Health Crisis.

The Physicians Association for AIDS Care, which is based in Chicago, has 600 members nationally who have treated 58,000 patients for AIDS illnesses. It has a referral list of 2,000 doctors—a sliver of the country's 600,000 physicians and 180,000 dentists.

Often AIDS specialists are overwhelmed with cases and emotional stress. Frequently, one physician carries hundreds of patients. Some doctors must turn away new clients, and some have burned out.

Added to this is the fact that the pool of AIDS doctors also shrinks periodically because some are gay and are dying of the disease. Their patients are forced to seek care elsewhere.

The urgency of involving more doctors in treating AIDS was heightened by the discovery of drugs that slow the progression of AIDS, especially in earlier stages. AIDS experts estimate that at least half of those infected with the virus should be receiving treatment, and that the rest should be monitored every few months.

Those services do not require AIDS specialists and should be delivered by regular primary-care physicians, health experts say.

Despite this vast need for health care in the war on AIDS, most medical professionals remain an army in reserve. some doctors and dentists have been accused in formal bias complaints of refusing AIDS cases outright.

But usually the discrimination is more subtle than the outright refusal to treat patients, AIDS organizations say. Physicians may decline to become educated about AIDS, a disease that was discovered after most of them went to medical school. If a case arises, they turn it over to another doctor.

"They claim they have no expertise, but they make no effort to learn," said Dennis DeLeon, New York City's Human Rights Commissioner.

Doctors who are not educated about AIDS may fail to consider the possibility of that diagnosis, especially with patients who do not fit stereotypes. Some doctors have imperiled patients' lives by failing to properly diagnose AIDS and to prescribe correct treatment.

"A lot of doctors are saying they're not seeing HIV disease, but that's because they're not looking for it," said Dr. Iris Davis of New York Hospital.

A chilling example was cited by Dr. Tadd S. Lazarus of St. Clare's Hospital in Manhattan. Dr. Lazarus told of a well-educated, successful business-woman from Westchester County who became progressively disabled in recent months. Her doctors there could not pinpoint the cause. One suggested melancholia. Another joked about AIDS, but no one raised the disease as a serious possibility. Finally she went on her own for an HIV test, which was positive. Then she went to St. Clare's, where doctors immediately diagnosed the classic symptoms of AIDS. She is now on AZT and regaining normal functions.

INTIMIDATING, COMPLEX THERAPIES

Both the American Medical Association and the American Dental Association have urged their members to confront AIDS, and both defend their efforts. The critics acknowledge progress but say it has not kept up with the epidemic.

Dr. M. Roy Schwarz, chairman of the American Medical Association's AIDS program, said he talks to many doctors who see AIDS patients. "The internist I go to has 30 or 40 patients with AIDS, and he says virtually every physician he knows has some," he said.

Dr. Woodrow A. Myers Jr., New York City's new Health Commissioner, said, "All physicians in this city are going to have no choice but to take care of people with HIV and AIDS."

Dr. Meyer's predecessor, Dr. Stephen C. Joseph, said the state should require physicians to be trained in AIDs diagnosis and treatment to remain licensed. But some medical experts say forced education will not work as well as voluntary programs.

To keep up, doctors are bombarded with AIDs conferences, lectures, brochures, newsletters, journals, satellite telecasts, audio tapes, videocassettes, books and computer networks.

Yet "AIDS Treatment News," a newsletter based in San Francisco, reported this month that many patients complain that their doctors are not up to date.

Doctors across the country are tackling the problem in their own way.

Dr. Rodney Hayward of Ann Arbor, Mich., is studying the issue of AIDS education in medical schools for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. He said the schools "have been slow to prepare new physicians to care for these patients—we're really approaching a crisis." Dr. Hayward.

Frustrated by a lack of money and staff to serve 700 patients, Dr. Daniel J. Barbaro quit as head of the public AIDS clinic at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas. Now, as a private physician in Fort Worth, he gets AIDs cases from doctors who will not take them for whatever reasons.

Gordon Nary, director of the Physicians Association for AIDS Care, said such failures pose "a major moral and ethical dilemma."

"We have people whose lives may be lengthened, whose lives may be saved," he said, "but who is going to take care of these patients?"

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself and Mr. CRANSTON):

S. 2537. A bill to amend chapter 32 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the pursuit of flight training under that chapter; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS EDUCATION ASSISTANCE BENEFITS FOR FLIGHT TRAINING

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation to authorize the pursuit of flight training for chapter 32 veterans who are eligible for educational benefits under the Veterans Educational Assistance Program. I am pleased to be joined in sponsoring this bill by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, Senator CRANSTON.

The purpose of this measure is to ensure that veterans who entered the service between 1974 and 1984 and are currently eligible for educational benefits have the same opportunity to obtain flight training benefits as their counterparts who currently receive these benefits under the Montgomery GI bill. Without access to these benefits, many chapter 32 veterans will not have the financial means to pursue a career in aviation.

My interest in flight training for veterans developed during my service on the House Veterans Committee in the mid-1980's. As a former chairman of that panel's Subcommittee on Education Employment and Training, I presided over hearings where I was told time after time by veterans that, as they enter the private job market, they are looking for opportunity, diversity, and quality, not just statistical employment. It thus became my strong conviction that the Federal Government's efforts to alleviate the employment problems of our Nation's veterans should focus greater attention on matching their skills and interests with vocations currently in demand. Flight training benefits meet that basic commonsense test.

Last year, both the Senate and House of Representatives acknowledged the value of providing flight training benefits to veterans by passing legislation to authorize such benefits for active duty service members and reservists who participate in the new GI bill. The central argument for that legislation was that it addressed two major concerns facing our country—veterans unemployment and pilot shortages.

There is little question about the need to expand employment opportunities currently available to veterans. The national unemployment rate for veterans is currently 4.6 percent. Also, nearly one-third of the homeless are veterans. Lack of adequate job training is one of the primary contributors to this national disgrace.

Moreover, at the same time many veterans struggle to find meaningful employment, our Nation is facing a serious pilot shortage. The Future Aviation Professionals of America [FAPA] estimate that in the next decade, America will need to fill approximately 32,000 jet pilot positions and up to 30,000 nonjet regional airline pilot positions.

The Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association [AOPA] has stressed that the Nation's 80,000 to 120,000 nonairline pilot positions, such as air ambulance pilots, crop dusters and corporate pilots, face similar shortages. As soon as 1992, AOPA reports current efforts to train commercial and instrumental pilots will leave us with a shortfall of over 4,000 pilots. Compounding the problem is the fact that within the next 10 years, we can expect to lose nearly 2,000 pilots annually due to retirement.

These statistics point to an indisputable fact—our Nation is facing a serious pilot shortage. Our Nation's veterans present one means of filling that void.

Last year Congress responded to this situation by authorizing flight training benefits for active duty service members and reservists under the GI bill. The legislation Senator CRANSTON and I are introducing today builds on that law by extending flight training benefits to chapter 32 veterans who qualify for VA educational benefits.

The eligibility criteria remains the same: veterans must have a valid pilot's license, meet the medical requirements for a commercial pilot's rating, and be pursuing training recognized as being necessary to obtaining a vocation in the aviation industry—training that must be authorized by the Federal Aviation Administration and the State Approving Agency. The educational assistance allowance under this measure is equal to 60 percent of the tuition and fees charged for dual flight instruction.

Finally, this measure establishes flight training as a 4-year test program.

I hope my colleagues will join me in recognizing those chapter 32 veterans who currently qualify for educational benefits under the Veterans Educational Assistance Program and are not currently receiving flight training benefits. The Nation needs more qualified pilots, and Congress has already acknowledged the role veterans can play in meeting this need. It is thus only fair, and wise, to extend flight training benefits to all veterans who qualify for educational assistance.●

By Mr. CHAFEE:

S. 2538. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to improve the delivery of services at federally qualified health centers and rural health clinics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE FEDERALLY QUALIFIED HEALTH CENTERS AND RURAL HEALTH CLINIC AMENDMENTS

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that reforms Medicare reimbursement for community health centers. I introduced similar legislation last year that included reimbursement reforms for community health centers under Medicare and Medicaid. We were able to enact the Medicaid provisions, and I am reintroducing the Medicare provisions which were not adopted.

We have neglected an important, and perhaps critical, resource in our fight to improve basic health care services—community health centers. Over the years, I have come to the conclusion that community health centers should be our first line of offense in this effort. I believe that health centers are a crucial link in ensuring adequate health care for those who do not have insurance.

There are over 900 health clinics in the United States. These clinics provide primary and preventive services, as well as acute care, to approximately six million Americans who might otherwise have nowhere to go for medical care. Although these centers are providing the type 8 care that we would most like to encourage, primary and preventive care, our investment in their efforts is falling short.

Medicare payments do not adequately cover the reasonable costs of providing care, because the method of reimbursement for providers in this program is completely unsuited to health clinics. As a result, many health centers are being forced to use limited public and private grants to subsidize the Medicare program. This situation has hampered the clinics' ability to provide care to the uninsured. Moreover, because health clinics serve a disproportionate share of low-income Medicare and Medicaid patients, there is virtually no capacity to shift costs.

The legislation I am introducing today would change the method of reimbursement under Medicare, and take into account the unique situation and composition of health clinics. This bill will increase the flow of Federal dollars into community health centers, allowing them to provide health care to a greater number of patients whether they are Medicare or Medicaid eligible, or have no insurance at all.

Last year I worked closely with my colleagues to pass what I believe was a first step toward increasing reimbursement for community health centers. The legislation increased payments to community health centers for services provided to Medicaid patients.

The bill that I introduce today will provide the same increased reimbursement under Medicare, that we achieved under Medicaid last year. Our legislation changes the Medicare reimbursement method for community health centers, ensuring that the Federal Government will cover 100 percent of the reasonable cost of providing medical care. This is especially important for health centers which serve a high percentage of Medicare patients.

The estimated cost of this proposal is $10 to $15 million, and would allow community health centers to serve an additional 250,000 people. For those of us who are actively involved in finding a solution to the number of individuals in this country who do not have access to health care, this proposal is a reasonable interim step.

Community health centers can and do play a critical role in our efforts to improve access to health care for all Americans. We have a choice: we can continue to reimburse our health centers inadequately, increasing the number of Americans who cannot find adequate health care, or we can provide reasonable reimbursement to community health centers, increasing the number of Americans who can find needed health care services in the most appropriate setting. I believe the choice is clear.●

S.J. Res. 302. Joint resolution providing for the reappointment of Anne L. Armstrong as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION LEGISLATION

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, today, Senator MOYNIHAN and I are joining to introduce two pieces of legislation on behalf of the Smithsonian Institution. In addition, I am pleased to introduce a third Smithsonian bill.

The joint resolution provides for the reappointment of an incumbent member of the Board of Regents, Anne L. Armstrong of Texas. Ms. Armstrong has been a valued member of the Board of Regents since 1978. Her term will expire October 18, 1990, and the reappointment is for an additional term of 6 years, effective the day after the current term expires.

The first bill would establish a Smithsonian Senior Service. This senior service would provide a comparable program for the Smithsonian as the Senior Executive Service is for other Federal agencies. The Smithsonian is currently excluded from the Senior Executive Service. The proposed Smithsonian Senior Service would reflect many of the key characteristics of the Senior Executive Service, including a pay cap set at executive level IV, greater flexibility in the recruitment and management of senior personnel, and more equitable and attractive salary scales. Presently, salaries for Smithsonian executives is well below those who participate in the SES system. It is important for the Smithsonian to be able to offer comparable pay for their executives in order to maintain an educated and quality staff.

The second bill would authorize the construction of space in the East Court of the Natural History Museum. The bill authorizes the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian to plan, design, construct and equip this space in the East Court. The new construction is estimated at $30,000,000. More complete details about this construction are provided below.

I am pleased to present this legislation to the Senate for the Smithsonian and hope that the Senate will give them early consideration. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of each, as well as further detailed information about the background and purpose of each bill, be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2539

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. SMITHSONIAN SENIOR SERVICE.

(a) With the approval of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may establish and promulgate regulations for a Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service that shall provide that—

(1) such Service shall be administered in a manner consistent with the provisions of section 3131 of title 5, United States Code;

(2) any position within the Smithsonian Institution at level IV or V of the Executive Schedule under subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, or classified at a grade of GS-16, GS-17, or GS-18 of the General Schedule under subchapter II of such chapter, may be included as a position in such Service;

(3) positions established in such Service are consistent with section 3132(a)(2) of such title;

(4) rates of basic pay—

(A) shall not be more than the maximum rate or less than the minimum rate for the Senior Executive Service under section 5382 of such title; and

(B) shall be adjusted at the same time and to the same extent as rates in the Senior Executive Service under section 5382 of such title are adjusted;

(5) a performance appraisal system shall be established and administered consistent with subchapter II of chapter 43 of such title;

(6) officers and employees in the Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service may be awarded ranks by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution consistent with section 4507 of such title;

(7) performance awards may be paid to officers and employees of the Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution consistent with section 5384 of such title;

(8) the provisions of title 5, United States Code, relating to employee benefits under chapters 63, 81, 83, 84, 85, 87, and 89 of such title shall apply to members of such Service; and

(9) such officers and employees may be removed from such Service by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may apply any provision of title 5, United States Code, that applies to an applicant for, or officer or employee in the Senior Executive Service under such title to the Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service.

(c) The rate of basic pay payable to an officer or employee who, on the day before the date on which the Smithsonian Senior Service is implemented, is serving in a position to be included in the Service may not be reduced (solely by reason of such inclusion) so long as the employee's service continues without a break in service.

SEC. 3. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 2108(3) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "or the General Accounting Office;" and inserting in lieu thereof "the General Accounting Office, or the Smithsonian Institution Senior Executive Service;".

SMITHSONIAN SENIOR SERVICE

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE AND NEED

At its meeting on January 29, 1990, the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution approved a proposal to seek authority to create the Smithsonian Senior Service (SSS) in order to provide comparability with the Senior Executive Service (SES) from which the Institution is excluded. The proposed Smithsonian Senior Service would reflect many of the key characteristics of the Senior Executive Service, including a pay cap set at that payable for Executive Level IV, greater flexibility in the recruitment and management of senior personnel, and more equitable and attractive salary scales.

The Institution has been unable to attract quality candidates to civil service employment at the $78,200 salary currently available for positions such as directors of the National Museum of American Art, Cooper-Hewitt National Museum of Design, National Museum of Natural History, Freer/Sackler Galleries, National Air and Space Museum, National Zoological Park, and the National Museum of Natural History. Moreover, in the past few years, senior research and scholarly staff have been lost to colleges and universities because of the comparatively lower level of Federal salaries and the inflexibility of management options.

When the Senior Executive Service was established, supergrade positions in certain organizations, including the Smithsonian, were excluded from coverage because, among other reasons, they did not carry direct executive branch management responsibilities. Nonetheless, the level of responsibility of those positions, which now total approximately 75 at the Institution, is essentially the equivalent of those in the SES. However, the pay cap for supergrade employees is Executive Level V (currently $78,200), whereas the pay cap for SES employees is Executive Level IV (currently $83,600), a difference of $5,400.

While recent pay legislation has dealt with SES, Executive Level, judicial, and congressional salaries, it has ignored supergrade personnel such as those at the Smithsonian who are responsible for some 6,000 staff; 180 million objects and specimens held in trust for the Nation; consolidated Federal and trust fund budgets approaching $600 million; and 19 museums, galleries, research facilities, and a zoological park.

Unless the Smithsonian Senior Service proposal is enacted and implemented, the salary gap between the Institution's supergrade personnel and people with comparable responsiblities elsewhere in the Federal system will continue to widen. Under present law on January 1, 1991, Level IV of the Executive Schedule will rise to $104,500 and Level V will rise to $101,000, while GS-18 will remain at $86,682. The gap between Level V and GS-18 salaries will be more than $14,000; that between GS-18 and the top rate payable to members of the SES (Level IV) will be $17,818, more than three times larger than it is at present.

Continued and increased inequity in senior Federal salaries will pose extraordinary problems of morale among current Smithsonian employees, and place the Institution at a severe disadvantage as it seeks to recruit scholarly and administrative talent to represent more fully the cultural and ethnic diversity of the Nation in its ranks. The proposal to establish a Smithsonian Senior Service, consistent with the principles and objectives of the SES, must be enacted.

S. 2540

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADDITIONAL SPACE IN NATIONAL MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY

The Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution is authorized to plan, design, construct, and equip approximately 80,000 square feet of space in the East Court of the National Museum of Natural History building.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Smithsonian Institution for fiscal year 1991 not to exceed $30,000,000 to carry out this Act.

EAST COURT CONSTRUCTION FOR THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE AND NEED

At their meeting in September, 1989 the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution reviewed a strategy for renewal of the Natural History Building which will involve construction of new space in the East Court of the building, together with renovation of space and replacement of systems throughout the existing structure. The new construction is estimated at $30,000,000 and the renovation at $116.3 million.

In October, 1989 the Regents' Audit and Review Committee examined the proposed strategy and recommended its approval by the full Board. The Board adopted the recommendation on January 29, 1990, and requested its Congressional members to introduce and support legislation to provide authority for construction of new space in the East Court of the Natural History Building.

The Institution has authority for the renovation work. Currently $10.95 million is available for its planning and design and an initial increment of construction. A further increment of $10.14 million has been requested for Fiscal Year 1991 in order to continue construction.

The Fiscal Year 1991 request also includes a request for $1.5 million for planning of the East Court construction. The availability of these funds is, in the first instance, dependent on enactment of appropriate authority.

S.J. RES. 302

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes (20 U.S.C. 43), the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, occurring by reason of the expiration of the term of Anne L. Armstrong of Texas on October 18, 1990, be filled by the reappointment of the present incumbent for a term of six years, effective on the day after the current term expires.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 416

At the request of Mr. DOMENICI, the name of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] was added as a cosponsor of S. 416, a bill to provide that all Federal civilian and military retirees shall receive the full cost-of-living adjustment in annuities payable under Federal retirement systems for fiscal years 1990 and 1991, and for other purposes.

At the request of Mr. DASCHLE, the name of the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 114, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress regarding action by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to restore confidence in the Federal Crop Insurance Program pending consideration of legislation on the Crop Insurance Program.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 115

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the names of the Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 115, a concurrent resolution to express the sense of the Congress regarding future funding of Amtrak.

SENATE RESOLUTION 231

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 231, a resolution urging the submission of the Convention on the Rights of the Child to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

SENATE RESOLUTION 263

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 263, a resolution to express the Sense of the Senate regarding the need to establish a sound national transportation policy integrating all modes of transportation and maintaining a significant Federal role.

SENATE RESOLUTION 227—EXPRESSING OPPOSITION TO A 1990 AUTHORIZATION OF THE DAIRY TERMINATION PROGRAM

Mr. WALLOP (for himself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. SIMPSON) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

S. RES. 277

Whereas section 210(d)(3) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(3)) (as added by section 101 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-198)) required the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and carry out a milk production termination program (also known as the "whole herd buyout program") during the 18-month period beginning April 1, 1986, and authorized the Secretary to establish and carry out such a program for any of the calendar years 1988, 1989, and 1990;

Whereas subtitle D of title I of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1446 note) established the National Commission on Dairy Policy and required the Commission to submit to the Secretary of Agriculture and Congress a report describing the results of its study and recommendations;

Whereas the National Commission on Dairy Policy submitted a report to the Secretary and Congress on March 31, 1988, that recommended that the milk production termination program be retained as a tool to keep supply and demand in balance;

Whereas the milk production termination program, a unique and untested approach to production control, was tested during the 18-month period beginning April 1, 1986, and proved to be ineffective in reducing milk production in the long-term by eliminating the capacity for production;

Whereas the milk production termination program removed 14,000 producers from the dairy industry for 5 years and reduced the dairy herd of the United States by approximately 1.3 million cows, heifers, and calves, but milk production (after termination of the program) quickly rose to levels that exceeded milk production levels that existed before implementation of the program;

Whereas the milk production termination program dealt a major blow to the beef cattle industry that resulted in large reductions in both the cash and future price of beef cattle and pork belly futures and further weakened an already unstable market; and

Whereas future prices continue to fluctuate in reduction to continued uncertanity about excess supplies of beef as the result of a milk production termination program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the milk production termination program established by section 201(d)(3) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(3)) is—

(A) ineffective as a production control device; and

(B) highly detrimental to the domestic cattle industry of the United States; and

(2) authority for a milk production termination program should not be included as part of the dairy price support and production control program established in the successor statute to the Food Security Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-198).

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a resolution on behalf of myself, Senators BURNS, MCCLURE, SYMMS, BAUCUS, and SIMPSON expressing the Senate's continued opposition to the authorization of any Dairy Termination Program in the 1990 farm bill.

I use the phrase "continued opposition" for good reason. Five years ago, the Senate refused to accept the Dairy Termination Program in its version of the farm bill. We were able to see it was a flawed proposal—not only in how it proposed to reduce milk production by reducing the number of cattle, but also the possible effects a buyout might have on cattle prices. Unfortunately, this provision was resurrected in conference, passed, and unleashed on the unsuspecting cattlemen of this country during a period of already low prices. Being a survivor of the first, and hopefully last Dairy Termination Program—believe it is in the best interest of both the dairy and cattle industry, not to revive the Dairy Buyout Program. It has been tested—and it clearly did not work.

We watched as the Federal Government followed its 1985 legislative mandate. The Federal Government in 1986 and 1987 bought over 1.3 million head of cattle from almost 14,000 dairy farmers who voluntarily sold their herds. Sixty-two percent of the cost of this program, or $1.51 billon fell on the shoulders of the taxpayer. While this program was an attempt to reduce milk production in the long run by reducing significantly the number of dairy cattle, it failed to provide any disincentives for increasing production, or expansion by farmers who did not take part in the buyout. Not surprisingly, this is exactly what has happened as both cow numbers and milk production numbers are on the rise. As early as the following year after the buyout, milk production surpassed pre-buyout levels. USDA analysis also pointed out that a majority of those accepted for the buyout, were on their last leg and it was estimated they would have been out of business by the early 1990's anyway, with or without the whole herd buyout.

However, Mr. President, my real motivation for offering this resolution was not to take a shot at the Dairy Program, nor to point fingers or cast blame. My real motivation was that we learn from our mistakes. It was to call the attention of all of my colleagues to what I and other Senators and most certainly members of the ranching community in Wyoming and many other States, conceive as a real problem. Not only have the ranchers in Wyoming asked me to point out the real damage this buyout program did, but more importantly, the real damage it could do again to the multibillion dollar cattle industry in the United States.

The cattle industry is a major player in both the economy and the way of life in Wyoming and many other States. Cattle are our No. 1 cash agricultural commodity and the life blood for many folks. As most ranchers know, cash and futures prices are spooky enough on their own, without any help from well intentioned, yet badly designed and implemented government programs. The passage of the Dairy Termination Program in the 1985 farm bill set the beef cattle markets in motion preparing for what they expected to be a large infusion of red meat. They were not dissapointed.

Even prior to the buyout, cattlemen wary of the effects of this legislated fix began culling their herds to beat the dairy program slaughter. And USDA numbers on the estimated slaughter jumped from 900,000 of dairy cattle to 1.6 million—understandably this put both cash and future prices in a tailspin. It has been estimated that ranchers lost millions due to this unintentional manipulation of the markets. Mr. President, it was this impact upon the cattle industry that has caused such strong opposition to any further consideration of a termination program in the 1990 Farm Bill.

The administration is opposed to any reauthorization of the Dairy Termination Program in the farm bill. I whole heartedly support this position and invite my colleagues to join me in setting the record straight about the Senate's true position on this issue.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.

Mr. President, I would ask that articles describing some of the deleterious effects of this program in Georgia, Colorado, Washington, Montana, and several other States, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DAIRY-HERD BUYOUT MILKS RANCHERS

As taxpayers, we pay dairymen to produce milk. We pay them so well, they overproduce. So we buy the excess and give it away. Trying to solve the problem, we give dairymen another payment to temporarily stop producing. Sound crazy? You bet it is.

Congress' most recent attempt to resolve the dilemma is the whole-herd buyout in the 1985 farm bill. About 14,000 dairymen will receive an average of more than $130,000 each to leave the dairy business for five years. The total price? More than $1.82 billion. Taxpayers are not the only losers. When a dairy cow is slaughtered, it becomes beef. And that subsidized beef production wreaks havoc on the unsubsidized beef producers.

But on the May 14 editorial page, Emerson Moran argues that the National Cattlemen's Association is simply trying to "defend the flank" because of our "traditional opposition to governmental interference in the livestock industry." He says ". . . this surge of red meat will simply slide around the fed-cattle market."

Let's set the record straight. NCA doesn't just claim the program will undermine fed-cattle prices, it did undermine them—along with cow, calf and feeder-cattle prices. Beef producers lost $25 million on cattle sold in the first week of the program alone, and prices continued to tumble! An oversupply of meat—no matter what the source—forces all meat prices to drop.

Furthermore, lower-quality dairy-cow meat competes directly with our high quality beef in two very important markets—ground beef and processed meats. About 40% of all beef is sold in these markets. In 1985, fed cattle provided 53% of the hamburger produced in this country, while cows provided only 33%.

Even if the impact of this program will be felt for only a "few months," as Mr. Moran alleges, this can be crucial for cattlemen whose entire annual income is derived from sales during those few months. Many feeder-cattle producers have been forced to sell during this period, and some will be forced out of business because of losses. The sad thing is that dairy producers are paid by the government to liquidate, while beef producers are forced to liquidate at substantially lower prices.

Mr. Moran's conclusion that this program will help out trade balance by offsetting "nearly half" of the meat imported into the U.S. is flat-out wrong. This additional dairy beef does not affect the quantity of meat imports in 1986, and will only slightly affect 1987 imports.

The beef industry is one of the few segments of agriculture not directly subsidized by the government, and we have every right to "defend our flank" when a government program sends subsidized meat crashing down on our markets.

U.S. PLAN FOR DAIRY MARKET PUTS BEEF INDUSTRY IN A VISE

(By Iver Peterson)

BILLINGS, MT, April 9.—The Federal program to reduce dairy surpluses by slaughtering cows has wreaked havoc with the cattle industry and depressed beef prices far beyond expectations, cattle ranchers say.

Cattle ranchers in the West have estimated that the prospect that nearly 1.6 million dairy cows will be introduced into an already weak market has cut the value of the beef cattle inventory in the nation by $5 billion.

They say hopes of a recovery from years of drought and weak prices in the cattle industry have been all but wiped out by the new dairy program and that large numbers of cattle operators may be forced out of the business by winter.

"From where I'm standing it looks like an absolute disaster," said Pat Capser, an agricultural banker with First Bank in Billings. "I grew up in this business, I've been watching cattle ever since I could follow livestock prices, and I think this has been the greatest injustice ever done to the cattle industry."

NO MONEY FOR CALVES

Mr. Capser said that unless cattle prices recovered a quarter to a half of the cattle ranchers in eastern Montana who would normally borrow money to buy weaned calves this fall and feed them over the winter would not be able to do so.

The Federal Government plans to pay 14,000 dairy farmers to go out of business by buying up their herds and sending the cows to slaughter. On Tuesday the National Cattlemen's Association filed a suit in Federal District Court in Lubbock, Tex., to halt the dairy cow buyout created under farm legislation passed last year by Congress.

To reduce the tons of surplus milk, butter and cheese the Government has purchased and stored to keep dairy prices up, the bill requires the dairy industry to reduce production by 12.1 billion pounds from April 1 to Aug. 31, 1987.

The beef cattle industry had expected the increased competition from dairy cattle to result in about 930,000 dairy cows and calves going onto the market, in addition to normal selling by dairy farmers. It also took heart from assurances that the slaughter of dairy herds would be gradual and orderly and that Washington would buy 400 million pounds of red meat and keep it off the domestic market, easing the downward pressure on beef prices from the surge of cow slaughtering.

But on March 28, Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng put the number of dairy cows to be "diverted" at more than 1.5 million. The Secretary also said the Government had immediate plans to buy only about 100 million of the 400 million pounds of beef it was committed to keeping off the market.

This leaves the Government purchase of the remaining 300 million pounds without a firm schedule. From the cattle industry's view, the sooner that the red meat is off the market the quicker cattle prices could recover.

Agriculture Department officials involved in the dairy program did not return calls seeking comment on the cattle rancher's complaints.

It is also apparent that dairy farmers are likely to keep their herds intact through the summer, when feed is cheap, and put them on the slaughter market in the fall.

These developments in rapid succession sent the beef futures market reeling last week, with contracts to buy beef this summer dropping down to the limit of $1.50 per 100 pounds for three out of five days and nearly to the limit on a fourth.

Prices paid by packing houses followed the futures market down, dropping $5, to about $55 per hundred-weight. A 1,000-pound steer, a typical weight, going to slaughter this week was suddenly worth perhaps $50 less than in the last week in March, before the Agriculture Department announcement of the dairy buyout.

OPPOSITION TO BRANDING

Indeed, the market recovered slightly on word that an animal rights group had filed a suit to stop the branding of the cheeks of dairy cows marked for slaughter. A judge ordered a delay in the brandings.

The cattle producers argue that they need around $80 per hundred pounds of live cattle to break even on their operations, but beef analysts are pessimistic that prices will return to that level.

The Department of Agriculture was taken by surprise at the market's reaction to Secretary Lyng's announcement, and its officials, pointing out that the dairy herd buyout amounted to only a fraction of the total beef herd, argued that the market was overreacting.

Cattle operators here concede that the psychology of beef marketing clearly overrode reason in the price plunge, but they point out that the blame for that does not lie out here, amid the spring grass and vast skies, but in the Washington offices of the Agriculture Department.

"What is strangling this industry is disruptions in the normal production flow, like this dairy buyout," said Max Thornton, a feedlot operator here. "I mean, our prices are being made in Washington, and you never know what a politician is going to do next. We believed that 900,000 head figure—there was no reason to disbelieve it—and the next thing we know, the figure is closer to 1.6 million."

The market slump is all the more bitterly resented here in Montana because it comes on the heels of the years of drought and the devastating range fires of two years ago. These developments, along with the soft prices throughout cattle country in recent years, led to a sharp reduction in cattle herds as ranchers cut their stock numbers or went out of business.

As a result, beef cattle inventories nationally are at their lowest levels since 1962, according to Mr. Capser. Since that should mean higher cattle prices, the survivors in the industry were looking forward to a good year starting this spring. Instead, the bottom fell out of the market.

Industry members seem to agree that the rising complexity of the cattle market, with its advanced commodity trading techniques, have increased the cattle ranchers' vulnerability to wide swings in beef prices. Cattle ranchers who had bought futures contracts expecting prices to rise this spring are instead receiving demands from brokers to cover the decline in prices.

The cattle ranchers point out that aside from some Federal controls of beef imports and access by relatively few ranchers to low-cost Federal grazing lands, the American beef industry receives none of the subsidies the dairy industry and crop farmers depend on.

Hard times like these, therefore, seem to bring out the jokes, like the one about a cattle rancher who won $1 million in the lottery and said he would keep on ranching until it was all gone.

"It's like they say around here," said Bob Tully, a cow and calf operator with a ranch north of Billings who has cut his herd by a half. "I started out with nothing and I've still got most of it left."

DAIRY PROGRAM HURTS HAY MEN

PASCO.—Washington's alfalfa growers say a federal program designed to reduce the nation's milk surplus also is milking their profits dry.

Columbia Basin hay growers, who were already braced for increased acreage being planted due to attractive prices the past two years, now face the prospect of having fewer customers.

The dairy cow buyout over the next 18 months was mandated by Congress as a way to reduce the nation's milk surplus.

Robert Diefe, State Agriculture and Conservation Service director in Spokane, said 34,000 producing milk cows in this state are destined for slaughter, and 22,000 already are on their way to slaughter plants. He said the remaining 12,000 cows will follow over the next 18 months.

These animals represent between 13 percent and 15 percent of the 224,000 milk cows in the state, according to the Washington Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

Dairy farmers choosing to remain in business are paying about 38 percent of the cost, and the rest is being subsidized by taxpayers.

Hay growers think they as taxpayers, are helping to subsidize a program that is injuring them.

Boyd Gray, president of the Columbia Basin Hay Growers Marketing Information Committee of Pasco, said Thursday that hay prices have dropped from a high of $125 a ton to around $85 a ton.

Some of this is a seasonal decline as buyers wait for the new crop, but some is due to the dairy buyout and the expectation that there will be fewer cows to feed, says John Moore, Grant County extension agent.

Moore said he has heard that brokers representing dairies west of the Cascades are already trying to get hay growers to accept prices as low as $40 a ton.

He said the situation may not be as bleak as predicted because of the prospect that British Columbia dairy and livestock owners may come looking for Washington hay because of severe frost damage to Canadian hay fields.

DAIRY PROGRAM WILL CUT VOLUME BY ONE-THIRD FOR GEORGIA MILL

[From Feedstuffs, July 21, 1986]

(By Robert H. Brown)

WASHINGTON, GA.—"I'm going to lose about a third of my business," remarked Buzzy Randall, secretary-treasurer of Wilkes Mill & Feed Co., Inc., a small family-owned feed mill.

Business has been relatively good through the years since 1921 when the mill was established. Its market area is one of the South's better dairy centers. A large part of Atlanta's milk supply comes from the hills of Wilkes County and the surrounding area.

Now the picture is changing. When six county dairymen with 28% of the total number of dairy cows in the county decided to get out of dairying by taking advantage of the federal whole-herd buy-out, it was an economic blow to the community of about 4,700 people.

Randall's feed mill was just one of the local businesses to bear the financial brunt of the disappearing dairy operations.

He said his company would lose $400,000 to $500,000 in gross sales this year as a result of the sell-off of dairy operations.

George Grimaud, one of the dairymen who is selling his herd, is an example of what it means for one producer to go out of business, not only to the feed mill but to other allied industries in the area. He said he spent $160,000-$170,000 locally on supplies each year to run his family-owned dairy.

Another dairyman, Abner Dunn, figured he spent at least $2,000 a week on feed, and he added that he bought most of it locally.

Dunn said he is going to raise some cattle on his farm, but he will not spend anything like the $2,000 a week on feed that he did when he was operating a dairy.

At the feed mill, Randall said he doesn't know if he can replace the business the mill will be losing because of the dairy cow sell-off.

"I don't have any way of estimating the long-range effect," he said.

The area could regain some of the economy lost, provided the remaining dairies produce more milk and the former dairymen continue farming.

Bill Boyd, vice president of the Washington-Wilkes Chamber of Commerce, said he thinks there may be some other alternatives to help the agricultural economy.

Cattle, he said, is one alternative. But for the feed companies, selling feed to cattle producers is not a very promising business. In this part of the country, cattle are raised primarily on pasture. Grass is generally available the year round.

Selling cattle happens once or twice a year, whereas the sale of milk was daily bringing in cash money immediately. With cattle, days and weeks go by without incoming money to help the economy.

Boyd estimated that the county will lose $1.8 million in gross income from milk sales.

The farm supply stores are also going to feel the effects. Burdette Mill & Gin, Inc., is one. Dairymen bought a lot of fertilizer, seed and equipment of various types at Burdette.

Henry Harris, an official of the farm supplier, said, "We might be able to recoup some of that loss."

The company offers tractors, but Harris said he hadn't sold a tractor to a full-time farmer since 1982. The only buyers have been weekend farmers.

Much of the area's milk has gone to the Pet Dairy plant that has been maintained here for a number of years. The plant processes milk that is distributed to consumers over a wide area of northern Georgia, including Atlanta.

Keith Churchwell of Pet said he thinks the situation may not be as critical as some think. He predicted that the remaining dairymen will increase production to take up the slack. The alternative, he said, is to import milk from other areas, maybe as far away as Wisconsin.

In Georgia as a whole, the buy-out will take 179 of the total 850 producers out of business.

Morgan County, the state's leading milk producer, will lose 11 of 76 dairies, or 14% of the operations and 14% of its dairy cows. Putnam County, the second largest dairy producer, will lose 12 of its 50 dairies, or 24%, through the program.

INSIDE WASHINGTON

(By Danialle Weaver)

Beef producers were hurt by the "tremendous" market impact of the dairy termination program, according to Willard R. Sparks, president of Sparks Commodities, Inc. What's more, Sparks told a House ag subcommittee hearing on the program last week, the worst may not yet be over.

Just before passage of the 1985 farm bill, the cattle industry was near the end of a liquidation phase that began in 1982, Sparks said. Total beef and dairy cow slaughter in 1985 was down 1.2 million head from 1984 levels, the rate of breeding stock slaughter had slowed and cattle inventories declined to 105.5 million head on Jan. 1, the smallest cattle inventory in more than 20 years, he said. In the meantime, cattle prices declined as they typically do during a liquidation phase and were starting to go up again in November and December.

"The positive market psychology that existed at the time was dealt a serious setback with the passage of the farm bill." Sparks said, "The market realized that heavy dairy cow slaughter would occur in 1986, and this renewed fears that a new round of beef cow liquidation could also occur due to depressed cattle prices," he said.

During the first three months of 1986, beef cow producers and nonprogram dairy producers stepped up culling rates "in an effort to beat the onslaught of the dairy program slaughter," Sparks said. "The (U.S. Department of Agriculture) was indicating to the industry that (it was) targeting approximately 900,000 head of dairy cattle to be liquidated in the buyout program.

"The announcement of the actual sign-up level in late March with more than 1.5 million head of cows, heifers and calves to be slaughtered put the cattle market into an immediate tailspin from already depressed price levels. The fact that fully two-thirds of these cattle would be slaughtered in the April-August 1986 time period was just too much for the cattle market to bear." Sparks said.

Although USDA's red meat purchases finally helped to shore up prices, USDA didn't make its first ground beef purchase until the week of April 13, Sparks said. The meat wasn't actually removed from the market until mid-May, he said. The removal of the meat from the market, as well as the announcement of the sale of 90,000 metric tons of steer, heifer and cow beef, firmed up prices, he said. Once USDA actually began buying beef for Brazil, prices noticeably improved, he said.

Although USDA has bought 327 million pounds of beef, very little of that amount has hit the market. "Where's this meat going to go?" Sparks asked. The cold storage statistics don't say where it is, he said. Only half of all the meat USDA purchased will go to the hotel and restaurant trade, which has fixed supply and demand, he said. The rest will be sold over the counter in grocery stores.

Any changes in the meat supply, however minor, will show up at the grocery meat counter, he said. This will result in retail price decreases, he said. Therefore, cattle markets can expect a second impact when the meat is distributed.

The dairy termination program probably will produce only a temporary slowdown in dairy herds and milk production, Sparks said. Besides the fact that dairy cow populations "rebounded sharply" after the 1984 dairy termination program, "costs of production are declining at a faster rate than dairy support prices," he said. Cheap feed ingredient prices and low interest rates relative to support prices will sustain profit margins for producers remaining in business, and further improvements in production efficiency "could ultimately return milk production to the level experienced prior to the dairy termination program," Sparks said.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I am most pleased to join with my fine Wyoming colleague, MALCOLM WALLOP, as an original cosponsor of this Senate resolution stating our strong and firm resolve to oppose any further dairy termination programs as we look forward to debating the reauthorization of Federal agriculture programs—the farm bill—later this year.

I represent a fine group of constituents—and a number of them are cattle ranchers—Wyoming is not known as the Cowboy State merely for the benefit of the tourists—they're out there and they work awfully hard. These cattlemen do not contribute to the Federal deficit. They do not receive direct Federal payments as a result of any farm legislation. The beef cattle industry exercises market discipline. It was truly unfortunate when Congress enacted the dairy termination program—whole herd dairy buy out—as part of the 1985 farm bill because that program introduced 1,015,046 head of dairy cattle onto an already weak market. It cut the value of the beef cattle inventory in the Nation by 5 billion bucks.

The dairy termination program was supposed to reduce milk production nationwide which, in turn, would reduce Government purchases which, over the long haul, was supposed to reduce Federal outlays. Well, it sure did not work. After production fell for the first year, it once again leveled off and then began to increase. Congress stepped in again to debate changes in the program. That just does not make any sense.

I regret that Congress seems to have a sad history of providing agriculture with short-term benefits that too often turn into real long-term liabilities. It wasn't just beef cattle producers that were injured by that ill-advised dairy termination program. Dairymen who chose to stay in business paid 38 percent of the cost of that program through an assessment of 40 cents per hundredweight of the milk they produced. In Wyoming 24 dairymen chose to go out of business through this program—and collected 3.146 million smacks. That is not right. Today Wyoming has only one fresh milk processing facility in the State—and its milk is provided by only 13 dairymen. I don't believe they want to see another dairy termination program either.

We discussed this issue on the floor of the Senate back in 1986 and I trust we won't need to fight this battle over again this year. In 1986 we also amended the farm bill because of the nonprogram crops provisions—those crops that do not qualify for Federal subsidies. I am now ever more concerned that Federal agriculture policies which create negative effects on free market commodities may well force our nonsubsidized agriculture to say, "We, too, want some of that action—we've been quite long enough."

That would be really stepping backward—not forward. It surely makes no sense at all as we are attempting to negotiate an end to market-distorting agriculture subsidies worldwide through the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations. We enact budget resolutions each year calling for reductions in agriculture spending. We must stay the course toward a balanced Federal budget or everyone in this society—and future generations will pay a dear price.

Farmers and ranchers don't want runaway Federal deficits or a budget-busting farm bill. They want a bill that will help to restore profitability to farms and ranches by expanding markets, phasing down Government purchases and bringing supply into balance with demand. I trust we actually will be able to meet those goals in this year's farm bill debate.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

BYRD (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1540

Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BOREN, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 4404) making dire emergency supplemental appropriations for disaster assistance, food stamps, unemployment compensation administration, and other urgent needs, and transfers, and reducing funds budgeted for military spending for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, as follows:

At the end of title III of the bill, add the following new section:

COMMERCIAL ASPECTS OF UNITED STATES FOREIGN ASSISTANCE

SEC. . (a) The Secretary of Commerce, after consulting with the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of State, and appropriate United States business organizations, shall conduct a study which examines and explores the foreign assistance programs currently engaged in by the United States through the Agency for International Development and other appropriate departments and agencies of the United States government and explores mechanisms by which the international economic competitiveness of the United States may be enhanced through such programs. In undertaking this study, the Secretary shall—

(1) examine the foreign assistance programs of Japan, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and such other international aid donors as the Secretary may designate, for the purpose of determining what mechanisms are in use to tie foreign assistance to the industrial and commercial interests of the donor nations, in particular, the programs currently being engaged in and planned by such countries in the East European countries of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary; and

(2) determine, as far as possible, for each of fiscal years 1989 and 1990, and requested for fiscal year 1991, the dollar amounts and percentages of current United States programs which include United States business investment, exports, or other business-related activities, and shall compare that assessment with a similar assessment made for each of the other international aid donors examined by this study, on a region-by region basis, with particular attention paid to the comparable efforts in the East European countries referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) Not later than September 1, 1990, the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and transmit to the Committees on Foreign Relations and Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs and Appropriations of the House of Representatives a report setting forth the findings of the study conducted under subsection (a).

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 1541

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4404, supra; as follows:

On page 25, line 21, add before the period the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds provided for under this subsection shall be made available to the government of Nicaragua as long as any person who was a member of the Directorate of the Sandinista National Liberation Front on February 25, 1990 holds any non-elected civilian or military post in the government of Nicaragua".

ADAMS AMENDMENT NO. 1542

Mr. ADAMS proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4404, supra, as follows:

(1) Heading 9902.08.07 (relating to fresh cantaloupes).

(2) Heading 9902.29.04 (relating to p-toluenesulfonyl chloride).

(3) Heading 9902.29.06 (relating to dicofol).

(4) Heading 9902.29.10 (relating to 6-hydroxy-2 naphthalenesulfonic acid and its sodium, potassium, and ammonium salts).

(5) Heading 9902.29.11 (relating to triethylene glycol dichloride).

(6) Heading 9902.29.13 (relating to 2,6-dichlorobenzaldehyde).

(7) Heading 9902.29.14 (relating to dinocap).

(8) Heading 9902.29.21 (relating to m-hydroxybenzoic acid).

(9) Heading 9902.29.22 (relating to d-6-methoxy-a-methyl-2-naphthaleneacetic acid and its sodium salt).

(10) Heading 9902.29.23 (relating to triphenyl phosphate).

(11) Heading 9902.29.24 (relating to 3-amino-3-methyl-1-butyne).

(12) Heading 9902.29.28 (relating to α,α,α,-trifluoro-o-toluidine).

(13) Heading 9902.29.30 (relating to 8-amino-1-naphthalenesulfonic acid and its salts).

(14) Heading 9902.29.31 (relating to 5-amino-2-(p-aminoanilino)benzenesulfonic acid).

(15) Heading 9902.29.33 (relating to 1-amino-8-hydroxy-3,6-naphthalenedisulfonic acid; and 4-amino-5-hydroxy-2,7-naphthalenedisulfonic acid, monosodium salt (H acid, monosodium salt)).

(16) Heading 9902.29.35 (relating to 6-amino-4-hydroxy-2-naphthalenesulfonic acid (gamma acid)).

(17) Heading 9902.29.38 (relating to 3,3'-dimethoxybenzidine (o-dianisidine) and its dihydrochloride).

(18) Heading 9902.29.40 (relating to 2-amino-5-nitrophenol).

(19) Heading 9902.29.43 (relating to 1-amino-2,4-dibromoanthraquinone).

(20) Heading 9902.29.44 (relating to 1-amino-4-bromo-2-anthraquinonesulfonic acid (bromamine acid) and its sodium salt).

(21) Heading 9902.29.47 (relating to 4-methoxyaniline-2-sulfonic acid).

(22) Heading 9902.29.49 (relating to benzethonium chloride).

(23) Heading 9902.29.51 (relating to N-(7-hydroxy-1-naphthyl)acetamide).

(24) Heading 9902.29.57 (relating to N,N-bis(2-cyanoethyl)aniline).

(25) Heading 9902.29.59 (relating to 2,2-bis(4-cyanatophenyl)propane).

(26) Heading 9902.29.60 (relating to triallate).

(27) Heading 9902.29.62 (relating to paraldehyde).

(28) Heading 9902.29.63 (relating to aminomethylphenylpyrazole).

(29) Heading 9902.29.64 (relating to amino-J-pyrazolone; methylphenylpyrazolone).

(30) Heading 9902.29.66 (relating to m-sulfamino-pyrazolone (m-sulfamidophenylmethylpyrazolone).

(31) Heading 9902.29.67 (relating to 3-methyl-1-(p-tolyl)-2-pyrazolin-5-one (p-tolyl methyl pyrazolone)).

(32) Heading 9902.29.69 (relating to 3-methyl-5-pyrazolone).

(33) Heading 9902.29.71 (relating to barbituric acid).

(34) Heading 9902.29.74 (relating to terfenadone).

(35) Heading 9902.29.76 (relating to 2-n-octyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one and on mixtures of 2-n-octyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one and application adjuvants).

(36) Heading 9902.29.79 (relating to 2-amino-N-ethylbenzenesulfonanilide).

(37) Heading 9902.30.04 (relating to nicotine resin complex).

(38) Heading 9902.32.04 (relating to methylene blue).

(39) Heading 9902.36.06 (relating to metaldehyde).

(40) Heading 9902.38.06 (relating to mixtures of dinocap and application adjuvants).
(41) Heading 9902.38.07 (relating to mixtures of mancozeb and dinocap).
(42) Heading 9902.38.08 (relating to mixtures of maneb, zineb, mancozeb, and metiram).
(43) Heading 9902.38.10 (relating to mixtures of 5-chloro-2-methyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one, 2-methyl-4-isothiazolin-3-one, magnesium chloride, and stabilizers).
